The protective aspects also included blessing oil or holy water sprinkled into baptismal fonts to exorcists the evil water spirits, monstrous underwater creatures, & demons of the deep abyss, that the font water represented, in connection with Christ’s descent into the watery-abyss. These themes were carried over into art works too, as in these ritualistic types, & early Christians’ explanations of them, as in their writings on the mysteries to explain the meanings of those types of protective & cleansing themes. Thus, if one wanted to add more protection & fortification to their spiritual armor, they had to stay true to their vows by continually, (note the garment type), taking off (blackness), the evil sinful traits of the dark side. While putting on, like garments, the Christ like traits of love, kindness, humility, innocents, purity (whiteness), & so forth. Thus, before the protective garments, or baptismal robes, that the often naked candidates would be clothed in, there was the protective anointing(s).³²¹¹

In some cases, there was a post-baptismal unction, or the anointing of the catechumens with oil or ointment, preceded by the vesting in white robes. In other areas of early Christendom, the neophytes procession from the font to the holy table was accompanied by the singing of Psalm 23, in the Milanese rite, & possibly in that of Jerusalem. The part, ‘thou has anointed my head with oil’ was understood of the mystical chrism. Fourth & fifth century inscriptions mention the “vestimenta” at the cathedral baptistry at Ravenna, & in other areas, the unction, confirmation in baptismal settings related to graves, with epitaphs in memory of the dead. “At Tolentino a sarcophagus bears a depiction of a couple, Catervius and Severina, quos dei sacerdos Probianus lavit et unxit – whom Probianus, the priest of God, washed and anointed.”³²¹²

Furthermore, during the “sacral anointing,” Christian Kings promised to protect churches “under the obligations contained in the office or ministerium bestowed on him by God to act as His ‘vicar on earth.’”³²¹³ “Christmas and Easter were favourite coronation days; as commemorations of the Lord’s Advent and the promise of salvation, they were appropriate for the beginning of a reign—for the advent of a new king.”³²¹⁴

“Before baptism, the candidate was anointed with oil which was supposed to have the power to expel the evil spirit from the soul. The water in the font was consecrated by pouring upon it some oil in the form of a cross, and by this ceremony it was supposed to be changed in its very nature and become a regenerating force. This change was called “trans-ementation.” Baptism in this way paganized. It became a ceremony of initiation in mysterious rites, and not the entrance into the kingdom of God.”³²¹⁵ But, instead it was still, in later centuries, a ritualistic type of the descent into hell, being rituals that had protective themes, the protective anointing against the devil & evil spirits often commanded to depart several times. So also the protective garment, or white linen cloth, later placed on the head of anointed & sprinkled baptized infants, were later reminders of the earlier washings, anointings & white garments of earlier Christian mysteries.³²¹⁶

Eusebius wrote that the anointing of the prophets made them types of Christ, or Christs.³²¹⁷ Cyril of Jerusalem, (318–386): “Being therefore made partakers of Christ, ye are properly called Christs, and of you God said, Touch not My Christs, or anointed (Heb. 3:14; Ps. 105:15). Now ye were made Christs, by receiving the emblem of the Holy Ghost; and all things were in a figure wrought in you, because ye are figures of Christ.” He goes on to say that the anointing was made on the forehead, ears, nostrils, and breast. “Then on your breast; that having put on the breastplate of righteousness, ye may stand against the wiles of the devil. For as Christ after His baptism, and the descent of the Holy Ghost, went forth and vanquished the adversary, so likewise, having, after Holy Baptism and the Mystical Chrism, put on the whole armour of the Holy Ghost, do ye stand against the power of the enemy, and vanquish it, saying, I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me.” (Phil. 4:13).³²¹⁸

In Cyril of Jerusalem’s Catechetical Lectures, Archbishop of Jerusalem, on the early Christian mysteries, tells how they entered the vestibule (proaulion) of the baptistery, then face westward to renounce Satan and all his works. Facing east, the place of light, they declare their beliefs in the Trinity & one baptism. Entering the next chamber, the inner one of the baptistery, they “put off their clothes, and were anointed with oil “from the hairs of your head to your feet.” (Did they pass through a veil, with the double meaning, that of privacy, having stripped off their clothing, like putting off the old life of sin? But also, was there a veil symbolic of entering into another realm of existence, when they entered the inner chamber?) “The oil had been exorcised and was “a charm to drive away every trace of hostile influence.” They then go into the pool, (kolumbethra), asked their belief in the Father, Son & Holy Ghost. Three immersions followed, & they were anointed again on their forehead, ears, nostrils, & breast. Having been counted worthy of the holy Chrism, they were called Christians. Clothed in white garments, they proceeded to receive the Eucharist.³²¹⁹

Cyril of Jerusalem tells of those who had entered the inner chamber where they removed their clothing, were anointed, and then baptized or “washed.” Being anointed a second time on different senses, forehead, ears, nose, breast, to symbolize a protective anointing that was that they would be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. The anointing on the forehead or brow to free them from the shame of Adam, when he fell. And that they may perceive clearly the glory of the Lord. The anointing on the ears was that they might hear the mysteries of God. On the nose, that they may say: 'We are the sweet odor of Christ to God among the saved.' On breast, that they may be clothed in a protective breast-plate of righteousness, & may stand against the wiles of the devil, countering his evil thoughts with good ones.

During the Middle Ages, the anointing on different senses, seems to still be hinted to in inscriptions on later baptismal fonts, such as at St. Margaret's Ipswich" 'SAL ET SALIVA' referencing the salt placed in the mouth and the spittle put on the ears & lips. Both are part of the Ordo ad Faciendum Catechumenum at the church door.³²²⁰

Perhaps some Christians during these later centuries may have also thought of last rites as a sort of protection against the devil and his demons, just as in the earlier rites of anointing before baptism, they were anointed before descending down into the font, or waters of baptism, as if, in a symbolical and ritualistic way, they were about to die and descend into hades, limbo, etc., just as Christ did to do battle with the devil and his demons.

Jeffrey Burton Russell, points out that baptism, was considered in some branches of Christendom, to be a type of the descent of Christ into the under world, & that the anointing was a seal against the further assaults by the Prince of Darkness. Hence, they were "anointed with holy oil as a seal against further assaults by the Prince of Darkness. In the central act of baptism, the descent into water symbolized descent into the underworld of death, and emergence from the water symbolized rebirth and resurrection. Baptism, the culmination of the individual's freedom from Satan, had powers to cure illness of body and mind as well as corruption of soul." For in some cases, the "priest blew into the candidate's face to express contempt for the demons and drive them away. The priest also touched the catechumen's ears with spittle in imitation of Jesus' healing. He marked the sign of the cross on the candidate's brow to keep demons away. During the Easter vigil, the catechumen would face the west, the region of darkness and death, and make a formal threefold renunciation of Satan. Then he turned toward the east, the direction of light and resurrection, and formally transferred his allegiance to Christ. He was anointed with holy oil as a seal against further assaults by the Prince of Darkness. In the central act of baptism, the descent into water symbolized descent into the underworld of death, & emergence from the water symbolized rebirth & resurrection. Baptism, the culmination of the individual's freedom from Satan, had powers to cure illness of body and mind as well as corruption of soul."³²²¹

The battle themes of anointing & baptism continued on during the Romanesque period, 900–1200, for "the spiritual life of the Christian was seen as a struggle with the monstrous powers of evil. It was necessary for the soul to be armed by baptism; to enlist the power of Christ and his warrior Saint Michael in the unending struggle with the Devil."³²²²

Powel Mills Dawley wrote that candidates for baptism in the early Church would be anointed before they went down into the font. Thus, they "received the first anointing with oil." Then, after stepping down into the font, they were asked three questions & immersed into the water or the water of Baptism was poured upon them. Upon coming up from the water they were anointed again.³²²³

Tertullian, 145–220, wrote about washings and anointings, and the laying on of hands to receive the Holy Ghost: "The flesh indeed is washed that the soul may be cleansed; the flesh is anointed that the soul may be consecrated; the flesh is signed [with the cross] that the soul too may be fortified; the flesh is shadowed by the imposition of hands that the soul also may be enlightened by the Spirit. . . ."³²²⁴ He also notes that oil was also used in healing rituals too, and thus this miracle was noted still happening during his time, (Ad Scapulam, c. iv). Also, "the flesh is washed [baptism] in order that the soul may be cleansed; the flesh is anointed [unction] that the soul may be consecrated; the flesh is signed [probably with the sign of the cross] that the soul too may be fortified; the flesh is shadowed with the laying on of hands [confirmation] that the soul also may be illuminated by the Spirit; the flesh feeds upon the body and blood of Christ [the Eucharist] that the soul likewise may fatten on God." (De Res. Carnis, 8).³²²⁵

Mani [born about 216 A.D.], became the founder of a Christian sect known as the Mandeans. About 250-300 A.D., a number of Mandaean writings were composed, and which made references to hymns that included anointing in their versions of the early Christian mysteries, considered heretical by other early Christians.³²²⁶

Gregory of Nyssa, 330–386, that in the mysteries, on aspect of it was how: "...Thou didst sprinkle us with clean water, and cleanse us from our filthiness."³²²⁷

St. Ambrose, 340–387, wrote that one aspect of the early Christian mysteries, included anointing.³²²⁸

Jerome also wrote concerning the washing & anointing ritual, with the putting on of ritualistic garment, (Ad Fabiolam, Ep. cxxvii).

Later Anointing Rite in the Orthodox Church, as explained by Archimandrite Ephrem's presentation about the Holy Oil in the Orthodox Church. Father Ephrem: "The one to be baptized is brought forward. The Priest takes some of the oil and makes the sign of the Cross on the forehead, breast and back of the candidate, saying: The servant of God, N., is anointed with the oil of gladness, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit. Amen. As he signs their breast and back he says: For healing of soul and body. On the ears: For the hearing of faith. On the feet: For your feet to walk. On the hands: Your hands made me and fashioned me. And when the whole body has been anointed the Priest baptizes the person, holding them upright and facing East, as he says: The servant of God N. is baptized, in the name of the Father. Amen. And of the Son. Amen. And of the Holy Spirit. Amen. At each invocation the Priest immerses them and raises them again [three-fold immersion]."³²²⁹

Anointing & Coronation Ceremonies of the Ascents to the Thrones of Later Christian Kings & Queens: Later versions of washings & anointings were preserved to a certain extent in the anointing & coronation ceremonies done by the clergy, as princes & princesses, or other nobles & the elites ascended to become Kings or Queens. Also, during the Middle Ages, Popes & Clergy leaders competed with each other, & with Emperors, Kings & Queens as to whom would be anointed & invested with political-religious powerful positions in the Churches. Sometimes these positions were sold off to nobles & rich powerful people, this was called Simony, (after Simon in Acts chapter 8, tried to buy priesthood powers from Peter).³²³⁰

The coronation rites used in the hallowing of kings had political religious aspects to investing the person as "...God's anointed, endowed by God with powers which combined important aspects of the powers of bishops and priests, as well as the sanctions of secular rule. He was anointed with the holy oil used in the consecration of priests; he was invested with the ring and staff conferred on bishops, with the power to destroy heresies and to unite his subjects in the Catholic faith..."³²³¹

482–511, King Clovis, (Chlogwig), an art work shows a dove, symbolic of God's approval of his baptism, & that also brings a container of the ceremonial oil that will be used in this baptismal rite witnessed by priests & nobles.³²³²

610-630, on a Byzantine silver dish, excavated on the island of Cyprus, there is a depiction of the anointing of David by Samuel, who holds a horn filled with oil over David's head. Thus, David becomes an anointed King.³²³³ "The Byzantine emperor was referred to as 'anointed of the Lord' and 'living icon of Christ'. While the coronation ritual acclaimed him as 'crowned by God' and 'crowned by Christ'." ³²³⁴

7th or 8th centuries, Baptism in the Lateran Church of Rome, included, amongst other aspects, the post-baptism anointing on the person's head.³²³⁵

753–754, Pope Stephen journeys to Gaul, Frankish kingdom, to anoint King Pepin I.³²³⁶

787, Offa son, Ecgrifhth was anointed king, a rite of royal unction-imitated from the Franks.³²³⁷ In Europe, at the synod held at Chelsea, 787, the Anglo-Saxon king had been called Christus Domini, & a declaration was issued that said: 'Whosoever resists the royal power is resisting the ordinances of God' and incurring eternal damnation. This new coronation ceremony, that added the solemn rite of unction, raised the anointed King to ranks above the ordinary people. "The anointing of the king with the sacred oil, with which (in the words of the coronation order) only 'priests and kings and prophets and martyrs' were anointed, raised him out of the ranks of ordinary people, and meant that 'even in the weakest of hands the royal power was upheld by a religious sanction against all other powers in the state'. It also meant, in the eyes of the churchmen of that date, that he had a right to direct and interfere in church affairs, to appoint bishops and abbots, and to expect their close co-operation in the work of government. The bishops were leaders not only in the king's council but also in the shires, where they represented royal interests and helped to enforce the king's will." ³²³⁸

9th–10th century coronation ceremonies of the county of Anjou, political theory, blended with later Christian anointing ceremonies, was enshrined in the coronation rites used in the hallowing of kings. The kings were considered God's anointed, endowed by God with powers which combined important aspects of bishops & priests, & sanctions of secular rule. "He was anointed with the holy oil used in the consecration of priests; he was invested with the ring and staff conferred on bishops, with the power to destroy heresies and to unite his subjects in the Catholic faith...." ³²³⁹ The kings also received a sword & sceptre, with words that gave them the highest authority, it was believed, to wield to their use, even for violence, as Vicars of Christ. Defender of the faith & church against heretics, & any who might be interpreted as a threats to the kingdom. Deification themes were also preserved in these coronation ceremonies too, with the Kings & Priests considered deified, & sanctified.³²⁴⁰

844, 850, Lothar's son, Louis II, was anointed twice & three times crowned (844, 850 & 872), by the Pope & these repeated acts seem to have established the precedent that the pope alone had the right to carry out the consecration of the emperor.³²⁴¹

920-30, in the Bible of Leo the Patrician, made at Constantinople, is a depiction of The Anointing of David, for over his head is held a horn filled with anointing substance.³²⁴²

962, Duke Otto of Saxony was anointed emperor et augustus by the pope John XII.³²⁴³ These anointing rituals of the Christian kings, preserved in part, the anointing rituals of the mystery dramas. The anointing of the kings was also called "The coronation" rite, or the "Unction with a special holy chrism."³²⁴⁴ This is often depicted in early to later Christian art works. One example of this is of Charles V.³²⁴⁵

973, in the days of St Dunstan, the rite of royal coronation and consecration was used at the coronation of Edgar.³²⁴⁶

936–1075, like other Christian kings, such as in France and Anglo-Saxon England, the early Germans, considered their "ecclesiastical anointment with holy oil upon coronation," to have acquired a sacral or sacred nature. Hence, their acts of anointment raises the king above other laymen, making him the vicar of Christ on earth, anointed of God. Such acts were portrayed in Ottonian and Salian art, architecture and liturgical dramas and ceremonies.³²⁴⁷

These anointing rituals of the Christian kings, preserved in part, the anointing rituals of the mystery dramas. The anointing of the kings was also called "The coronation" rite, or the "Unction with a special holy chrism".³²⁴⁸ This is often depicted in early to later Christian art works. One example of this is of Charles V.³²⁴⁹

Late 11th century unknown writer: 'Anonymous of York,' wrote, "Kings and Priests have a common unction of holy oil, a common spirit of sanctification, a common quality of benediction...." The writer also connects the anointing ritual with deification, as early Christian Fathers did too. But, as to what aspects of the doctrine still remained in York, or other places, at Rouen, where this observation was written. By this later time, it ought to be explored further as to what aspects of the earlier Christian connections with anointing & deification still remained. At any rate, the unction, or oil anointing was part of the deification process, for "Both Kings and Priests are deified and sanctified by the grace of unction and by the consecration of the benediction..." ³²⁵⁰

1204, Baldwin of Flanders, was anointed & crowned emperor in Constantinople. His chest "bare he is anointed." ³²⁵¹

1250--1285, in Gothic manuscripts, coronation ceremonies are depicted in which the head of kings are anointed.³²⁵²

Numerous art works show an animals horn that holds the oil for anointing, an example is in a depiction of Samuel anointing the forehead of David, (Breviary of Martin d'Aragon, 14th cent., Biliothèque Nationale de France).³²⁵³

1422–61, Charles VII, also called "the dauphin," as a young ruler, was held by villainous advisors at the castle Chinon in Touraine, & according to French tradition, he couldn't officially become king until he should be consecrated with the sacred chrism, anointing, in the cathedral of Reims, which was being held by the hostile Burgundians.³²⁵⁴ A young female farmer, Jacques d'Arc, Joan of Arc, from the Lorraine village of Domremy, near Nancy, Bar-le-Duc, & Chaumont, she rose to fame through claims of visions of saints & hearing voices. The voices told her that she must make the dauphin or Charles VII the lawful king by having him anointed in Reims, in accordance with French custom. Thus, eventually, on July 17, 1429, the dauphin was consecrated.³²⁵⁵

1461–83, France kingdom, King Louis XI, on a table beside his bed was the 'Saint Ampoule,' the "vase in which the holy oil for coronation was kept, and which had never left Reims before. According to Commynes, the king wanted to try its miraculous virtue by having his whole body anointed." ³²⁵⁶

Niccolò Alunno, 1430–1502, an Italian painter, also known as Niccolò di Liberatore, and as Niccolò da Foligno, depicted the Coronation of the Virgin, with Saints in 1466, and the Virgin and Child Enthroned, 1482.

15th century A.D., on a box said to contain the mortal remains of a martyred saint, the Reliquary of St. Laurent,

Musee des Beaux-Arts, Moulins. The art works depict an angel anointing the wounds of the body of the saint.³²⁵⁷

Washings & Anointings, & Baptisms Reduced to Infant Baptism as Cleansing or Washing Away of Original Guilt of Adam: In the earliest church, Baptism had many types, as noted, such as how immersions were likened unto Christ's descent, burial, & resurrection. A type of washing & cleansing away of sins to renew the person back to their innocence, like unto the innocence of a new born child. However, as time went by, later versions of these rites included a blend of heretical teachings that became accepted & even enforced by the theocracies that arose during the Middle Ages & later Church councils. Thus, the false "doctrines" crept in that claimed that every human born, "inherited" Adam's sins, called "original sins." This meant that infants weren't born innocent, but were tainted by "original sins," that thus needed to be washed away in order for them to enter into heaven. Consequently, the later Christians theocracy insisted & commanded that parents shouldn't wait too long after their children were born, to have them baptized, just in case something happened to cause the infants to die, un-baptized. As these "doctrines" became legendized in later centuries, & as baptisms for the dead faded out of the later Christian churches; baptismal prayers for un-baptized infant water nymphs began to be the answers to helping save infants who had died un-baptized. During different times, like Whitsuntide, or Whitesunday - Easter, these water-spirit nymphs like creatures, lore said, could be heard near water, streams, & lakes, for they'd giggle, or mournfully cry out, & upon hearing them, one could perform a sort of baptism for the dead prayer, for these un-baptized dead babies's spirits in order to free them to ascend to heaven.³²⁵⁸

In the early centuries, changes & compromises were made that allowed for different modes of baptism. Thus as baptisms by immersions were changed, or dropped & reduced to washings & anointings, or just sprinkling & pouring modes of baptism; so also were the baptismal robes reduced in size to a bib like white cloths, as a reminder of the earlier white baptismal robes of later Whitsundays. These changes in the modes of baptism, were rejected & argued against by some early church fathers, while others accepted them, went along with them, but not without protest, while others expounded upon & defended the changes as acceptable, though not entirely valid. For examples: Clement of Alexandria claimed that "original guilt" was a Gnostic heretical doctrine, & thus argued against it. While Tertullian did preach that at the birth of the body & soul at the same time, (no pre-existence of the soul), the soul is tainted, but he didn't preach "original guilt," but allowed & approved infant baptism. Origen's Commentary on Romans, comments on original guilt, but he was of the opinion that infants would not be condemned because of it. Cyprian connected the practice of infant baptism with the regeneration of original guilt, middle of third century. While later, Augustine taught that though infants are not held bound by any sins of their own, it was the guilt of original sin that infant baptism heals them of.³²⁵⁹

Infant baptism & anointing of infants often nude, (like unto the earlier nude adult catechumens), had some challenges for those taking part in the sacramental mystery. Infants, unlike adults, haven't learned to control letting out their dung, thus, there are cases when it has ended up "defiling" or "polluting" the baptismal waters. That baby dung, or any type of dung, was seen as defiling people, holy places, or in this case the holy baptismal waters, is probably derived from the many things that were considered to be symbolic of spiritual defilement, where something that had been washed clean, became dirty again, (2 Peter 2:17-22, returning to a sinful life is like the sow that was washed, purified, but returns to wallowing in the mire).³²⁶⁰

Thus, fonts were sometimes designed to try to deal with these possible issues, when submersions of infants were still being practiced. When other modes of baptism became acceptable in the minds of later Christians, pouring of the holy water & anointing with oil was done. A 15th century manual & another source from the inventory of St. Nicholas, Bristol, c. 1410, tells of the washing & anointing, how that precautions were to be made by the godparents in how to hold the child during the anointing. How they were to wash their hands before leaving, lest any holy chrism oil should remain on them from having dripped down onto their hands while holding the child.³²⁶¹

More on anointings in later Christian Coronation Ceremonies: During 15th century Spain, the coronation ceremonies in selecting Christian Kings & the Popes, they understood included anointing & the investing them with power, symbolic of them putting on royal & cleric robes.³²⁶²

In the Eastern Orthodox churches, baptism consisted of "...threefold immersion in water and is followed by the sacrament of chrismation, the anointing of the baptized person (usually an infant) with consecrated oil. After baptism, all worthy members (including small children) are admitted to communion."³²⁶³

In later centuries, when the mysteries had been legendized further, changed & fragmented, according to the different areas different sects of Christianity spread to: Washings & anointings in baptism, that included immersions, were reduced, in some areas, to just baptismal sprinklings & pouring. Other modes were the touching of the "holy water" on the forehead of infants, rather than older candidates, that understood what was going on. In some cases, the changes were justified in the minds of early to later Christians, because some areas lacked sufficient amounts of water required for immersions. Thus, this made it difficult to perform immersions. In other cases, emergency-baptism of the dying, or of those already dead, was adopted as "valid" baptisms by pouring or sprinkling. While in other cases, the age of the one being baptized was changed to include infants, while other areas rejected infant baptisms. It could also be asked if the anointing & washing, before the immersion(s), & in some cases, the post immersion(s) 2nd anointing, could have been reduced in some areas of historic Christendom, to just one sprinkling?³²⁶⁴

Washings & Anointings In Later Fragmented Versions of Baptisms For the Dead: As Baptisms for the Dead faded off into later legends, customs, & ceremonial funeral rites, masses & liturgical rites for the dead, so also did the different modes of baptism reduced to sprinklings, & or anointings, also faded out & changed. Some possible examples: "In Brittany, blessing with holy water figuratively regenerates the dead and symbolically grants them immortality." In later centuries, & in some cases, masses for the dead included the sprinkling of water on the corpse, at the wake and in the cemetery, this was symbolically linked to the conception of regeneration and immortality; thus a hymn sung before the blessing of the corpse seems to have fragments of washings and anointings in it, for it says this about the sprinkling of water on the coffin: "The water that gave you life will cleanse your vision, And your eyes will see the salvation of God." It's also written that: "Here an explicit parallel is drawn between the holy water used to bless the coffin at the funeral and the water of baptism, without which, according to traditional doctrine, salvation is not possible."³²⁶⁵ Other examples of faded versions of washings & anointings in rites for the dead, are seen in numerous art works that show angels pouring, or sprinkling drops onto the heads of those souls in the infernal regions, as the rites are being performed by Priests.³²⁶⁶

Washings, Anointings & White Clothes, Fraternalized in Knighthood Orders: To keep these militant Orders under their control, or at least as much as they could through theocracy political policies, rules, & religious laws, that sometimes competed with the decrees of Christian Emperors & Kings. The Clergy caused their Christian soldiers, nobles, regular knights & Knighted Princes to pass through ceremonies which included political-religious rites of ascension to the thrones. Moreover, before a man would enter into an Order, he would fast, pray, and attend masses, make vows or oaths to protect the Church by fighting for his Lord and King. His Lord and King were considered to be God's "chosen anointed one," this is why some art works show Christ, or the hand of God, handing down the crown to the King. Or a hand holding a crown, or crowning them. Thus, as God's representative on the earth, it was believed that they had the divine right to rule. (Thus, the concepts of deification were preserved, to a certain extent, in these later anointing-coronation rituals). During the arming ceremony of a new Knight, he is clothed in new garments after a ritualistic bath. When a prince ascends to the throne, there is a coronation ceremony like unto the early Christian anointing rites. Barons, Lords, Earls and Knights would take part in rites of passage hand grips and tokens, and would perform oaths or vows to be loyal to the King. These rites were performed in almost each level in the political-religious pyramid. Thus, in times of wars, the Kings calls on his Barons-Lords or Earls to gather their armies of Knights to fight off invaders, or settle conflicts and inner disputes through single combats between Campions.³²⁶⁷

When a man came of age and it was time for him to become a knight, there was a solemn religious ceremony. The whole night before it, the young squire spent the time alone praying & meditating in church, on his knees before the altar on which lay his sword, his shield, and his lance. By the next morning, he took a bath, as a sort of washing ritual. Then he was clad in fresh new garments, like the early Christian mysteries, of taking off old clothing & putting on new garments. In the later cases with squires advancing to Knighthood, this was symbolic that he was to begin a new life. This was like unto how the earlier Christians would leave their old life of sin, for a new life in Christ, as an anointed-Christ. The squire would be given first a snow-white tunic, the symbol of purity, this was like the white garments or robes earlier Christians were clothed in. The squire then was clothed in a red robe, symbolic of the blood he might be called upon to shed in defense of the oppressed; and over this a black garment, representing the mystery of death. He attended mass and listened to a sermon on his new life and duties. He gave his sword to a priest, who laid it upon the altar and blessed it. He made solemn vows to defend the Church, to be true to the king, & help women in distress, for every knight must be a lover of Christ and a defender of the Church. Thus, his weapons must be consecrated to God's cause. Then the knight of the highest rank came forward to confer upon him the order of knighthood. The young squire knelt before him with clasped hands, and solemnly vowed to uphold religion and chivalry. The lord buckled on the squire's sword, which was to be wielded for his own protection, as the mail or protective metal garment also protected him. This was like the protective garments that protected souls during their ascension, from the fiery darts of demons, shot at them. In some cases, golden spurs and his armor were presented to the squire, then, tapping him lightly on the shoulders with his sword, the lord pronounced over him the solemn words: "In the name of God, of St. Michael, and of St. George, I dub thee knight. Be valiant, fearless, and loyal." And the young man rose a knight.³²⁶⁸

"Around the year 1200 the church took over the dubbing of the knight and imposed its ritual and obligations on the ceremony, making it almost a sacrament. The candidate took a symbolic bath, donned clean white clothes and a red robe, and stood or knelt for ten hours in nightlong silence before the altar, on which his weapons and armor lay. At dawn mass was said in front of an audience of knights and ladies. His sponsors presented him to his feudal lord and gave him his arms, with a prayer and a blessing said over each piece of equipment."³²⁶⁹ There were also oaths or vows taken, he was smacked on the neck or cheek by an Elder Knight & was commissioned to defend & protect the church against its enemies, & to defend & help widows, orphans, the poor, & pursue evil doers.

First half of the 14th century, the connection of battle themes in later versions of washings, anointings & baptismal font battle imagery, could be part of why a sword was placed in the hand of a little one at a baptismal font. Louis of Orléans had a statue of Guesclin, as the tenth of the preux worthies, a sort of gallery of heroism in chivalry, erected in the great hall of the castle of Coucy. "His special reason for honouring the constable's memory was the fact that the latter had held him at the baptismal font and put a sword into his little hand."³²⁷⁰

Fourteenth and Fifteenth centuries of orders of chivalry and vows included ceremonial baths, said to be a blend of paganism Christianized, or Christian aspects paganized: "The more elaborate from of these rites shows a most curious blending of Christian and heathen elements: the shaving, the bath, and the vigil of arms undoubtedly go back to pre-Christian times. Those who had gone through these ceremonies were called Knights of the Bath, in distinction from those who were knighted by the simple accolade. The term afterwards gave rise to the legend of a special Order of the Bath instituted by Henry IV, and thus to establishment of the real one by George I."³²⁷¹

"Extreme Unction" was often given to those who were believed to be facing death, thus, the dying person would be anointed on the eyes, mouth, nose, ears, hands and feet.³²⁷²

1972, after the Catholic liturgy was modified, extreme unction was renamed the anointing of the sick, or the "onction des malades."³²⁷³

PROTECTIVE SKINS OR GARMENTS & COLOR SYMBOLISM

What happens to ritualistic garments, as types of the journey of the soul: In many ancient ritualistic mysteries, especially in early to later Christianity; what happens to the ritualistic garments are types of what happens to the spirit, body, & resurrected persons in the journey of the soul through the different realms of existences. The garment is pure & white in the pre-existence, like the pre-mortal spirit, if it didn't fall, like the fallen angels did. The garment becomes dirty, filthy with spots of sins, in the pre-mortal existence, if that spirit was amongst those angels that sinned & made war in heaven & fell, where it becomes blackened. The garment becomes stained, spotted, blackened & bloody by the sins of mortal life. It thus needs to be cleaned, washed, or set aside as filthy rags, old clothing, symbolic of the "old man of sin" being set aside for new clothing. In being thus naked, the new clothing is put on, symbolic of putting on righteousness, putting on Christ like traits. New clothing is as a type of resurrection too. What happened to the clothing is a type of what happens to the resurrected, being resurrected to different degrees of glory & brightness. The soul descends into the waters of baptism, as a type of Christ's descent into hell, & like a refiner's fire is purified by the challenges of overcoming & gaining victory over the enemies of righteousness. Thus, like Christ, the soul helps defeat the forces of darkness, like Christ does in the descent into hell,³²⁷⁴ and rises up in the resurrection to be clothed in a glorified garment, a type of the soul being clothed in a glorified, deified body. The naked soul rises out of the underworld, ascends towards paradise or heaven, & is clothed in a protective body that can no longer suffer death. Just like ascending souls are wrapped in protective cloths, blankets, robes or garments, as part of the heavenly coronation ceremonies. Like the garment, the soul, upon being cleansed of all sins, standing bright before God's judgment; the soul is anointed, clothed in royal robes, crowned, enthroned, glorified & deified as a goddess or god. In being deified & ranked below Christ & the Godhead, the new divine one joins other deified saints clothed in glory, in the heavenly realms. In contrast, those on the left hand path descend into darkness, are clothed in blackness & are demonified to become more and more like the devil & his fallen angels, who lost their bright natures when they fell down into the darkness of the underworld. This is a summation of the journey of the soul & the ritualistic types in what happens to the garments in this journey from the pre-existence; through mortal life, where the spirit is clothed in a physical body. Plus, the descent into hell, & deliverance out; the ascensions into the higher paradisaical & heavenly after life realms. Where the soul returns to the bright pre-mortal garment held there, to thus be clothed in glory; in contrast to the unrepentant wicked, who remains in the darkness. The garments' colors, & degrees of spots on down through the scales from white, gray, to black are types of what the soul had chosen along the eternal paths of the two ways, depending on which of the two ways, or two paths the soul freely walked upon. Which paths are either the right hand path towards deification; or the left hand path towards demonification.

Paul wrote to the Galatians: "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." (Galatians 3:27). Isaiah, John & Hermas, present different colors of garments as symbolical types of degrees of righteousness; or wickedness of people.³²⁷⁵

160, The Shepherd of Hermas, symbolically presents garments, and color symbolism to suggest the degree of sins, or the degree of righteousness of those who are clothed in different colors of garments.³²⁷⁶

Acts of Thomas: White garments are put on for the wedding feast. The person clothed in such garments hopes to be "worthy of them." So these are not just ordinary everyday garments. In Revelation, in the marriage of the Lamb, the wife in having made herself ready for the Lamb, symbolic of Christ, for she is to be "arrayed in the fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints."³²⁷⁷

Nag Hammandi, Gospel of Truth: The word of the Father clothes everyone from top to bottom, purifies, and makes them fit to come back into the presence of their Father and their heavenly mother.³²⁷⁸

In the Hymn of the Pearl, or The Hymn of the Soul Contained in the Syriac Acts of St. Thomas, there are pre-existence themes, that are likened unto what happens to a heavenly robe that the spirit was once clothed in, before descending into the filthy & impure garments of mortal life, which the spirit is clothed in, or when clothed in a mortal body, (according to anti-matter Gnostic type beliefs). Thus, the hymn tells the story of an anointed prince of royal heavenly parents, for he has a brother too, as part of this heavenly royal family. In this allegorical journey, his soul enters into bodily incarnation, with a mission to seek a pearl. His parents, while in the pre-existence, had blessed him, clothed him in a bright robe of glory, but upon sending him away, they took it & his purple toga off, (purple being the color of royalty). If he is successful in his earthly mission to bring back the pearl, his parents covenanted with him, while he was still in the pre-existence, earlier, that he will again, put-on that robe of glory & his toga, & with his brother, become an heir to his parents' kingdom. After his descent to the new realm, he is among strangers & is distracted from his mission, & forgets his purpose in earth life, how that he was an anointed prince, once clothed in royalty. He notes that he has put on a robe like the strangers of this new realm. He has to be reminded of his mission from a message from his heavenly family, & when he is awakened to remembrance of his mission, he descends into the watery abyss in the middle of the sea, defeated the underwater serpent, seized the pearl, & ascends from the sea. He takes off the filthy & impure garments by stripping down & leaving them in the fields. He goes to the east, into the light of his homeland & his robe of glory & other royal garb, is offered to him again, as he returns to glory, having fulfilled his mission. It's the old, pre-existence-themes, in types, blended in with ritualistic types about the journey of the soul from the pre-existence, to the tests of mortal life, to then return to glory, with cleansing-garment types found in deification themes. The filthy and impure garments that were types of the soul having been tainted by matter, or a physical body, (again, Gnostic anti-body type beliefs). Of being tainted & made unclean by sins & worldly distractions, having forgotten his royal mission. But, upon being reminded by a heavenly messenger (eagle with a letter from his royal heavenly parents, & brother). He is awakened to enlightened determination to fulfill his covenant & mission. Though un-clean, he is washed & purified through his descent into the middle of the sea, like a sort of baptism, (the ritual descent into the watery abyss, like Christ's descent into hell). In this watery abyss, he encounters the demon type water serpent & is victorious over it. (Like in descent into hell types, of Christ defeating the fallen water serpent-devil, under the fallen doors of hades, in the river Jordan, during his baptism, so old art works show). Having seized the pearl, (like grasping with hand clasps, the valuable souls that desired to be rescued from the watery serpent-dragon, as in other harrowing of hell themes). He ascends from the sea to then go towards the light, eastward, (symbolic in ritualistic baptismal settings of the resurrection, & of leaving the darkness of sin, of stripping off the filthy impure garments, to then be clothed in white). Having also stripped off the old filthy and impure garments, he ascends to the light in the east, symbolic of his returning back to his heavenly home land. There, the robe of glory, & the royal purple toga, & a sort of heavenly coronation ceremony awaits him as a reward for being victorious over the serpent, & passing the test of mortal life, & fulfilling his pre-mortal covenant & earthly mission, for which he was sent to do. Thus, the whole hymn contains symbolical metaphorical ritualistic types of the whole journey of the soul from the pre-existence, memory loss, regaining that memory through heavenly messengers that remind the initiates of their covenants, & the test of mortal life, & their particular missions. Then, the descent into hell, hints to baptismal-resurrection types, & finally, the prize, the ultimate reward! That of being clothed in deification through a heavenly coronation ceremony, to being an heir, as other princes, & other family in heaven members, that also return to glory to their heavenly Parents' kingdom.³²⁷⁹

Tertullian, 145—220, in the mysteries, the naked put upon "the clothing, as it were, of the faith which before was bear."³²⁸⁰

Many references to the putting on of Christ have been understood of the anointing & clothing in white garments that were features of the ceremonial rites in the 2nd c.³²⁸¹ Performed by orthodox Christians, they were also borrowed by Gnostic groups of the same century.³²⁸²

200, initiation for baptism, were anointed with oil & immersed 3 times, or had water poured on them. Apostles' Creed, in coming up from the water, the new-made Christian was anointed with the symbolic oil of thanksgiving, clothed in white garments, & brought before the bishop to receive the laying-on-of-hands, gift of the Holy Spirit.³²⁸³

3rd cent., Clement of Alexandria wrote how "...those that wait at the court of heaven around the King of all, are sanctified in the immortal vesture of the Spirit, that is, the flesh, and so put on incorruptibility." And: "Truly, then are we the children of God, who have put aside the old man, & stripped off the garment of wickedness, & put on the immortality of Christ; that we may become a new, holy people by regeneration, & may keep the man undefiled."³²⁸⁴

Origen: "The expulsion of man and woman from paradise, and their being clothed with tunics of skins... contain a certain secret and mystical doctrine (far transcending that of Plato) of the soul's losing its wings, and being borne downwards to earth, until it can lay hold of some stable resting place."³²⁸⁵ Soul losing its wings was part of pre-existence themes too.

"Archaeology is able to contribute to our understanding of the practice and meaning of Christian initiation from the third century onwards. By this period it was undeniably a complex rite and, although it may differ in detail from centre to centre, it involved everywhere the preparation of the candidates with such ceremonies as the traditio and redditio of the Creed and repeated exorcisms. It included too the disrobing of the candidates, their affirmation of faith, their baptism and anointing, their clothing in white robes..."³²⁸⁶

From the 4th century to later ones, when Christendom gained more protection & political religious powers, in contrast to times when they suffered persecutions, their places of worship were destroyed, burned or taken over by Roman pagan thought policing civil authorities.³²⁸⁷ Many elaborate baptisteries were constructed in ways that represented a journey of the soul through symbolical purification, crucifixion, dying like unto Christ's death, his descent into the underworld, & ascent to new life, or resurrection. Thus, going through different parts of the churches into different rooms was likened unto that journey through different realms, where the art works seen, also told the stories & symbolical journey & where different aspects of the mysteries were performed. The neophytes, or new initiates, thus could have taken a bath privately, but not like unto the public baths, for the whole point was to enter baptism with purified bodies, and without having to face the temptations of immoral thoughts and actions presented by the public baths. Then they could have entered the church by corridors, which passes in front of other rooms into another, where they were disrobed, were baptized in the rooms & fonts for baptism, then went to another room to be dressed in white robes. Then, they'd enter another area of the church for further instructions & take part in further aspects of the mysteries. For there were unctions or anointing rites, that includes the laying on of hands on the catechumens' heads for confirmations, further professions of faith, renouncing of the devil, & all his works, exorcisms against the powers of the devil & demons, & so forth.³²⁸⁸

307-337, Roman Emperor, Constantine I (the Great), gave an incentive for people to become Christians by promising them twenty pieces of gold and a white garment. Thus, 12 thousand "converts" consisting of men, women & children were baptized in a single year in Rome. But were they really converted or influenced to join by that incentive?³²⁸⁹

St. Ambrose (born 340 A.D. died A.D. 387), wrote about the Christian mysteries: Baptism, anointing, garments, renouncing against the devil, etc. In his reply to the Memorial of Symmachus, he charged that the heathens rites were counterfeiting the Cybele from the Almo. He objected to the heathen-pagans who wanted to erect an altar in the Senate house of the city of Rome, where the majority who meet there were Christians. He rejected to the swearing of oaths at these pagan-heathen altars, to obey laws & decrees.³²⁹⁰ Also, "therefore thou hast come to the altar, thou hast received the grace of Christ, thou hast obtained the heavenly sacraments. The Church rejoices in the redemption of many and is glad with spiritual exaltation that her white-robed household stands at her side." (De Sacramen., V. 14). [A reference to the white robes of the neophytes, a novice, or new member in a religious order].³²⁹¹

Gregory of Nyssa, 4th century Christian, wrote that baptism was for purification from sins, & in a symbolical way, the old man was to put on the new man. We will be changed into the fairness of that innocence as unto the innocence of an infant who is free from sin & accusations & from penalties, having been released by royal bounty from accountability. Garment types are mentioned as "the clean & fair apparel; teaching us the figurative illustration that verily in the Baptism of Jesus all we, putting off our sins like some poor & patched garment, are clothed in the holy & most fair garment of regeneration.... Thou didst strip off the fig-tree leaves, an unseemly covering, & put upon us a costly garment.... Thou didst sprinkle us with clean water, & cleanse us from our filthiness."³²⁹²

Garments or animal skins washed white from spots before God's judgment is the final end of the ancient ritualistic journey of the soul. The white vestment, is cleansed of sin, or spots, even if those stains on the garment have blackened the garments, or robes. For through the atonement of Christ, the journey of the soul, which baptism is a type of, Christ brings souls to purification, perfection, & deification. St. Ambrose calls the garments of the mysteries, "the chaste veil of innocence," while S. Cyril of Jerusalem, lectures on the mysteries, calls it "the garment of salvation".³²⁹³

300-390(?), Macarius ("Blessed"), the Elder, & "The Egyptian," (Copt), in his 50 Spiritual Homilies, comments on the type Christ used concerning light & darkness, concerning spirituality. Light symbolic of good, & the darkening of the soul, symbolic of bad, (Homily 1:4). The light of the body, or the darkness of the body, wasn't actual skin coloring, but was a type of spiritual lightening, or spiritual darkening. A type of enlightening their hearts with the spiritual light, or the opposite of darkening. Darkness is likened unto a life of sin, the darkness of the passions of evil, whereas light is symbolic of goodness, (Homily 1:5-6). He then gets into garment types, & color symbolism: "...As the coat or garment that you have on was made by another, and you wear it, and your house was created or built by another, and you live in it, so when Adam transgressed the commandment of God, and hearkened to the wicked serpent, he was sold, or sold himself, to the devil, and the evil one put on his soul like a garment—his soul, that fair creation, which God had fashioned after His own image. Thus the apostle says, Having stripped the principalities and powers, He triumphed over them in the cross. [Different translation of Col. 2:15, than KJV.] This was the purpose of the Lord's coming, that He might cast them out, and recover His own house and temple, man. For this reason, the soul is called the body of the darkness of wickedness, as long as the darkness of sin is in it, because there it lives to the evil world of darkness, and is there held fast.... [Cites Paul, Rom.6:6.] On the other hand, the soul which has believed God, and has been rescued from sin, and done to death out of the life of darkness, and has received the light of the Holy Ghost as its life,...” He goes on to mention the “darkness of wickedness,” & “wickedness of the passions of darkness” to further illustrate the garment color types, (Homily 1:7). He uses more garment types, putting on & taking off, like in the case with how the soul “puts on” or is clothed in a body, but then dies, or takes off that clothing, or the body. Thus, the garment types, that relate to death & resurrection types, which garments, are also connected to in early Christian symbolism, is used by Macarius. That of dying (symbolically speaking), to the ways of darkness, to then “...put on and receive the soul of the heavenly Spirit, and be translated from the wickedness of darkness into the light of Christ, and may rest in life through world after world.” (Homily 1:9). The hand clasping guide type is also part of the garment types too, which concerns ascending to the heavenly city of light, which, in art, often shows souls riding up on white blankets, garments, or robes. In this case, Christ is likened unto a Chariot driver in a chariot race, taking hold of the soul by the hands, as a driver does the reins, to guide the horses. The soul, thus in Christ’s hands, is guided into the heavenly light, (Homily 1:8-9). He continues with more examples to illustrate garment types, of the naked body being clothed in the “heavenly clothing.” (Homily 1:10). Of the soul to be born into the land of the living, “...growing up unto the Lord, and be arrayed from the Godhead with the ineffable raiment of heavenly beauty,...” & “...the heavenly raiment of light which comes from God.” He goes on with further garment types that are symbolic of eternal life & deification to those worthy, who have been nourished in the light, & ate the bread of life & drank the Living Water, rather than that of the darkness. If “...thou hast put on the garments of the ineffable light...” they will live the eternal life, & be at rest with the Lord. (Homily 1:11-12).

Further on, in contrast, the kingdom of darkness, the evil prince, in captivating man, has “...enveloped and clothed the soul in the power of darkness, as a man might clothe another.” (Homily 2:1). More garment types, as to what happens to the soul, that is clothed in the blackness of sins. Macarius used a possible missing scripture, or at least a quote, if it is a quote, from a source unknown to the translator, (Homily 2:1 foot note 1): “And that they may make him king, and clothe him with royal garments, so that from head to foot he many wear royal garments.” In this manner the evil prince clothed the soul and all its substance with sin.” (Homily 2:1). So, Macarius uses garment types & symbolism, as to how the Devil, the evil prince of Darkness, in contrast to Christ’s clothing the soul in the powers of righteousness. In contrast, the evil prince, clothed the soul in its substance (while in the body?), with sin. This might be like the black garments that the Shepherd of Hermas said represents being clothed in negative evil traits, in contrast to the white garments, that represent putting on good traits, kindness, love, etc. Macarius continues with the types, that remind us of Rev. 3:4, that references those who “defiled their garments.” Macarius: “He defiled it all, and brought it all into captivity of his kingdom,... he clothed it all with the purple of darkness.... [as the body suffers, so also does the soul suffer the passions of unhappiness & sin.] The evil one clothed the whole soul,... with his own unhappiness,...” (Homily 2:1). He cites Paul’s garment types, (Col. 3:9), “Put off the old man,” & how that the evil one has defiled the entire man, & dragged him down & has “clothed the man with an “old man,” polluted man, unclean,...” all symbolic of how the Devil had made us dirtied us with the spots of sin. These are the garment types that Macarius must have been taught & knew about, for he goes into more types, that of praying to God that he would help us put our feet on the right hand path, & have our hands not work the works of iniquity, & that “...He would put off the old man from us...” Moreover, as if hinting to Christ’s descent into hell, how those who have taken us captive & retained us in their kingdom, have the promise of deliverance from this sore bondage. Macarius continues with more garment types, of being pure, and blameless, & without spot, no wickedness. (Homily 2:2-3).

Then, Macarius contrast the protective garment of light, (1 Thess. 5:5-9, Eph. 6:11-18, Rom.13:12, Col.3:4-15), with that of the garment of darkness, how it represents putting on the negative traits: “And as yonder, in the state of error, the old man put on man as a complete whole, and wears the garment of the kingdom of darkness, the garment of blasphemy, unbelief, unconcern, vainglory, pride, avarice, lust, and all the other trappings of the kingdom of darkness, ragged, unclean, and abominable; so here, all who have put off the old man, which is from beneath the earth—all whom Jesus has stripped of the clothing of the kingdom of darkness—have put on the new and heavenly man, Jesus Christ,... to be all pure, and wearing the heavenly image. The Lord has clothed them with the clothing of the kingdom of ineffable light, the clothing of faith, hope, charity, of joy, peace, goodness, kindness, and all the other divine and living clothing of the light of life, of inexpressible rest, that, as God Himself is love, and joy, and peace, and kindness, and goodness, so the new man may be through grace. And as the kingdom of darkness, and sin, are hidden in the soul until the day of resurrection, when the bodies also of sinners shall be covered with the darkness that is now hidden in the soul, so the kingdom of light, and the heavenly Image, Jesus Christ, now mystically enlightens the soul, and reigns in the soul of the saints, but is hidden from the eyes of men, and only with the eyes of the soul is Christ truly seen, until the day of resurrection; but then the body also shall be covered and glorified with the light of the Lord, which is now in the man’s soul, that the body also may reign with the soul which now receives the kingdom of Christ and rests and is enlightened with eternal light.” (Homily 2:4-5, & compare Tertullian’s On the Apparel of Women, & also: On the Veiling of Virgins, in ANF, 4:14-37).

Macarius continues with more garment types, that of a traveler, & what might happen to the garment, & garment care, when traveling over rough areas. How that the garment is gathered up, so it won’t get snagged & torn, while going through thickets & thorns. Or so that it won’t get spoiled in mire, or cut by a sword, “wrapping his gown close.... preserves the gown that clothes him from burning and tearing.” In contrast, if someone is careless, & doesn’t practice garment-care, but lets his garments floating about him, they’ll get torn, burnt, tattered, mired & ruins his fine new garment. In like manner the soul in the body, like a garment, needs care from having the same types of things mention done to it. Thus, it should be protected with clean thoughts, vigilance, resolution, earnestness, heed & keep it from being torn, etc. Keep it from being burnt by the fires of lust, & other thorns & thickets of the world. Like the anointing ritual, this garment type was also, for Macarius, a type of being clothed in positive protective traits, this garment was a protective garment, but needed maintenance & care from being damaged: “Thus clothed, it turns away the eye from seeing evil sights, turns away the ear from listening to slander, the tongue from speaking vanities, the hands and feet from bad pursuits. The soul has a will, by which to turn away and hinder the members of the body from base spectacles, and evil and shameful sounds, and indecent words, and worldly and evil pursuits.” (Homily 4:2-3). Through the harsh journey of life, they were to keep their garments un-torn, unstained, un-rent, un-burned, un-fallen, preserving well "the garment of its body." In contrast, if the soul wanders into the negative traits, lust, gets soiled, stained, spotted, burnt, mired, etc., "not having succeeded in keeping its raiment unspotted," such choices willfully done, is going to not be for the soul's good. (Homily 4:4-5).

313–398, Didymus the Blind, one the greatest Christian scholars of his era in Alexandria, uses the creation drama of Adam and his clothing in skins, as a type of preexistent theme, the skins were a metaphorical type of the soul's fall from heaven into material life in the physical body.³²⁹⁴ As noted already: Though presented ritualistically & in written accounts, differently, garments or animal skins being used to cloth upon ritualistically, artistically, the naked souls ascending into paradise or heaven. Or the body of the initiated, such as also in early Christian mysteries & ritualistic settings, these were a common theme in Christendom, as to symbolical types of what happens to souls during their journey through different realms of existences, from the preexistence, mortal life, the after life realms, & the final coronation ceremonies of the clothing of souls in the resurrection, & their deification.³²⁹⁵

ST. AUGUSTINE, A.D. 354-430, former sinner, later repented & consecrated Bishop of Hippo, in Two Books on Genesis against the Manichees, he allegorized out of the creation narrative, a blend of preexistence themes with possible garment types in that the green of the field, with roots going down into the soil, was a type of souls that sinned or soiled their souls by earthly desires, before they came down to earth. For according to his version of the Hebrew Bible, "God made heaven and earth, and all the green of the field before it was upon the earth." The green of the field means the spiritual and invisible creature. For 'before they were upon the earth,' means: before the soul sinned. For soiled by earthly desires it is correctly said to have come to be upon the earth.³²⁹⁶ The possible garment types are the soiling, which represents negative desire & sins, which in ritualistic settings, thus needs to be washed white.

432–44, in the inscriptions of the Lateran baptistery, there is reference to the baptismal waters, dipping, washing, cleansing & bathing in the sacred stream to purify the sinner. Of the water that receives the old to bring forth new, being born again, or born anew. In other inscriptions, dated earlier, which Ennodius of Pavia places in the mouth of Rome, the neophytes, dressed in their white robes, proceeds from the font.³²⁹⁷

St. Gregory the Great, (born 540, died 604, or Gregory I, reigned as Pope 590–604): The "white vestment (birrum)" is what a person "had been clothed when he rose from the font." He also wrote how they: "Receive the white and immaculate garment, which thou mayest bring forth without spot before the tribunal of our Lord Jesus Christ, that thou mayest have eternal life."³²⁹⁸

330–1453, during the Byzantine Empire: "The rite of baptism – symbolizing the purification of sins and rebirth – marks an individual's acceptance into the Church. In the Byzantine period, this rite was only performed after the candidate for conversion (catechumen) had completed a rigorous course of study. During this lengthy ceremony, the catechumen was immersed in water, anointed with oil, and dressed in a pure white garment. Only then was he or she permitted to enter the church and participate in the Eucharist by partaking of the holy bread and wine."³²⁹⁹

After baptism it was customary to wear white garments in token of the innocence of the soul which through remission of sins the converts had acquired. These garments were commonly worn for 8 days & were metaphorically called the garments of Christ or the mystical garments. The Sunday following was called

Dominica in albis depositis, because those who had been baptized took off their white robes, which were laid by in the church as evidence against them if they broke their baptismal vows. Whitsunday (White Sunday), the English name for Pentecost, is suppose to have been so called from the white garments worn by the newly baptized catechumens when it was the custom to administer that ordinance on the Vigil of Pentecost. St. Jerome also wrote concerning the washing & anointing ritual with the garment. There are some inscriptions on some sepulchral slabs that say that the persons had died during the time that the white robes were worn. Gregory the Great also mentions the white garment.³³⁰⁰

In "Pseudepigrapha," writings erroneously, unhistorically, and yet sincerely, ascribed to heroic figures of the past.³³⁰¹ In a creation drama, we have examples of color garment symbolism & types of deification vrs demonification. Adam was told that while he was under God's command he was "a bright angel," Later on, Christ promises Adam that there was a way back for them, for they would be able to be restored once again to their former state of glory if they would keep the covenant that they had made with God after the time that they had been banished from the garden. Christ would come into the world "...become flesh of thy seed, and take upon Me [says the pre-existing Christ to Adam], the infirmity from which thou sufferest, then the darkness that came upon thee in this cave shall come upon Me in the grave, when I am in the flesh of thy seed."³³⁰²

The narrative goes on to say how Adam & Eve had made fig-leaves and covered themselves & hid from God. "...Seest thou not these figs and their leaves, with which we covered ourselves when we were stripped of our bright nature?" Christ also tells Adam how: "...I shall descend into hell... My blood upon thy [Adam's] head in the land of Golgotha. For My blood shall be the Water of Life unto thee, at that time, and not to thee alone,..."³³⁰³ The traditional place of burial, in historic Christianity, for Adam was Golgotha. Thus, Adam's skull is often depicted at the foot of the cross, and Christ's life giving blood flows down upon Adam's skull, and eventually, Adam is resurrected out of this traditional burial place. Some art works show Christ's blood flowing down into an open pit, symbolic in many cases of the underworld, the place of Adam's grave, perhaps even limbo, & hades, the spirit prison. This bloody flowing stream of Christ's blood washes over those who stand under it, as it flows down from Christ on the cross. Those washed, come out of captivity from the pit under the cross. Those who wash their garments till they are made white, are symbolically cleaned of sins, like in baptismal types. Some art works show people washing themselves, &, or their robes or garments in a stream of blood which flows down from Christ on the cross, again symbolic of making their "skins" or clothing white, cause Christ's blood is believed to wash away the stains of sins.³³⁰⁴

"It may not be surprising to see the frequency with which Adam figures in baptismal texts since baptism was regarded as the necessary act for removal of the effects of the fall. Adam was a type of Christ and Christ was a new Adam (Rom. 5:16). What is significant, however, are the numerous allusions to his nakedness and shame and the garment placed upon him at the time of his expulsion. The garment that will be placed upon the catechumen at baptism is equated to the garment of skins placed upon Adam at the time of the fall. A parallel is made between the situation of Adam in the garden and that of the catechumen in the baptistery, and the candidate is to think of himself as if he were Adam in the garden."³³⁰⁵ The symbolism of being disavowed, & found naked, was a symbol of shame, so it would seem, in ancient types. The saints at Laodicea, were no longer found in God's favor, for example, & among other negative condemnations, were “naked,” (Rev.3:16-17). Were they thus stripped of the protective garment & found spiritually naked, & shamed? As it was, there was “a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments” (Rev. 3:4).

14th–15th centuries, in thought & art in France & the Netherlands, the animal skins theme in garment types, seems to be part of a ballad by Eustache Deschamps, Oeuvres complètes. In it, Adam addresses his posterity, & mentions the symbolical types of the animal skins that Adam & Eve were clothed in, & the chivalry types of the creation drama being likened to what should happen in Knighthood’s chivalry’s ideals.³³⁰⁶ That of being clothed in a gentle heart, adorned in noble morals, & not clothed in the dirty skin of vices, sins, & other negative traits. Adam talks to his posterity about being created by God who created Adam out of the mud, (many art works show God raising Adam from the ground by hand & wrist grasping).³³⁰⁷ Adam tells how that they are descended from him, & how Eve is their mother. He then asked: “...Commen est l’ un villain Et l’ autre prant le nom de gentillesce” – “...How is it that one is a villein And the other assumes the name of gentility?” [Old French, gentil: high-born, noble. Also, noun for: socially superior or genteel character or behavior]. “De vous, freres?” – “Of you, brothers?” – “dont vient tele noblesce?” – “whence comes such nobility?” – “Je ne le sçay, se ce n’est des vertus,” – “I do not know, unless it springs from virtues,” – “Et les villains de tout vice qui blesce:” – “And the villeins from all vice, which wounds:” – “Vous estes tous d’une pel revestuz.” – “You are all covered by the same skin.” Eustache goes on with Adam telling how that when God made him & Eve, they were “crea tous nuz” or created quite nude. Further on he mentions “...vilment estes concuz.” – “...villain that wounds hearts?” – “Vous estes tous d’une pel revestuz.” – “You are all covered by the same skin.” He goes on to ask what the mighty kings, counts, dukes, the governor of the people & sovereign, when they were born, “...de quoy sont ilz vestuz?” – “...with what are they clothed?” – “D’une orde pel.” – “By a dirty skin.” Further on he reminds the Prince to remember, without disdaining the poor people, or (Old French desdeign, from Latin dedignari ‘consider unworthy’), the poor people, that death hold the reins.³³⁰⁸

16th century, Reformation era: “...The retention of elements from the making of a catechumen within the rite of infant baptism is perhaps somewhat antiquarian, but such practices as the giving of the white robe or the lighted candle have much to commend them.”³³⁰⁹

BLOTTING, WHITENING, WASHING OF GARMENTS TO PURITY

Anciently, many garments were made out of animal skins.³³¹⁰ Thus, to have your garment-skins spotted, or blackened, meant you were racking up stains, symbolic of sins, & going down the left hand path towards becoming more & more like the devil & fallen angels. You were being demonified,³³¹¹ if you didn’t repent & change your ways. To have your skins washed white, meant purity, perfection & deification = becoming gods!³³¹² You were on the right-hand path towards becoming more like other divine ones, like Christ & God the Father.³³¹³ Garments and anointing are symbolic in the early Christian mysteries of deification in the after life realms.³³¹⁴

In the ancient doctrine of the two ways, the right-hand path & left-hand path, it was anciently known that the feet do the traveling in choosing to go up the right-hand path, or down the left-hand path. While the hands do the good or bad choices that the mind decides to choose from. Thus, the feet & hands are sometimes soiled or stained with the blood of sins, or the soil of walking down the left-hand path. This is why feet washing & hand washing were symbolic of cleansing the person of their sins, or of others’ sins & crimes, (Isa.1:16–18, 52:1–11, 59:1–9; Psa.73:13. Matt.27:24). This was also part of washing, anointing, & whitening of garments, in a symbolical way of washing away of sins.³³¹⁵ As these ordinances of the Mosaic temple & early Christian mysteries were passed down to later generations of Christianity, so also were some aspects of the hand clasping rites too.³³¹⁶ For example, in hand clasping rites of homage ceremonies, where the hands are placed inside those of the other, to swear homage, or receive another. Thus, those taking part in the ceremony, were to do this without deceit, ill intent, or with wicked purposes in mind, or with those whose hands were guilty of shedding innocent blood, & consequently had unclean hands, (Psa.24:3–5, Isa. 59:1–3). The purpose of hand washing was to have clean hands, in ascension settings. Be they ascending to thrones, ascending to higher positions of clerical or civic authority & powers, as in later Christian coronation ceremonies. Or in ascending into heaven, as in the cases with early to later Christian symbolism of the mysteries. This was the symbolism, the precaution of having clean hands, was also like not having on spotted garments, especially ones spotted to blackness. Or in having soiled feet, for in so doing, such things would degrade & contaminate the ceremony of swearing homage, or paying homage.³³¹⁷

During the Middle Ages, when a letter from heaven, supposedly hanged in the air for a while, in Rome, in the temple of Paul. A very large group of people, 47,000 in number, were assembled, & overwhelmed with weeping, the day was turned to night, & “...in the presence of this missive [formal letter] the people all put on white garments and purified their hearts. Finally the letter [written on a tablet of ice & that hung in the air] descended upon the mantle of the patriarch himself...”³³¹⁸ Though the story sounds more like a fairy tale, than factual, what is of interest here is the mention of white garments & the mantle. For if this belongs to garment lore, it suggests how that the people of the Middle Ages, thought of white garments put on by the people, as being a part of a purification ritual, in that they also “purified their hearts.”

A late 11th century example tells how in 1099, an English monk in Rome, heard Pope Urban II, (reigned 1088–99), repeating the censure of 1095, of the Council of Clermont. During it, a pronounced decision was made against simony, it dealt with the investiture controversy, & how that no bishop or priest should do homage to a king or other laymen. In a speech the Pope, Urban II, is said to have given, concerning the investiture of laymen, & the contamination of the ceremony of homage; he talked about the symbolism of the hands being degraded in homages that shouldn’t be done by a bishop or priest to a king or other layman. All those who did were excommunicated, even though of high civic ranks, or laymen, for he said: “The Pope [he says], having excommunicated all laymen who gave investiture of churches, also bound by the same sentence of excommunication all who became the vassals of laymen for ecclesiastical estates, saying that it seemed a horrible thing that hands which had been honoured even above anything permitted to the angels, with power to create by their agency the God who is the Creator of all things to offer Him to God the Father for the redemption and salvation of the whole world– that these hands should be degraded by the ignominy [or causing public disgrace or shame] of being made subject to hands which were infected by filthy contagions day and night, stained with rapine and accustomed to the shedding of innocent blood...”³³¹⁹

Influenced by the styles of 12th century writer, 17th century Sir Walter Scott preserved garment themes, as by way of the staining aspects of those themes, & other types in citing such ones as Peter of Blois, blended with Old Testament biblical type phrases: “Your garments are dyed— but not with the juice of the wine-press; your swords are filled with blood, but not with the blood of goats or lambs; the dust of the desert on which ye stand is made fat with gore, but not with the blood of bullocks, for the Lord hath a sacrifice in Bozrah, and a great slaughter in the land of Idumea....”³³²⁰

“And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the LORD an offering in righteousness.” Old Testament, Malachi 3:3.

White still is but “was once a sacred” color.³³²¹ White is also symbolic of purity,³³²² refinement, unblemished, righteousness & heavenly things. Some examples are: Psalm 51:7, which uses the ritualistic types of washing as to purify, being made clean: “Wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow,” New American Standard Bible. How is God going to whiten? By taking some “white out,” like some still do with mistakes made in a typed manuscript and blot out the mistakes? “Hide Your face from my sins and blot out all my iniquities. Create in me a clean heart...” (Psalm 51:7, 9-10).³³²³ The blotting out of sins is repeated in ancient scriptures. Black garments, or “skins,” would thus be blotted or cleansed to white garments or skins.

In contrast, the color black is primarily associated with negative aspects of human experience and behavior, including death, diseases, famine & sorrow, resulting from sins. White “is a color of purity and righteousness.”³³²⁴ In contrast, a bright countenance is likened unto happiness, symbolic of even righteousness. Thus we sometimes talk about people “beaming” or having a “radiant smile,” in contrast to those who’s “show of their countenance doth witness against them; and they declare their sin as Sodom, they hide it not.” (Isaiah 3:9).

In ancient times, sins were like spots on white garments, they were so visible that one could not hide the blackness in contrast to the whiteness. This is why Jude warned against ungodly lusts, for on the left hand path, those who “walk after their own ungodly lusts,” aren’t going to be deified, if they continue to add more black spots to their white garments. For by adding more spots, they will eventually add so much that they will become blackened— demonized through habitual un-repenting sins (black spots). Thus, Jude warns & encourages us to “Keep yourselves in the love of God, looking for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life. And of some have compassion, making a difference: And others save with fear, pulling them out of the fire; hating even the garment spotted by the flesh. Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy...” Glory be to Christ. Jude is suggesting how they’d appear, how they’d be clothed, when presented in the presence of God in a judgment setting. Will they have spotted garments on? Or will they have washed them clean, blotted out the stains of sin, through faith & repentance, thus having blotted out the spots through the cleansing atonement of Christ’s blood, (Jude 6–8, 12, 16–25, Rev. 1:5, 7:14, 19:8, 14). In the third century early Christian writing, The Gospel of Nicodemus, Christ passes through the gates of hell, despite the attempts of the demons & devil to keep him out. They know he’s so bright & powerful that they won’t be able to stop him from liberating the spirit prisoners held there. The legions of devils are struck with horror & cried out how that Christ is “...a man so powerful and glorious in majesty, so bright as to have no spot, and so pure as to have no crime?” Christ didn’t have spots of sin, & was pure, having no crimes to blacken him, thus he stretches forth his hand, for the hand clasp about to take place, & invites “all ye saints” to come forth.³³²⁵ He’s there as one who has conquered death & the legions of devils, for he is the spotless, or unblemished lamb of prophetic animal sacrificial types foretold would redeem & rescue those once spotted with sins, but now having their sins blotted out through his atoning sacrifice for sins.

Edna Barth notes how that in the Easter traditions of historic Christendom, “White stands for light, purity, and joy.”³³²⁶ The whitening, purification types, or ritualistic washing of animal skins, as types of Christ washing away of sins, is also part of the animal skins color garment symbolism ritualistic settings. Fuller’s soap was a type of the Messiah’s cleansing powers. Fuller’s soap was used to clean woolen clothing before it was made into garments. Malachi 3:2, prophetically says that the Messiah is like a refiner’s fire, and like fullers’ soap. What does soap do, it cleans. In ancient Messiah’s atonement types, what are being cleaned off spotted ritualistic animal skin garments are the spots of sins. Isaiah 1:16-18: “Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of our doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; Learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow. Come now, and let us reason together, saith LORD: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool.” Note the ritualistic washing of animal skins types, with the mention of wool.³³²⁷ As the garment or animal skins of life are put on to cloth the ancients of their nakedness, & as they were worn, they got soiled, stained, spotted as life went on. The hands becoming soiled, or bloody by choices, the blood & stains on the garments— or animal skins, need to be washed away. This is the ritualistic types, that early to later Christian used as illustrations on how they would be cleaned of their sins. There are many art works that show below Christ on the cross, different ones washing their garments or clothing in the stream of Christ’s blood that flows down from Christ crucified.³³²⁸

John Chrysostom, early Christian bishop: “If we wish to understand the power of Christ’s blood, we should go back to the ancient account of its prefiguration in Egypt. “Sacrifice a lamb without blemish,” commanded Moses, “and sprinkle its blood on your doors.” If we were to ask him what he meant, and how the blood of an irrational beast could possibly save men endowed with reason, his answer would be that the saving power lies not in the blood itself, but in the fact that it is a sign of the Lord’s blood. In those days, when the destroying angel saw the blood on the doors he did not dare to enter, so how much less will the devil approach now when he sees, not that figurative blood on the doors, but the true blood on the lips of believers, the doors of the temple of Christ. If you desire further proof of the power of this blood, remember where it came from, how it ran down from the cross, flowing from the Master’s side. The gospel records that when Christ was dead, but still hung on the cross, a soldier came and pierced his side with a lance and immediately there poured out water and blood. Now the water was a symbol of baptism and the blood, of the holy Eucharist. The soldier pierced the Lord’s side, he breached the wall of the sacred temple, and I have found the treasure and made it my own. So also with the lamb: the Jews sacrificed the victim and I have been saved by it. There flowed from his side water and blood.” Beloved, do not pass over this mystery without thought; it has yet another hidden meaning, which I will explain to you. I said that water and blood symbolised baptism and the holy Eucharist. From these two sacraments the Church is born: from baptism, “the cleansing water that gives rebirth and renewal through the Holy Spirit,” and from the holy Eucharist.”³³²⁹ Chrysostom also adds how “it is in a tomb that we immerse our heads in the water... then when we lift our heads back the new man comes forth.”³³³⁰ (Rom.6:1–19, Eph.4:18–32, 5:1–13, 26–27). The later Whitesunday Easter clothing tradition of giving & receiving new clothing during Easter time, has its roots in these early Christian concepts of the old person of sin set aside to become a new person, cleansed & whitened through changing life styles & old bad habits, like changing old clothing for new righteous life styles, like putting on new clothing.

In an internet article, Liturgical Vestments, at "Fisheaters.com," the prayer request for the Lord to be the one to clean the clerics' hands & whiten them; is presented in the Clerics' ritualistic washing of hands & putting on the holy white vestings for their liturgies. It reminds me of having "clean hands" & "a pure heart," mentioned in Psalm 24:3-4: "Give virtue to my hands, O Lord, that being cleansed from all stain I might serve you with purity of mind and body. Latin version: Da, Domine, virtutem manibus meis ad abstergendum omnem maculam ut sine pollutione mentis et corporis valeam tibi servire." The Clerics ritualistically put on the "amice," a rectangular piece of "white linen," which is a type that "recalls the humiliation which was put upon Christ." As they do this they pray in Latin: "Impone, Domine, capiti meo galeam salutis, ad expugnandos diabolicos incursus." Which is: "Place upon, me O Lord, the helmet of salvation, that I may overcome the assaults of the devil." (See also: Ephesians 6:10-19). They were being ritualistically cleansed & whitened to do battle with the forces of darkness. For they then put on the "Alb" a "long white, robe-like vestment worn by all clerics at liturgical celebrations... its color symbolizes purity..." They pray: "Dealba me, Domine, et munda cor meum; ut, in sanguine Agni dealbatus, gaudiis perfrui sempiternis." Which is: "Purify me, O Lord, and cleanse me heart; that, being made white in the Blood of the Lamb, I may come to eternal joy." They'd then put on the "cincture," at the waist as a symbol of chastity. Other items are put on too, all of which have symbolic meanings & prayers that go along with them.³³³¹

11th century Christian Crusades' garment-traditions & color symbolism, includes pure white cotton, & the purification ideas of earlier Christian rituals that became more militant, believing that the world bathed in blood, could become clean.³³³² They believed, as taught by militant clerics, that their sufferings, struggles, & the blood spilt for militant causes & Knighthood agendas, done in the name of the militant-Christ, or militant St. Michael the militant arch-angel, that they would be cleansed of their sins, by going on the Crusades.³³³³ Thus, the people, guilty of all kinds of sins, but who fought and killed "the enemy," could be "as pure as a monk or a hermit" or "made pure as a nun." That all it would take to purify & clean all of Europe, was for the people to go on crusades to take back the land where Jesus walked. Pope Urban II, 1095, commanded that the nonbelievers must be driven out by force of arms: "We must cleanse the Holy Land as thoroughly as a saint who drinks only water purifies himself."³³³⁴ These were believed to be "holy wars," which "cleansed Christian fighters of sin and aimed to destroy the True Faith's demonic enemies."³³³⁵

15th century, France, Denis the Carthusian, a monk of an austere contemplative order founded by St Bruno in 1084, in his revelations, sees the Church in fully as personal a shape represented in an allegory on the stage. One revelation deals prophetically with the coming future reformation, "...a Church cleansed from the evils that stained it. The spiritual beauty of this purified Church was revealed to his vision in the form of a superb and precious garment, with marvellous colours and ornaments.... The idea of a splendid garment is fully adequate to express spiritual purity; thought here has resolved itself into an image, just as it can resolve itself into a melody."³³³⁶

Though in some cases of clothing symbolism of the Middle Ages, sin & negative vices were personified as figures dressed differently, there are other cases of the Church reminding their people, that sin is not a thing or entity. However, the types of the earlier Christian mysteries, though fragmented, were still retained in the garment themes of these later times. For example, like in the case with the expressions that used soil as being considered as a type of sins, or "...stuff which soils or corrupts, which one should, therefore, wash away or destroy [& this] was strengthened by the extreme systematising of sins, by their figurative representation, and even by the penitentiary technique of the Church itself."³³³⁷

The Knight Templars, & Templar clerics wore white gloves while consecrating the bread & wine of the Eucharist, the "...Templars would wear tight sheepskin breeches under their outer clothing as a symbol of their chastity and innocence. Parallels are also drawn between these items of clothing and the white lambskin aprons worn by Freemasons, which are said to symbolize innocence and friendship."³³³⁸

A 12th century example is a precaution by the Pope after Urban II, that the clerical offices shouldn't be given through simony, or by one paying for the positions. Moreover, precaution was given about other unworthy means being done in consecrating newly elected bishops. For such things would reduce the symbolism, & "...the Christian religion is dragged through the mud, if we allow the presumption of laymen to stretch out their hands to what we know to be the privilege of priests alone. It is not for the laymen to betray the Church, nor for sons to stain their Mother with adultery."³³³⁹ Another example of later fragments of the earlier Christian mysteries, of not defiling ritualistic garments, by soiling them, is seen in the later Christian knights' militant settings. Such as when the Christian knights of the 14th–15th century France & Netherlands, & elsewhere, were to be careful, during jousting tournaments, to not let the symbols, mottos, the emblems of the good & honor for what their family stood for, as displayed on clothing items, to then get soiled by being knocked off their horse during jousting, (a medieval knight contest, in which two opponents on horseback fight with lances, by charging at each other). Or by letting the caparison, or the ornamental covering spread over a horse's saddle or harness, get dragged through the sand, thus: "A nobleman is blamed for having the caparison of his horse ornamented with his armorial bearings, because, if the horse, 'a brute beast', should stumble at the joust, the coat of arms would be dragged through the sand and the whole family dishonoured."³³⁴⁰

In 1343, this was also said of Mary, she was pure & had a lot of merits to give to other by proxy, for indulgences, because she was "without stain."³³⁴¹

During 15th century Spain, Cardinal Mendoza & Tomas de Torquemada appointed two Dominican friars as Inquisitors to depart for Seville, commissioned with the dark duties as "...the purifiers of the faith as the hotbed of heresy..." to root out insincere Christians, etc. Aspects of clean garments, in perverted forms, are seen in how this was a dark time when, Jews, or those who forced-converted to Christianity under pressure, "conversos," were charged with being "...stained by the same infidelity and heresy...." of being scornful of the Holy Mother Church. Thus, Inquisitors were sent in to "cleanse," those stained, because it was believed that "the earth must be purified" of the stains of apostate heretics, & the land must be rid of Jews, or those not loyal to the Church. The alleged heretics were made to change their clothing and were "dressed in yellow gowns of shame." Moreover, the dark "...process of purification had begun in hellfire of Seville. The evildoers who defiled and polluted the world were to be liquidated.” Perverted forms of the earlier Christian aspects of purification, being washed clean of sins, or passing symbolically through a refiner’s fire. Plus, of being clothed in the white robes of baptism, so as to not be found stained, spotted with sins, but found spotless before God’s judgment bar. All these now traditional aspects of Last Judgment types & themes were literalized, perverted & acted out by many of the political-religious leaders of the Spanish Inquisition of 15th century Spain. The religious texts to “justify” these horrors in the minds of the corrupted, twisted & murderous Inquisitors was Revelation 20:12-15. Plus, amongst other texts, the 2nd century apocryphal preaching of St. Peter, which tells of those guilty of adultery as “adorned,” or clothed in their sins, “these had adorned themselves for adultery...” other were heated with fire, “...men and women clad in filthy rags rolled upon them in torment.”³³⁴²

1465–1536, Desiderius Erasmus, a respected monk, who pointed out the alleged corrupt & apostate conditions of the popes, cardinals, & bishops, of his era. Also pointed out how their symbolical clerical clothing, symbolic of purity, goodness & spotlessness, white symbolic of being free from sins, etc., didn’t match their alleged misconducts, & elevated pomp, & power hungry simony, & corrupt life styles: “And now for some reflections upon popes, cardinals, and bishops, who in pomp and splendour have almost equaled if not outgone secular princes. Now if any one consider that their upper crotchet of white linen is to signify their unspotted purity and innocence; that their forked mitres, with both divisions tied together by same knot, are to denote the joint knowledge of the Old and New Testament; that their always wearing gloves, represents their keeping their hands clean and undefiled from lucre and covetousness...” Further on he points out that, “...if they did but consider that the church supposes them to succeed in the room of the apostles; that therefore they must behave themselves as their predecessors, and so not be lords, but dispensers of spiritual gifts, of disposal whereof they must one day render a strict account: or if they would but reflect a little on their habit, and thus reason with themselves, what means this white upper garment, but only an unspotted innocence? What signifies my inner purple, but only an ardent love and zeal to God? What imports my outermost pall, so wide and long that it covers the whole mule when I ride, nay, should be big enough to cover a camel, but only a diffusive charity, that should spread itself for a succour and protection to all, by teaching, exhorting, comforting, reproving, admonishing, composing of differences, courageously withstanding wicked princes, and sacrificing for the safety of our flock our life and blood, as well as our wealth and riches; though indeed riches ought not to be at all possessed by such as boast themselves successors to the apostles, who were poor, needy, and destitute: I say, if they did but lay these considerations to heart they would never be so ambitious of being created to this honour, they would willingly resign it when conferred upon them, or at least would be as industrious, watchful and laborious, as the primitive apostles were.”³³⁴³ He goes on about the popes with the same types of observations. But we note here the symbolism for white clerical clothing that should have reminded the clergy mentioned to be spotless of negative traits, to be charitable, protective, industrious, not seeking glory, not seeking power, & that they should strip themselves of those negative traits, to be more spotless. The judgment is hinted to in how that they were to give a strict account one day.

16th century Puritans, (those who wanted a “purer” form of doctrine), that incorporated Calvinism. Not satisfied with the Church of England’s 42 Articles, revised into later 39 Articles, they thought that the articles hadn’t gone far enough than what they wanted to go in splitting from Roman Catholics. They thought that the beliefs, rituals, & practices of the Church of England had retained too much of the Roman Catholic practices & beliefs, consequently they had gone into exile under Queen Mary, & years later, many upon returning to England, became dissatisfied with the Elizabethan Settlement. “The Puritans objected to the ministers wearing vestments; Consider how all countries which have reformed religion have cast away the popish apparel with the Pope, yet we that would be taken for the best are content to keep it for the best are content to keep it for a holy relic.”³³⁴⁴

1614–1687, Henry More, poet, Cambridge Platonist, & Plato blended preexistence themes with later Christian’s versions, also used garment types in his arguments against the creationism, (an alternate belief countering preexistence, which said that God created fresh souls for each individual body. That they were created pure & innocent at same time as the body, no preexistence of souls). Thus, More asked why should God so soon contaminate these fresh new souls? Why are so unspotted beauties as mens spirits thus contaminated by flinging them naked into dunghills here in mortal life? Why soil them with guilt and foul contagion?³³⁴⁵

1795–1881, Thomas Carlyle, Romantic poetry, gives a possible hint to both preexistence themes, blending their garment types: “Man himself, and his whole terrestrial Life” as “but an Emblem; a Clothing or visible Garment for that divine ME of his, cast hither, like a light-particle, down from Heaven.”³³⁴⁶

This symbolical type, that of blotting out sins, is mentioned by the national covenant of Congress, 11-1-1777, proclamation that instructed Americans to join in being penitent of their sins, to be humble so that “...through the merits of Jesus Christ, mercifully to forgive and blot them [their collective sins] out of remembrance.”³³⁴⁷

1854, Pius IX (reigned 1846–70), promulgated the doctrine of the Immaculate Conception of the Most Holy Virgin. Garment theme types are seen in the presenting of the doctrine in proclaiming the purity of the Virgin as being “free from all stain of original sin.”³³⁴⁸ 1343, Mary was pure & “without stain.”³³⁴⁹ 12-8-1854, in the presence of 200 cardinals & bishops & a multitude of the faithful, at the Basilica of the Vatican, Pius IX read the bull Ineffabilis, defining the doctrine, that Mary had been preserved & freed from “all contamination of original sin.”³³⁵⁰

Later superstitious laundry day traditions that retains fragments of the earlier types, are seen in how in some areas, it is said that “clothes hung on the line then [on Good Friday] will be spotted with blood, in others, that the water itself will turn to blood.”³³⁵¹

The Dark Ages, was said to be an “era of ignorance, superstition, or social chaos or repression.”³³⁵² Where as the “Age of Enlightenment,” was considered by some to be an age when ignorance was dispersed by the light of reason, philosophical learning & better education, with the pursuit of truth.³³⁵³

WHITE CLOTHING AS A SYMBOL OF PURITY: In historic Christianity, uncleanness, dirty, filthy, “filthy rags,” washing, cleansed, purified, plus, many other ritual types in many Biblical passages & ancient settings, many relate to ancient ritualistic garment color symbolism. This, sometimes becomes confused & considered literal, from time to time throughout history. Marion P. Ireland notes that “White was the robe for newly baptized Christians in the primitive church”.³³⁵⁴

From time immemorial many have believed that they could “free themselves by ceremonial washing from the spiritual stains of murder and other crimes, and the ritual uncleanness incurred by childbirth, contact with the dead, or the breaking of a tabu.³³⁵⁵ In the New Testament, Pilate washed his hands at Christ's trial, symbolic of showing the people that he was innocent of the blood of Christ which the mob sought to take.³³⁵⁶ These ancient washing types were believed to ritualistically purify one of the blood of another during trials, & other biblical situations. Today, the expressions that murderers have "a lot of blood on their hands," or that they are "stained with the blood of the murdered victim," goes back to these types.

When vesting for the liturgy, the Christian cleric washes his hands, praying: "Give virtue to my hands, O Lord, that being cleansed from all stain I might serve you with purity of mind and body."³³⁵⁷ White garments in the churches continued down through the centuries, and according to 11th century chronicler, the world was "clothed in a white garment of churches."³³⁵⁸

Mid-15th century, Spain, it may be that garment color themes faded off into the color symbolism, turning racial & religious discriminations of the Christians against the Jews, & issues with conversos (Jews forced converted into Christians). Tomás de Torquemada, the Dominican prior of the Monastery of Santa Cruz in Segovia, also an Inquisitor, had a vivid hatred of heresy & the Jews, even though his dark secret was that his grandmother was a Jew. "He longed for the "pure blood" of an old Castilian Christian, and believed that Jewish blood was darker in hue as it contaminated the body."³³⁵⁹ Had some aspects of garment themes, faded off into later color symbolism concerning the color of blood being then considered tainted because it was a darker hue, rather than a lighter hue? Were such aspects of garment themes thus becoming more & more blended & faded in the racial issues of the time & place, in that having "pure blood," & a lighter hue, was what this Dominican Inquisitor preferred?

COLOR SYMBOLISM OF CLOTHING FADES OFF INTO RACIAL SKIN COLORS, & PREJUDICIAL WORLD VIEWS

120—202, Irenæus, wrote Against Heresies some time between 182 & 188 A.D., says that Satan gradually darkens³³⁶¹ the hearts of his followers, and thus gets them to forget the true God, while also seeking their adoration of himself as God.³³⁶² Barnabas, 118 AD, using color symbolism,³³⁶³ the devil is "the Black One."³³⁶⁴ Later Christian apologist, Arnobius of Sicca (died 330), own reservations about different preexistence themes, he had tacitly inclined to the idea that souls were either "sent forth from [God], or [had] fallen from Him" into "the darkness of this body."³³⁶⁵

From these, & later Christian writers, historians, & scholars; it's understood that the darkness, or blackness here made reference to, isn't actual skin color! But is in reference to negative traits, spiritual darkness, spiritual blackness & works of darkness, dark acts, black-thoughts & deeds. This is often contrasted with spiritual light, letting your light so shine, a type of good works, (Matthew 5:16). It was only later, when spiritual darkness of the apostasy, darkened the minds of people during the Dark Ages, that color symbolism began to be thought of as more & more literal. When pre-existence themes of the fallen angels began to be thought of as actual black monstrous beings, with black skins, or other dark colors, black-devils with horns, tails, & animalistic-features. Such as were depicted in thousands of art works, told in stories, & superstitious tales, & mystery-moral plays, where tanners, who tan animal skins, black, played the part of the fall of Lucifer.³³⁶⁶ When pre-existence themes, such as the post-war in heaven, post-fall of the fallen-angel-demons' activities on earth, started to turn into legends, & superstitious practices & beliefs,³³⁶⁷ When blackness was associated with, & still is, with negative traits, death, evil, & devilish-deeds, criminal thinking & actions.³³⁶⁸ When Whitesunday was reversed to Black Sabbath, & black magic, & with the spread of witchcraft lore, plus actual increases in folk magic & folk remedies.³³⁶⁹ When all these & many other factors came into play, they helped cause black & white color symbolism, & ritualistic clothing types, to be legendized even further in the long retrogression process of the great apostasy. That fable-making, superstitious blending, eventually produced world-views in superstitious minds. Which were that black & white racial features associated with actual racial skin colors, were to be (mis)interpreted as black races were somehow some of the fallen angels, part of the devilish races, & if one saw a black man, he could be the Devil walking towards you, that sort of nonsense.³³⁷⁰

While whites were of the pure blood, or purer race that needed to force-Christianize the infidels, like the Moors, & other "sub-human" races.³³⁷¹ Thus, it was after all these elements and other conditions, that prejudice world views were created through the ever growing ignorance of color racial features superstitiously associated with good or bad traits. So what about good or bad choices? Did they get ignored, excused or not factored into these world views? By these later centuries, the apostasy had retrogressed so many people away from morality, decency & correct Christ like principles & traits, that they had become ignorant, illiterate & superstitious in their perversions of what was right & wrong. Thus, many evils were done in the name of Christ, unthinkable horrors, as we had seen during the Inquisition, for example, & other thought policing periods of time. When superstitious white Europeans began to improve in shipping methods, trade routes & pilgrimage routes, they encounter different races more than they had before. Some of these were the black-Moors, Ethiopians, & the black race heathen tribes of African countries, plus other brown skin races, when they arrived on the Americas. Many of these white Christians sought to force Christianize the dark-skin races, & thought of them to be "savages," during their explorations around the world, & perhaps they were, with their human sacrifices, cannibalism & other "savage" customs.³³⁷² Still, the forced tortures that Inquisitors were doing in Spain, wasn't any better!

Color symbolism passed down to early to later Christians from the Jews, & other cultures, where black was associated at times with evil, death, & dark "gods," (like in Egyptian religions). These traditional associations were also used in the color symbolism that developed by early to later Christians, & eventually became literalized as racial features, as early Christian ritualistic color garment types, white robes, white strips of cloth, white Easter bonnets, white wedding dresses, white under garments, white bibs for infant baptism, white flags as protection, that armies won't fire upon those waving it. Plus, white curtains around baptismal fonts, & as church veils, etc., many of these were associated with purity, protection, goodness, righteousness, having been cleansed of sin, deification, & angelic clothing worn by angels, Christ, & saints that appear to mortals.³³⁷³ Where as black colors of the same types of clothing, were also associated with the negative types, such as black cloaks that the humble penitent monks sometimes wore. Or penitent persons put on to symbolize their repentance process, the humility needed to rid them of being outwardly & visibly marked by their sins. Thus, in seeking to rid their garments of the blackness of their sins, through the prescribed penitence periods of time, they were thus required to be gowned in coarse penitents' garbs, to identify them as being those in the sometimes long process of making penance for their dark sins.³³⁷⁴

In time, black clothing, black robes, also became associated with the preferred color of clothing that the Devil, demons, evil spirits, ghostly monstrous creatures, & a personified death; were often depicted in art, & described in legends, fables & stories, would sometimes wear. Plus, black & sometimes black & blood red, were the preferred colors, that devil-worshippers & witches sometimes would symbolically & ritualistically put on, & take off to thus be naked during their Black Magic rites & Black Sabbaths, reversing & mocking the white robes & Whitesunday symbolism of early to later Christendom.³³⁷⁵

Eventually Color Symbolism was Thought to be Literal: As the apostasy darkened Christendom with legends, & myths, the ancient garment color symbolism & light & darkness types eventually became to be considered as literal skin colors as evident in later Christian superstitions. For a later example: The DEVIL himself was formerly said to materialize out of choice as a black-skinned man, & up until relatively modern times in some remote areas, people turned themselves right round on meeting a black man, just in case he was the Devil in disguise.³³⁷⁶

The early to later Christians of slavery times, justified it by what they were told from biblical stories.³³⁷⁷ After Noah & those with him survived the flood, one of Noah's sons, Ham, saw Noah sleeping naked, after Noah fell asleep drunk, from drinking too much wine. Shem and Japheth respectfully didn't look, but covered Noah with a cloth. Upon learning about what happened, Noah was so furious and made a terrible oath: "Cursed be Canaan, a servant of servants shall he be unto his brethren."³³⁷⁸

By the 1600s, the Muslims, who read & honored the Bible, followed the later Christians' interpretation of "the curse of Ham," to justify in their minds, the enslaving of 2 to 3 millions from Africa, over the centuries. "Once the Portuguese began trading in Africa, they repeated the biblical explanation for black slavery, which was also used by Muslims. A Portuguese captain from the period wrote about why there were so many slaves available in Africa: "The curse, which, after the Deluge, Noah laid upon his son ... cursing him in this way; that his race should be subject to all the other races of the world."³³⁷⁹

"Noah cursed Canaan, Ham's son, not Ham himself, and a diligent modern scholar who has studied this passage in great detail concluded that the original text does not connect Ham with being African or dark skinned."³³⁸⁰ In earliest Christianity, this passage began to be understood in a new way. The name Ham was misread to mean "dark, brown, black." Even though Roman slavery wasn't determined by actual skin color, the early Christians noted that a lot of slaves from Africa were dark in skin color. Thus, they figured that they must be the descendants of Ham. "By the 300s Christians in what is now Syria wrote this version of the Noah story down. The Bible tale explained all the different shades of human beings. Noah had three sons. Ham gave birth to the cursed Africans, Japheth to the "red" people, and Shem to whites. This is not as clear-cut as it seems, since Japheth's children were associated with Europe and Shem's with what we now call the Middle East." Even Christ's disciples, held the false notion that the conditions someone was born into, in John 9:2, case born blind, reflected their pre-mortal sins. Also, another aspect of certain versions of the pre-existence, though it was rejected during this century, still shows up in later art works in later centuries, in which demons are depicted with dark-skinned bodies, and in which Satan and his fallen angels' bodies are changed and darkened³³⁸¹ during, and after their fall from heaven.³³⁸²

Hence in number four we read that: "If any one says that spiritual beings, in whom divine love grows cold, are covered in grosser bodies like ours and called men, whilst others who reached the summit of evil had received cold and dark bodies, and are called now demons and evil spirits, let him be anathema."³³⁸³ Despite such council that rejected this version of the pre-existence, Christendom, for centuries afterwards, continued to depict the devil and his demons in many art works, with dark colored skins, and even black skins.

The color black "is the one most closely associated with evil and death.... The DEVIL himself was formerly said to materialise out of choice as a black-skinned man, and up until relatively modern times in some remote areas people turned themselves right round on meeting a black man, just in case he was the Devil in disguise."³³⁸⁴ Hence, these later superstitions may be one of the reasons why blacks were dehumanized during days of slavery.

"Conventional medieval thinking saw blacks as the descendants of the accursed biblical figure Ham and therefore subject to eternal slavery, and this was melded with the lore of Cain. Medieval observers could recoil at the suffering of blacks at the same time as they rejoiced at the prospect that black souls were being saved from eternal damnation."³³⁸⁵

By the late 1600s into the late 1700s, the age of Enlightenment, was a time when different ones used reason & free inquiry to challenge the old religious prejudices & discard religious intolerance, to a certain extent in different areas of Europe. "In this atmosphere of reason and free inquiry, it was obvious that the Bible story of Noah and his three sons could not account for the variety of peoples Europeans were meeting all over the globe. Figuring out the real logic for human differences was a perfect challenge for Enlightenment thinkers. They could sweep away medieval fables, gather data from throughout the world, and arrive at shining truth."³³⁸⁶

Art works of the time didn't help the matter either, for one drawn 1180-90, shows Jesus driving out dark skinned devils from a man. Both the suffering man, & the demons inside are dark skinned, suggesting in the medieval mind that black skin is evil.³³⁸⁷ During the 12th-13th centuries, as the white garments & baptismal themes became more distorted, literalized, & crossed over into other areas of world views & became part of religious intolerance prejudices. So also did the color symbolism of earlier centuries become lost in how different ones viewed others, according to their appearances: "Although secondary to the religious and social themes, racism reinforced hostility. As in Islam, racist concepts abounded, and color and appearance were much commented on. Blond, white and blue-eyed are the usual heroes and heroines of medieval literature. What appear like black Carthaginians made the final attack on the martyr Roland, and even so open a man as Marco Polo, [1254-1324] who was entranced by Chinese women, described black Africans as demonic-looking. Caesarius of Heisterbach's book for novices in the Cistercian order several times refers to the Jewish 'stench', which, however, can be washed away by baptism."³³⁸⁸

By the 13th century, as also earlier & later times, negative spiritual traits, & evil deeds, or bad unlucky events, superstitious stories of post-fall from heaven activities of the fallen angels, the Devil & demons. Plus, different sins, personified death, conceit, greed, lust, murder, theft, heresy, evil omens, extreme diseases, & minor illnesses, bad weather, crop failures, & other negative events. Many of these were often associated with, & illustrated with dark colors, black, for devilish traits, & death, red for blood, murder, diseases, & unclean traits. Black or brown for bad, cunning & mischievous underworld creatures, & fallen-angels. But also white for cleansing away of evil, & for purity, purification, & later fragmented versions of earlier Christian protective garment lore, turned further into superstitious versions of protection. White, was still also being associated with good-angelic protection & guidance into the after life realms, but not in every case.³³⁸⁹ The reasons being, are how that the different later Christian fables of different areas of aged Christendom had spread to, had also been changed, & retrogressed by the consequences of their fore-parents' apostasy. These were the natural results of spiritual darkness of the long night of the Dark Ages, the spiritual darkening that took place when there were no real spiritual gifts, except amongst those who did try to live saintly lives. But because there were no more real scriptural producing prophets, & apostles to lighten the spiritual way, & what scriptures the church had were often spoken in the language that the common folk didn't understand, or were able to read, if they could even be allowed to read, the scriptures in many areas being suppressed. Because of these spiritual darkening aspects, the peoples' understandings about the world around them & the negative events that happened to them were interpreted through glass darkly, (1 Cor. 13). Their intellect had been darkened, because their fore-parents' apostasy had caused the ripple effects that got the whole legendization-process going. Ripples of earlier choices & sins done that had turns truths, & sound doctrines into fables. Turned color symbolism of spiritual darkness to be mistakenly associated with racial skin colors, were those with darker skin tones were misjudged as some how being demonic & devilish, just because of their actual skin color. These were the later consequences of those earlier centuries' layers upon layers of spiritual darkening, that caused only more spiritual blindness & darkening in the superstitious minds of later generations that inherited darkened consequences of the retrogression caused by their fore-parents' apostasy. The consequences heaped upon earlier consequences, as each generation continues to with more retrogression away from spiritual light & truths. Thus, in later fables, color symbolism often gets mix up with & contains other faded reminders of earlier beliefs, & fragments of detectable bits of doctrines, blended in with other cultural contaminations, symbolism, lore & customs, when later generations, (like their fore-parents'), understanding was "darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of blindness of their heart: who being past feeling... have not learned Christ" (Eph. 4:10-20), because they'd inherited a legendized version of Christ, & were living in an age of spiritual darkness & the following types of superstitions that blended in fragments of later apostate Christendom, in with paganism & other cultural lore & other later nations' superstitions. Thus, during the 13th century, Cæsarius von Heisterbach (died 1245), Dialogus Miraculorum, has a lot of post-fall from heaven activities of the fallen angels, but in superstitious formats. The devil, sometimes called Old Nick, appears sometimes as a negro. While, in the hour of death, the infidels are tortured by black men.³³⁹⁰

1265–1321, Dante Alighieri, The Divine Comedy: Fallen angels. Uses color symbolism to present evil demons as dark & blackened fallen angels. Shades as spirits of the underworld levels. Darkness & dark areas as bad, evil places to be in the underworld, limbo, in contrast to the white, bright, radiant places & angelic host of paradise.

Many Christian crusaders associated white with purity, while black was associated with sin. The "Ethiopians" with their dark-skinned Africans, were thus vilified as being sinful in nature. "Blackness was associated with sin in the medieval mind, and dark skin suggested that these were particularly demonic people. Some scholars think that this negative view lingered long after the Middle Ages and is one reason why Europeans were later so willing to hold Africans as slaves."³³⁹¹

During the 14th century, earlier & later, fear over black dogs, with red glowing eyes, were often associated with death omens, or proceeding a personified black cloaked death. In other stories, Death was also guised as a tall woman, hooded in black. In the north of England, a black shaggy dog, with red eyes, called Skirker, was a forerunner of Death. In Germany, Scandinavia, Scotland, Wales & England, a personified Death, rode black horses, dressed in black, & sometimes was said in lore to be seen riding across the night sky, followed by wild troops of black dogs, or the black hounds of hell.³³⁹²

These color symbolism, with black being associated to ill omens, negative traits, dangerous demonic creatures, evil, death, doom, & gloom. Plus, with suspicious animals' activities, & superstitious beliefs about black color animals, all were passed down to later centuries in legends, spooky stories, & later Christian lore. Folklore like the Black Annis, cave in the Dane Hills in Leicestershire, where a cannibal hag, with a monstrous cat lived. The custom lasted for a while until about the end of the 18th century. In English lore, stories about black dogs, generally dangerous, are found all over the country. Some stories, such as the ones about Church Grim, say that the black dog is a guard dog type, that guards the churchyards against the Devil & witches. In some lore, a black dog is buried in the north part of the churchyard, its spirit said to guard against the Devil. Thus, black dogs aren't always evil, but associated with evil, even if protecting against evil. But in other lore, & fairy-tales, the Devil also has his own black dogs, as diabolical packs. Thus, the devil sends out his hell-hounds too, to hunt down those attempting to escape fulfilling the devil-pact they made with him. In such English lore, the Devil is black, has horns, & a tail, & holds a long hunting pole. All these can be seen as pre-existence theme turned unto fables, as to the post-fall from heaven devilish activities of the fallen angels. Black dogs were sometimes taken over by the Devil were he haunts with YETH HOUNDS or the Devil's Dandy dogs, & bogey-beast dogs. Other black dogs, in other lore, were thought to be the Devil himself.³³⁹³

With color symbolism & ritualistic garments of the early Christian mysteries fading out into racial skin colors, the later slave trades produced whole new levels of prejudices, & distorted views of the enslaved, that tainted many cultures, be they Islamic kings, Jewish traders, or later Christian planters, politicians, merchants, priests, preachers, & bible thumping fanatics. Many attempted to justify their world views through misinterpreting the bible, even though there's nothing in it to suggest that actual human dark skin is a sign of inferiority. Nor that people from Africa are destined to become slaves. "In fact, Zipporah, Moses's wife, was certainly not Jewish and is described in terms that may suggest that she was a dark-skinned African. But a misreading of a passage in Genesis made the Bible a crucial justification for African slavery."³³⁹⁴

About the 15th century, or at least the setting for the story seems to be about during that time. In Scotland, murder is associated with darkness, such as in the story Song of the Sorrowing Harp. On the east coast of Scotland, in a castle, by the North Sea, lived a lord who had two daughters. The elder one, dark, the younger fair. The dark sister, jealous of the attention a young lord, who came courting, gave to her fair sister, ends up murdering her by pushing her into the raging waves of the sea. The fair sister's body wasn't found until later, after the body drifted far along the Scottish coast out of the lands of her lord-father, to be found months later by a miller. Meanwhile, the dark sister had won the affection of the young lord after they all had mourned the loss of the fair sister. A famous wandering harp player, a minstrel or a medieval singer or musician, was staying with the miller & he helped give the fair blond haired sister a burial. Moved by her beauty, he cut three strands of hair & strung his harp with them. Eventually he left the miller & continued on his way wandering about Scotland, from castle to castle & ended up at the castle where the dark sister was. He was welcomed in & they began to feast, but before the minstrel could play, the golden strings shimmered in the firelight, on their own. Thus, the harp began an eerie song, as the voice of the murdered fair sister sang through the golden threads of her hair, to the horror of the dark sister & others there, & sang farewell to her father, and lady mother, & after a pause, it wailed: "And woe to my sister, who murdered me."³³⁹⁵

15th century color symbolism, with black as a color, was associated with death, murder, & ill-omens, was spread widely, such as in the case with the observance of Innocents' Day, in France & the Netherlands, & other places. It was derived after the beliefs that December 28 was the day of the massacre of the innocent infants at Bethlehem, & thus was taken to be ill-omened. Thus, it was considered as "...a black-letter day, all the year through, the day of the week on which the preceding Innocents' Day fell. Consequently, there was one day in every week on which people abstained from setting out upon a journey and beginning a new task..."³³⁹⁶ Eustache Deschamps mentions a 15th century song that uses color symbolism in clothing, green for amorous passion, blue for fidelity, black for "great sorrow" – "Pour son grant duel s'en vest de noir." Which seems to be consistent for black to be associated, in many places, with negative situations, negative superstitions, etc., but not in every cases, as pointed out too that blue, in other cases was a symbol opposite in meaning in other cases, for instead of being for fidelity, in Holland the blue cloak designated an adulterous woman, & blue was the color of fools, or jesters or clowns during the Middle-Ages.³³⁹⁷

"As the fifteenth century began, the furthest point on the African coast known to Europe was Cape Bojador (in what is today southern Morocco). Common lore suggested that any white man who ventured beyond the Rio de Oro in Cape Bojador would be changed into a black man, as God's punishment for impious prying."³³⁹⁸ As it turned out, in 1445, some mariners passed Cape Bojador, and "...maintained their skin color, and discovered Cape Verde and Senegal."³³⁹⁹

1480, that black clothing was sometimes associated with negative aspects of life & associated with death, terror, & in some settings, intended to cause feelings of horror in the minds of those in negative settings & situations, is suggested by this: During the horrors of the Spanish Inquisition, the underground torture dungeons, lit with flickering torches, that caused the shadows to dance on the walls, must have been set up for psychological effects on the intended victims. To get forced confessions of "heresies," believed in, the executioners used all kinds of tactics, intimidations, threats, & even clothing color-symbolism, especially black. Describing a typical torture chamber: "It was illuminated only by flickering torches, and to increase the horror of the scene, the executioner was clothed in black, his head completely covered with a black cowl, his eyes glittering through the eyeholes."³⁴⁰⁰

During times of torture, tormentors, & religious intolerance of 15th century Spain.³⁴⁰¹ Torquemada, had a

"dirty little secret," his grandmother had been a Jew, but despite this, he still had a dark hatred of the them and Christians with Jewish heritage: "He longed for the "pure blood" of an old Castilian Christian, and believed that Jewish blood was darker in hue as it contaminated the body."³⁴⁰²

Early 16th century, Bartolome de Las Casas, a priest, who defended tolerance, & although he wasn't prejudice, his ideologies were shaped by medieval thinking, concerning races. Thus, attempting to justify enslaving black Africans, while defending the rights of the Indians, the conflict with in him grew during these days of forced Christianizations of different areas that militant Christianity was spreading to. "Las Casas may have been inclined to think of enslaving Africans because of the "curse of Ham," a misreading of the Bible that was current at the time. According to that legend, Africans were meant to be slaves."³⁴⁰³

1608–1674, John Milton, Paradise Lost: War in heaven, fallen angels.³⁴⁰⁴ Milton also uses color symbolism, black symbolic of evil & fallen conditions, brightness as symbolic of good angelic paradisaical conditions.

1627, Druten-Zeitung, illustrates some devils as black hairy creatures, with horns on their head, a tail, but without wings on his back.³⁴⁰⁵

1757–1827, William Blake: Satan and his followers' fall into hell. Blake also used light & dark as symbolical & literal conditions of heaven in contrast to hell.

1775, Johann Friedrich Blumenbach, a German scientist, believed that "the various groupings of peoples were constantly changing, evolving, and that under proper conditions, dark-skinned people could become white."³⁴⁰⁶

In later pre-existence themes & lore, the blackened fallen angels' post-fall from heaven activities are found in folklore stories, legends, & art works that often depict their devilish mischiefs & dark plots in action. Some, like in 18th–19th century depictions, shows their legendized shapes as later traditions have morphed them into black skinned beings, with horns on their heads & wings on their backs, & pointed tails. Some of the devils are described as being stupid, others are clever & cause a lot of havoc. Often depicted naked, they sometimes confront & battle saints, keeping the post-war in heaven going on earth, after their fall. Color symbolism also is seen in different stories like, the Legend of St. Cuthbert, as Thomas Ingoldsby tells us, when: "The Devil came with his devilish company and all the folk of Sir Guy fled, leaving the little heir behind, who was at once seized by Black Jim, the leader of the fiendish company." There's an art work of them eating & drinking at tables, & being a nuisance to St. Cuthbert. Another legend by Ingoldsby is of the saintly courage of St. Medard, who was by the shores of the Red Sea in Egypt, when he saw the black devil, called "Old Nick," same description given earlier, carrying off a bag of lost sinners. Taking compassion on them, the Saint took out a sharp blade & slit an opening in the bag & out escaped the prisoners. "Old Nick is a black-looking fellow at best..."³⁴⁰⁷

James Sloan, Presbyterian minister, 1857: "All Ham's posterity are either black or dark colored, and thus bear upon their countenance the mark of inferiority which God put on their progenitor."³⁴⁰⁸

As Christianity entered the later centuries, the color symbolism, metaphorical types & other aspects eventually started to become blended with actual racial skin colors issues. The numerous early to later Christian art works that depicted the demons as dark skinned³⁴⁰⁹ monstrous looking creatures, eventually influenced how different races with dark skins were looked upon by white Christians. Which ultimately influences how darker skin races were mistreated, looked upon & superstitiously assumed to be evil. Plus, seen as subhuman, had no rights, who would degrade societies. But also it was claimed by White Southerners in the USA, that the “inferior races,” muddled the “pure” white races with “inferior blood lines” through mixed marriages. Or the forced prostitution of black slaves with white slave owners, who produced a mixture of the two races.³⁴¹⁰

In later centuries, Europeans had created a demonology in which the black man is equated with either gross ignorance or unmitigated evil and is to be kept at bay.³⁴¹¹

How these later garment color symbolism, when literalized into racial skin colors, how these views effected a lot of later Christians’ world views concerning the black race is a sad tale. One that shows the retrogression process that corrupted further the later apostate conditions of later Christendom. We see this in their ill-treatment of blacks during the days of slavery. This is illustrated by a former slave in these words: In the Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass, An American Slave, (Boston, New York: Bedford Books, 1993). A black slave, Frederick Douglass describes the conditions in apostate Christendom. He noted some of the worst things professing Christians were doing under slavery. The dehumanization that had set in force the ideology that justified, in the minds of the “Christian” white Masters the beatings, whippings, murders, man-stealings, cradle-plunderings, family breakings, and the adulterous breedings of the black race they had enslaved. They felt justified in doing these terrible deeds because, after all, the blacks, according to this dehumanizing thinking they adopted, weren’t real human beings, but rather, they were sub-human brutes to be treated like any other cattle or personal property.³⁴¹² The sad part about this whole mess is that the dehumanization tactic is an age-old one that has slaughtered and enslaved millions of members of the human family. The most shocking jolt that Douglass gave to his readers & listeners were to jolt them back to the reality and the hypocritical state that slave holding “Christianity” was in during his time. After learning to read and write, he did exactly what the Masters feared members of the black race would do.³⁴¹³ Hence, they feared that if their slaves, or the black race should expand their mental horizons through learning to read and write, they would soon endanger the whole hypocritical system of slavery. And this is exactly what happened, Douglass awakened within himself new horizons of knowledge that had been forcibly suppressed by his Masters who sought to keep him, and his fellow slaves in the darkness of ignorance, for “literacy was power.”³⁴¹⁴ It was a ray of hope in the darkness, showing the way to freedom! It was a candle in the window of a friend of a friend. Consequently, as Douglass increased his skills in reading, writing, and speaking, his words were added to the fuel that fired the light that exposed the truth about the horrors and dehumanization effects of slavery. Moreover, especially as it was being practiced & justified by so-called “Christian” whites of the American land.

Furthermore, Douglass wrote: “What I have said respecting and against religion, I mean strictly to apply to the slaveholding religion of this land, and with no possible reference to Christianity proper; for, between the Christianity of this land, and the Christianity of Christ, I recognize the widest possible difference--so wide, that to receive the one as good, pure, and holy, is of necessity to reject the other as bad, corrupt, and wicked. To be the friend of the one, is of necessity to be the enemy of the other. I love the pure, peaceable, and impartial Christianity of Christ: I therefore hate the corrupt, slaveholding, women-whipping, cradle-plundering, partial and hypocritical Christianity of this land. Indeed, I can see no reason, but the most deceitful one, for calling the religion of this land Christianity. I look upon it as the climax of all misnomers, the boldest of all frauds, and the grossest of all libels. Never was there a clearer case of “stealing the livery of the court of heaven to serve the devil in.” I am filled with unutterable loathing when I contemplate the religious pomp and show, together with the horrible inconsistencies, which every where surround me. We have men-stealers for ministers, women-whippers for missionaries, and cradle-plunderers for church members. The man who wields the blood-clotted cowskin during the week fills the pulpit on Sunday, and claims to be a minister of the meek and lowly Jesus. The man who robs me of my earnings at the end of each week meets me as a class-leader on Sunday morning, to show me the way of life, and the path of salvation. He who sells my sister, for purposes of prostitution, stands forth as the pious advocate of purity. He who proclaims it a religious duty to read the Bible denies me the right to learning to read the name of the God who made me. He who is the religious advocate of marriage robs whole millions of its sacred influence, and leaves them to the ravages of wholesale pollution. The warm defender of the sacredness of the family relation is the same that scatters whole families--sundering husbands and wives, parents and children, sisters and brothers,--leaving the hut vacant, and the hearth desolate. We see the thief preaching against theft, and the adulterer against adultery. We have men sold to build churches, women sold to support the gospel, and babes sold to purchases of Bibles for the poor heathen! all for the glory of God and the good of souls! The slave auctioneer’s bell and the church-going bell chime in with each other, and the bitter cries of the heart-broken slave are drowned in the religious shouts of his pious master. Revivals of religion and revivals in slave-trade go hand in hand together. The slave prison and the church stand near each other. The clanking of fetters and the rattling of chains in the prison, and the pious psalm and solemn prayer in the church, may be heard at the same time. The dealers in the bodies and souls of men erect their stand in the presence of the pulpit, and they mutually help each other. The dealer gives his blood-stained gold to support the pulpit, in return, covers his infernal business with the garb of Christianity. Here we have religion and robbery the allies of each other--devils dressed in angels’ robes, and hell presenting the semblance of paradise.” [After citing from Matthew 23; Luke 11:39-52, about Christ’s bold comments to and about the hypocritical practices of the ancient scribes and Pharisees, Douglass continues:] “Dark and terrible as is this picture, I hold it to be strictly true of the overwhelming mass of professed Christians in America. . . . They would be shocked at the proposition of fellowshiping a sheep-stealer; and at the same time they hug to their communion a man-stealer, and brand me with being an infidel, if I find fault with them for it. . . . They love the heathen on the other side of the globe. They can pray for him, pay money to have the Bible put into his hand, and missionaries to instruct him; while they despise and totally neglect the heathen at their own doors.” (Frederick Douglass, Lynn, Mass., April 28, 1845).³⁴¹⁵

Slavery, notes Douglass, is hostile to family life. This was one of the dehumanizing effects that slavery had upon people, the splitting up of families, many of which were products of different Masters who had sex with their own female slaves. The “product” of such unions were children still considered “sub-human” slaves, even though their lineage was part of the so-called “superior” white race. Hence, it was shocking for me to learn that the Masters were abusing, beating, thrashing, and working to death, their own children! Furthermore, that they sold their own children like “cattle.” This was the type of world that Douglass was born into. Watching, helplessly, as different families were split up, sold, or moved from place to place, according to the desires of the Masters.

Where were human law and equal rights under God, as promised by the Constitution? The “sub-humans” didn’t have human rights, according to the thinking of many of the colonists, for in as much as the Blacks, the Indians, and the poor were considered “sub-humans” or not even “human” at all, there were no equal rights for them. Hence, this is what Douglas and others began to fight for, once they realized through the written word, that which was being suppressed from their minds they began to fight against this dehumanization ideology with the ideology that blacks, Indians, and others were humans too. And if humans, entitled to the same rights as the rest of humanity. After he learned to read, a whole new world opened up for him. And as noted in the book, some of the anti-slave writings began to shape his thinking. Literacy was the power that helped shape his skills to relate, in talks, what he and other slaves had experienced. Hence, the more well read he became, the more he was able to articulate the horrors of slavery.³⁴¹⁶

I have often asked myself: How did many of the early white Colonists justify rebelling, & fighting for their rights against the British, could turn around and reasonably justify slavery? It was saddening to learn that the same thing that had happened in early American history was the same type of thing that later happened in Nazi Germany, that of the dehumanization of those races which another race wanted to control and enslave.³⁴¹⁷ Slavery was the dehumanization of humans, and Douglas knew this, that’s why he wanted to humanize blacks³⁴¹⁸ so that the rest of humanity would see that they were humans with histories too! The dehumanization of different races has been the justification behind those seeking to enslave, slaughter, and take away the rights of the “sub-humans.” We see this all throughout history on up even to our own day in time with the ethnic cleansing programs of some of the wicked leaders in Asia Minor.

A good case in point, which parallels the slavery issue, was the dehumanization of different races under Adolf Hitler’s New Order. Hitler and many of his early followers derived a lot of their ideology from the earlier militant Knighthood Orders, and from other occult Orders.³⁴¹⁹ The “New Order” in Germany also derived its concepts of the “Aryan” super-human white race from the occult teachings and works of Madame Helena Petrovna Blavatsky (1831-1891). In Germany, they blended in her concepts with many others found in secret German Orders. Her works: Isis Unveiled, and *The Secret Doctrine*³⁴²⁰ were accepted by many German mystics and occultists before, and during World Wars 1 & 2.³⁴²¹

Blavatsky’s writings influenced the occult militant writings of the Jorg Lanz von Liebenfels. His racialist, and occult Ariosophical movement, the esoteric Order of New Templars, in turn, influenced Hitler’s world views. Hence, his Ostara impressed and influenced Hitler, Heinrich Himmler, Rudolf Hess,³⁴²² and many other early Nazi leaders.³⁴²³ In Ostara, Lanz presents world history as being a struggle between the white races and the darker skin races. The Jews, he wrote, were considered to be sub-human, hence, they were, he demanded, to be exterminated. The darker skin races were also dehumanized too, thus, the Nazi felt justified in mass murdering and enslaving these “sub-human” races.³⁴²⁴

Furthermore, it is the same tactic that the Romans used to slaughter³⁴²⁵ and enslave the early Christians.³⁴²⁶ Just as it was the same type of tactic that later Christian Knights and Crusaders used to justify going to war against the “infidels” among the Moors, and other Islamic invaders,³⁴²⁷ Which in turn, was the same type of dehumanization which fanatical extremist among the Islamic race have used to justify terrorism.³⁴²⁸ It may have been the same type of justification that Romans used to expose their children to the elements³⁴²⁹ until they died too!³⁴³⁰

However, why hadn’t the “Christian” whites among the colonists remembered what had happened in historic Christendom? How that the early Christians were hunted, enslaved, slaughtered, thrashed, burned, and eaten by lions, as thousands of Romans watched?³⁴³¹

GARMENT COLOR SYMBOLISM FADES OFF INTO SYMBOLIC CLOTHING COLORS, SYMBOLS ON CLOTHES, & OTHER MARKINGS, AS STATUS SYMBOLS IN LATER CHRISTIAN SOCIETIES

Christ said to the scribes & Pharisees that they were like unto whited sepulchres, that appear to be beautiful outwardly, but were unclean inwardly, because of their hypocrisy (Matthew 23:27-28). Christ, in a parable about the wedding of a King’s son, said to those not properly dressed in a wedding garment, were to be cast into outer darkness, (Matt. 22:11-14). Thus, not clothed in righteousness, (white clothing symbolic of righteousness, Rev. 19:7-9, 14), they were marked as being unworthy. While the Saints at Sardis, “they shall walk with me in white: for they are worthy” (Rev.3:2, 4). For they needed to have clothes that were without spots, or wrinkles, holy clothing, without blemishes, by putting on the whole protective armor of God, clothed & thus armed with truth, righteousness, peace, faith, salvation, the word of God, prayer, & perseverance, (Ephesians 5:26-27, 6:10-19). Cause they didn’t want to be clothed in the spotted garments (Jude 12, 23-24). They needed to be profitable servants, doing the works of righteousness, feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, etc., for though they might be dressed in purple, & fine linen, (purple being a royal color clothing symbol),³⁴³² like the rich man, in another parable. If they didn’t feed the poor, & do their Christian duties, they would find themselves in hell, when they died, (Matthew 25:29-46, Luke 16:19-26). They could be stripped or have taken away from them what talents they had, & cast into outer darkness (Matthew 25:14-30).

30-100, Clement of Rome, Apostolic Father, cites an unknown, or perhaps now lost passage attributed to Ezekiel: “Repent, O house of Israel, from your sins from the earth to heaven, and though they be red like scarlet and black as ashes, and you turn to me with your whole souls and say; Father, hearken to us as to the holy people.”³⁴³³ (See also: Isa. 1:15-20, 59:1-4, 61:1-3, 10).

160 A.D., The Shepherd of Hermas, at one time canonical & believed to be scripture by many early Christians, has this passage: “Here now, said he, the name of those women, which were clothed with the black garment. Of these, four are the principle: the first Perfidiousness; [literary deceitfulness; untrustworthiness] the second, Incontinence; [lacking self-restraint, uncontrolled] the third, Infidelity; [sexually unfaithful, or lack of religious faith] the fourth, Pleasure.” (Similitude IX:144). Other negative traits, associated with women clothed in black garments are Sadness, Malice, Lust, Anger, Lying, Foolishness, Pride, and Hatred, those clothed in such blackness would not enter the kingdom of God, (verse 145).³⁴³⁴ In later centuries, about the 13th century, one of the negative traits for the Devil was believed to be self-conceit. A depiction of the devil of conceit on the tail end of a dress, as it drags along the floor, behind a haughty conceited woman, is seen by a clergyman, who sees it on the dress of a fashionable lady, (Isa.3:16-26, Proverbs 16:2, 5, 18).³⁴³⁵

A summation of Hermas on color garment symbolism: 12 angels, or maidens dressed in white linen garments, carry various color stones through a gate, & that became white. For no stone is to be used if not whitened. The type is that the stones represent the sons & daughters of God, & those unworthy are rejected & not allowed through the gate. They, however could be cleansed through repentance, or discarded through entrenched wickedness. 12 seductive maidens, dressed in black, carry away the rejected ones. Those who are accepted are clothed in white linen garments, by the maidens dressed in white linen, that represent purity. Those not dressed in white, could not enter into the Kingdom of God. To do so, they have to be in possession of different attributes of purity. The white linen garments represent also God's power & authority, which must be received, along with "the name." Some, that go through the gate through Christ, & are clothed in white, are later seduced by the maidens dressed in black, & thus put off the white linen garments & power. While those who endure to the end, & resist the black dressed maidens, & don't give into their beauty, & are not deceived by them, remain in the tower, or in the Kingdom of God. But those who repent & reject the black dressed maidens, may reenter. There are four maidens that represent the positive traits of their whiteness: Faith, Temperance, Power, & Longsuffering. Eight others: Simplicity, Guilelessness, Holiness, Joyfulness, Truth, Understanding, Concord, & Love. The black dressed ones: Unbelief, Impurity, Disobedience, and Deceit. Eight others: Grief, Wickedness, Licentiousness, Bitterness, Lying, Foolishness, Evil speaking, & Hate. There is also hope for those who were the righteous before the Christian era. Their spirits are preached to, by those who went down to them, to minister, & preached to them. They go down into the water with them, & gave them the seal, or water baptism, (baptism for the dead). Plus, they also are supplied the white linen garments by the maidens dressed in white. Hermas lists the qualities, that all must have to become like the Master, to be deified, & expounds on the symbolism of the "white linen garments."³⁴³⁶

In light of this old 2nd century scripture, the Shepherd of Hermas, it's interesting to note that in the movie, Legend, (1985), starring Tom Cruise, as Jack, & Mia Sara, as Princess Lily. That the 'Lord of Darkness,' (starring Tim Curry), tempts the Princess with flashy jewelry, & other temptations. At first, Lily is dressed in a white dress, perhaps symbolic of her 'innocence.' But, because during her encounter with white unicorns, (that represent "absolute purity," that shouldn't even be looked at, and especially not touched, which was her "sin," she reached out & touched one). Thus, her 'sin' starts to change her, & the world around her, as it grew darker & starts an ice age. The change upon her, could be symbolized by her being changed from being in a white dress, to a ragged gray dress. The Lord of Darkness seeks to demonize her even further, "make her one of us," as suggested by one his advisors in the darkness. Thus, they tempt her, with shiny jewelry, seeing if she will fall for other temptations. Of which if she gives into, will add to her earlier "sin," and take her down towards further blackness. This, as they continue to attempt to bring about her eventual complete blackening to demonification. This is perhaps symbolized by her further shading from grey to being clothed in a black gown, that she is changed into, with black-lip-stick on her lips. She is being changed into becoming like those of the darkness, so that she will become the bride of darkness, to the Lord of Darkness. Thus, during her descent towards becoming blackened, or as the advisor says again in the darkness: "Make her one of us." This process seems to be symbolized by her watching, while dressed in her ragged gray dress, a dancer, dressed in black. They both start to dance together, & eventually she is changed into the black dressed dancer, which is no longer visible. As though she had become the black dressed dancer herself. Perhaps this is a legendized reminders of these earlier ritualistic garment color symbolism, that eventually became legends.³⁴³⁷ Those of the darkness, thus wanted to change her into becoming like unto the blackened "demons" & creatures, that the legendary Lord of Darkness liked to surround himself with & command. Such as a goblin "demon" with a "black heart," "black as pitch." They sought her demonification, the reversal of deification, perhaps represented here as her change from white clothing, to gray, then black. But because she resists the Lord of Darkness, & betrays him, & as the good little folks, team up, to reflect sun light down into his domain. The sun light, that the Lord of Darkness admits will destroy him, shines on him, & her sins are being countered. Jack cuts off the hand of Lord of Darkness, he falls into the stars, & at last, becomes as if shooting stars.³⁴³⁸ This might be symbolic of the falling angels, as stars falling, as often seen in early to later Christian art too. The Lord of Darkness being the chief of the fallen angels, was blackened during his & their fall.³⁴³⁹ Thus, the sun light, he seeks to hid himself from, like in also Walt Disney's Fantasia, (1941): For when the light of the morning sun starts to light up the darkness of the night, the Lord of Darkness cringes. Then, as the light increases, the darkness leaves, & all the ghostly & underworld creatures of the night, go back to their different haunts in grave yards, & under water, etc.³⁴⁴⁰

In lore, was this one way to blacken one's clothing, if not symbolically, that of letting black demons, hitch rides on the back of them, as they dragged along in the dirt? Is this why in much later centuries, flags weren't to touch the ground? For also in soiling a flag, such as a white one, & or trampling on it, with dirty soiled feet, or shoes. Was this like how one might have soiled their feet, & thus symbolically "soiled" their souls, by going down the left-hand path towards the darkness of demonization? Being blackened by unrepentant bad habitual sinful life styles, on the path that goes down towards the black & dark colored demons? Thus also becoming like them, developing their negative traits in one's self? Whatever might have been the symbolical carry over, if at all. By letting the flag drag along the dirty ground, this was symbolic of desecrating it, & the group, or nation it represented.³⁴⁴¹

200, or later, Gnostic Christian text, perhaps in Greek, translated into Coptic, anonymous treatise, Exegesis on the Soul, ("Expository Treatise on the Soul"), from The Nag Hammadi Library. A summation of those types is as follows. In it, a number of garment types are presented according to ancient Christian ritualistic clothing imagery & metaphorical illustrations. Presented in Gnostic terminology, & although thought to be heretical by other early Christians. It still contains good illustrations that encourages the reader to repent & live a good moral life, & avoid polluting & staining one's soul (garments), with habitual unrepentant sins. It's the story of a female spirit that descends from the Gnostic version of a pre-existence to fall into a mortal body. The garment types used are common to other early Christian sects, & are to teach the concepts about what happens to the spirit, clothed in a mortal body. How it passing through the temptations of life, becoming filthy or polluted through sins, but being repentant, is rescued from its fallen state, by the First Born, (Christ in the pre-existence was the First Born). And, like dirty laundry needs to be washed, the once adulterous but repentant women, who had defiled herself like a prostitute, upon repenting, she is cleansed by baptism & restored to her former state of glory. Or, returns to glory, going back to where she came from, to then be raised, perhaps by hand & wrist clasps, (as in other accounts & art works), or draw up into heaven to return back to the Father & be deified again. Thus, the concept of her being stripped naked, symbolic of being stripped of her prostitution-negative traits, returning to the naked innocence like on the day she was born. Her spirit having been clothed in a mortal body, had gone the ways of those who'd given her the negative traits, seemingly symbolized by what she'd taken in exchange for being their prostitute: "It was they who gave me my bread and my water and my garments and my clothes and my wine and my oil and everything I needed.” (Like Ezekiel 16, from which this treatise seems inspired from, in part, in which Jerusalem is likened unto a prostitute that has broken her marriage oath & covenant. Doing so even, after being once found polluted & bloody, but then helped by the Lord: Washed, anointed with oil, found naked & thus clothed upon in fine linen, symbolic of being perfected, adorned in comeliness, & adorned in beautifully righteousness, again. But then (Jerusalem, like other wicked cities), had fallen back to put on the negative traits again, symbolic of the garments of a harlot. Therefore, after being shamed & stripped of these negative traits, or polluted garments, there was still the hope & chance that she, (Jerusalem), like others, will return to their former state, & not continue on being a marriage oath & covenant breaker, (Ezek. 16). In like manners, the female soul had become defiled in the flesh, (Gnostic anti-matter concept). Been dressed in the negative traits like a harlot, & thought that she needs all the external nonsense surrounding the body, the wine, oil, clothing, seemingly symbolic of the negative traits of being trapped, or clothed in a body, then falling for the sins of the world. Even though her spirit had once come from the divine realm of the Father. This treatise being a type of what happens in general to spirits that fall from the pre-existence into each their own defiled bodies, also offers the traditional way back. But not without repentance, and the garment type cleansing process. A purification of the soul, a realization of shame, weeping before the Father for him to help her by sending the First Born, the rescue her & for helping her with sincere repentance. Not appearing to repent, to then go back defiling herself by going back to her sinful adulterous ways, or the black garments of sin. But of getting back on the straits, the right path, that’s the way back. Being baptized to cleanse the external pollution, like garments, when dirty are put into water & turned about until their dirt is removed, they become clean. So like this cleansing of the garments, is also the cleansing of the soul, for it too regains the newness of her former nature and to turn her back again. That is baptism. Thus, through repentance and this purification ritual, this treatise teaches, that her soul will be able to return to the Father, and so like wise will all those too, who repent. The promise is given that even if your sins extend from earth to heaven, and if they become red like scarlet and blacker than sackcloth, still, despite this, if you return to the Lord with all your soul, meaning that if you are willing to repent & do all you can to not go back to wearing the black clothing of sins. But will say to the Father, ‘I will heed you as a holy people.’ Then you will be saved.³⁴⁴²

So their garments needed to be whitened & washed, made white in the atonement blood of Christ, the sacrificial Lamb, (Rev. 7:14). The shame of their nakedness gone, because they were anointed & clothed in white raiment, (Rev. 3:18, 1:5, 13-14, 5:9, 6:11, 19:8, 14, 22:11-12). Note the black color garment symbolism has negative traits, in contrast to white unspotted garments. Such garment types as these set the stages for later Christian clothing symbolism in the early to later Christian mysteries, that passed into vestments for clerical & royal rankings, & status levels in early to later Christian communities.

Unspotted, the concept continued on into 20th century masses for the living & the dead. The idea of the forgiveness of sin is expressed as follows: “Accept, O Holy Father, Almighty and Eternal God, this unspotted Host, which I, they unworthy servant, offer unto Thee,... [for] all faithful Christians, both living and dead; that it may avail both me and them unto life everlasting....”³⁴⁴³

Isaiah 61:1-3, 10, (KJV), mentions the anointing oil, liberation of the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound, & “...the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness...” Then in verse 10: “I will greatly rejoice in the LORD, my souls shall be joyful in my God; for he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels.” Rev. 19:7-9, 14.

Thascius Cyprian, 200-258, the bishop of Carthage, wrote: “Let us, then, who in baptism have both died and been buried in respect of the carnal sins of the old man, who have risen again with Christ in the heavenly regeneration, both think upon and do the things which are Christ’s.” (ANF, 5:495). The imagery & types of baptism as being symbolic of putting off, like old clothing, the old man of sin, or separating from (symbolically dying as to the old ways of sin). Plus, becoming alive again, (symbolic of a new life of righteousness, like putting on the white pure spotless robes in baptism), was all part of the whole baptismal ritualistic drama & ordinance.

During the 4th century, different types of garment imagery, types, & deification themes & symbols were blended in with the baptismal rites. New converts were decorated with a crown, & a white robe. (Crowns were often symbolical of deification, but in these cases they were indicative of their victory over the world and their lusts, & the white robe, represented their acquired innocence). In other cases, & customs, in the mouth of those baptized was put salt. Probably white salt, a symbol of purity, & in this case wisdom too. Plus, “everywhere a double anointing was administered” The baptismal initiates returned home, adorned with crowns and arrayed in white garments.³⁴⁴⁴

315-386, Cyril of Jerusalem, Archbishop, Procatechesis, or, Prologue to the Catechetical Lectures of our holy father, Cyril, Archbishop of Jerusalem, verses 3-6. (See: Matthew 22:1-13, Rev. 19:7-9, 14, Eph. 4:22-24, 5:27, Rom. 13:12, Psa. 132:9, Isa. 1:15-19, 11:5, 61:1-3, 10). Cyril uses the parable of Jesus in Matthew 22:1-13, to point out the symbolism of the ritualistic white garment in the early Christian mysteries he starts to lecture on. How that different types of garments, their conditions, types, colors, fashions, were types of being either worthy or unworthy, to either be let in the kingdom of God, or not let in & even cast in to outer darkness, for not being worthy, but still stained with sins. (Some italics added, some in original): Cyril: 3: “A certain man in the Gospels once pried into the marriage feasts, and took an unbecoming garment, and came in, sat down, and ate: for the bridegroom permitted it. But when he saw them all clad in white, he ought to have assumed a garment of the same kind himself: whereas he partook of the like food, but was unlike them in fashion and in purpose. The bridegroom, however, though bountiful, was not undiscerning: and in going round to each of the guests and observing them (for his care was not for their eating, but for their seemly behavior), he saw a stranger not having on a wedding garment, and said to him, Friend, how camest thou in hither? In what a color! With what a conscience! What though the door-keeper forbade thee not, because of the bountifulness of the entertainer? what though thou wert ignorant in what fashion thou shouldst come in to the banquet?—thou didst come in, and didst see the glittering fashions of the guests: shouldst thou not have been taught even by what was before thine eyes? Shouldst thou not have retired in good season, that thou mightest enter in good season again? But now thou hast come in unseasonably, to be unseasonably cast out. So he commands the servants, Bind his feet, which daringly intruded: bind his hands, which knew not how to put a bright garment around him: and cast him into the outer darkness; for he is unworthy of the wedding torches. Thou seest what happened to that man: make thine own condition safe. 4. For we, the ministers of Christ, have admitted every one, and occupying, as it were, the place of door-keepers we left the door open: and possibly thou didst enter with thy soul bemired with sins, and with a will defiled.... If the fashion of thy soul is avarice, put on another fashion and come in. Put off thy former fashion, cloak it not up. Put off, I pray thee, fornication and uncleanness, and put on the brightest robe of chastity. This charge I give thee, before Jesus the Bridegroom of souls come in and see their fashions. A long notice is allowed thee; thou hast forty days for repentance: thou hast full opportunity both to put off, and wash, and to put on and enter. But if thou persist in an evil purpose, the speaker is blameless, but thou must not look for the grace: for the water will receive, but the Spirit will not accept thee. If any one is conscious of his wound, let him take the salve; if any has fallen, let him arise. Let there be no Simon [Acts 8:5–24] among you, no hypocrisy,...” [Cyril urges them not to go into learning the mysteries with idle curiosity, or other ill reasons, or with an evil purpose. They were to put off sin, & evil intent, even symbolically & ritualistically “die” or separate themselves from sin.] “...For thou hast heard the Apostle say, Dead indeed unto sin, but living unto righteousness. Die to thy sins, and live to righteousness, live from this very day....” [The white garment of righteousness, is also a symbol deification, which is included in Cyril’s lectures on the Mysteries, for further on he lectured:] “...though a miserable man, thou receivest one of God’s titles.... the Psalmist, [Psa.82] because men are to receive a title of God, spoke thus in the person of God: I said, Ye are Gods, and are all sons of the Most High. But beware lest thou have the title of “faithful,” but the will of the faithless.... Were it thy wedding-day before thee, wouldest thou not have disregarded all else, and set about the preparation for the feast?...”³⁴⁴⁵ Did they live righteously or not, to be clothed in whiteness of righteousness, or blackness of sin & other negative traits? Such was the point of Cyril’s symbolical color garment types.

641, September, in the ambo of St. Sophia, ‘the Great Church,’ Constans II was crowned by Patriarch of Constantinople, as co-emperor, with his uncle Heraklonas, who had him crowned. As was the religious-state garment customs, & coronation ceremonies in the Byzantine era, as earlier, & later. It was on church-state occasions, that great attention was paid to the symbolical & ceremonial use of clothing, to the insignia of office, & to symbolical color & gesture: “Robing and disrobing ceremonies opened and closed all processions. The imperial crown, orb, sceptre, and akakia, the ‘pouch of dust’ symbolizing mortality, were always given prominence. The wearing of the purple was reserved for the Emperor and, in iconography, for Christ and the Virgin Mary, Byzantine body language stressed the idea of agalma or ‘statuesque calm’.”³⁴⁴⁶

In some cases, in later centuries, Holy men were forbidden to wear silk or colorful decorations, which were believed to distract them from their focus to advance towards spiritual Christian moral perfection. Other temptations were believed could be used by dark demons to distract them in their spiritual callings & duties. However, the rules of their holy order also didn’t stop radicals, & renegades, who in the name of holiness, & being invested & dressed in the garb of holy orders, continued to take advantage of their status to cloak their quest for power, mischievousness, & wicked sometimes hidden life styles.³⁴⁴⁷

In later Christian plays, with biblical themes, and knights’ tales, a Lady has her Knight put on a dark monstrous horned head costume, to guise himself as

“evil,” in order to rescue his horse from devils.³⁴⁴⁸ Dark clothing, during the different plays of the middle ages, and later, were sometimes symbolic of evil, of villains and demons.³⁴⁴⁹

Symbols on garments, robes, sashes, & their colors, were reminders, in ancient times, of oaths taken to do good, to obey God & religious, or civic leaders, depending on the historical settings. There were also insignias in clothing as symbols of ranks: Ranks of royalty; ranks in the military, rank symbolism to distinguish clerical positions of power & authority. Thus, the passing on of a clothing item, in some cases more ceremonial, with a symbol of the rank of the office, was the passing on of “the mantle of authority,” (the passing of Elijah’s cloak (his mantle) to Elisha (2 Kings 2:13). Or the stripping of Aaron’s garment to be passed on to Eleazar, (Numbers 20:26–28, Exod. 28:2, 29:29). In military traditions, a person can be “stripped of rank,” with the removing of their cloth rank symbol, or can be promoted, by the removing of the old rank, with the new rank insignia sowed in, or otherwise added. This also happened in the early Christian mysteries, as noted, that of taking off old clothing to have new white clothing added, or being clothed upon.³⁴⁵⁰

800 c., in a Mosaic, as if suggesting the mantle of authority or investment to power passed from St. Peter to Pope Leo III (Clerical powers), & Charles the Great, (Civic), St Peter confers the pallium (a long white cloth sash with red cross symbols along it), by handing it down with his right hand to Pope Leo III, and the Roman standard, is handed down with his left hand to Charles the Great. Peter clothing is white, he has a sash with a cross symbol visible, and robes on with a L symbol down near his lower white robe section by his right leg. He is sitting, as if on a throne. The Latin reads under the scene: BEATE-PETRE- DONAS VITA-LEON-PP-E-BICTORIA- CARVLO-REG-DONAS.³⁴⁵¹

968, Liudprand, an ambassador from Italy, for King Otto I (the Great, reigned 961–73), went to Constantinople, & in attempting to get some Byzantine Greek purple (reserved color for royalty), silk through their ancient version of “customs,” he tried to use his status as an Ambassador to retain the material. He was told that he was forbidden to take such a distinction of dress out, to which Liudprand complained that in Italy, their lowest prostitutes and fortune-tellers wear the color purple. To Otto I, he wrote how the Byzantines had judged all Italians, & others as “...unworthy to go about clothed in this way.” He complained & vilified the Byzantines as liars, idlers, & “effeminate,” (or of a man, having characteristics regarded as typical of a woman), “...should go about in purple, while our heroes, strong men trained to war, full of faith and charity, servants of God, filled with all virtues, many not! If this is not an insult, what is?”³⁴⁵²

1031, in the Liber Vitae of New Minster, a white cloth, or robe is about to be given to Queen Ælghyfu (Emma), from an angel, while Canute the Great is being crowned by an angel, as if to symbolize their advancing in royal rank & their coronation. This is depicted happening, while they both place a golden cross on the altar of Winchester Abbey.³⁴⁵³

On 11th century Christian Crusades’ pure white cotton shirts were cloth crosses, symbolic of how they’d devoted themselves to the struggle to cleanse, & rid the holy land of the “enemies” of Christendom. These “enemies,” the Muslim-Moors, in order to justify in the Crusaders’ minds their blood spilt & killed, were sometimes depicted as dark skinned horned-devils. Thus, color symbolism associated with demons depicted as black skinned monstrous creatures, was used in art works & manuscripts to vilify the Moors, in order to “justify” warring against them, just as St. Michael, (popular with Knighthood themes), warred against the fallen angels, blackened during their fall from heaven. Other Crusaders weren't content with cross cloth symbols on their clothing & branded or tattooed themselves with the symbol of the ir mission.³⁴⁵⁴

1215, a battery of laws, more thought policing, prohibited relations between the Jews and Christians, employment of Christian servants & the building of new synagogues was prohibited, as were Jews from holding public office. "Imitating Islam on this point, they [the Jews] were also to be visible: 'Jews and Saracens [or Muslims] of either sex ... should wear clothing to distinguish them from Christians, and not go out in public on Easter.'"³⁴⁵⁵ With Easter often being the day for Whitesunday, the tradition that kept alive the wearing of white garments, or white baptismal robes,³⁴⁵⁶ we might ask these questions! Why & how did the later Christians of this time & area also not keep in mind more of the charitable aspects of these traditions? How that the white garments or white baptismal robes, were reminders to do good, to keep their baptismal vows, to be clean from sins? Certainly having love & charity for all, was part of that earlier Christian training & that physical reminder in these later clothing symbolism. Unfortunately, as with other good things of earlier Christianity, such good symbolism must have gotten lost in later centuries as the literalizing of color symbolism became racial, & when it faded off & got perverted in later apostate versions of these types of theocratic laws of intolerant clothing symbolism & marks of identifications of these later types.

14th century France developed their own color garment symbolism, that included different colors to signify different ranks in societies & separated the people accordingly. Green was the privilege color of queens and princesses, whereas white had been in previous ages. "Through all the ranks of society a severe hierarchy of material and colour kept classes apart, and gave to each estate or rank an outward distinction, which preserved and exalted the feeling of dignity."³⁴⁵⁷

During 15th century France, during the first years of the war between the Armagnacs and the Burgundians, (1415–22), a diversity of outward signs, badges, colors, & party cries included such things as how in Paris, a purple hood with the cross of Saint Andrews was worn. Also, white hoods, then violet ones were worn. Even the priests, women & children wore these distinctive signs, and others, & the images of saints were decorated with them. Such things, plus more, were to signify their party sentiments and of fidelity towards their side of the political-religious issues of the day.³⁴⁵⁸

About the mid to later 15th c., Spain, there was a Christian regulation that required Jews & Muslims to wear an insignia of their persuasion on their clothing.³⁴⁵⁹ As religious intolerance infested Spain, the Catholic Christians there came up with laws like the Laws of Valladolid, 1412, that, among other harsh laws, forced the Jews to wear red badges identifying their lineage. They were also to wear the badge on their shoulder during the day time. During the Cortes or gathering, in Toledo, 1480, they thought that these laws should be enforced. The same requirement was forced on the Jews, plus worse, in Nazi Germany, 1930s –1945.³⁴⁶⁰

1669, until that year, Jews were not allowed to live in Berlin, Germany at all, they couldn't work in a long list of occupations, except for medicine, & they were made to wear a yellow star on their clothing. By 1709, only the rich Jews could buy their way into not having to wear the yellow stars to identify themselves as Jews, for it cost them an equivalent of a modern amount of about $160,000 each, to be able to take off the yellow star. However, in 1740, when Frederick II, became the ruler of

Prussia, he announced that "all religions must be tolerated".³⁴⁶¹

SYMBOLS ON GARMENTS & CLOTHING: REMINDERS TO DO GOOD – MARKS & SYMBOLS FOR ALLEGED CRIMES

Early Christian clothing, sometimes have different symbols on them that are reminders of different concepts in historic Christianity. The symbols said something good about the person, or marked them as someone to watch out for, which might be where we get the later expressions "he's a marked man." Some symbols were reminders to do good, to keep the oaths & vows of initiations in the early to later Christian mysteries, or baptismal covenants & vows made. Other symbols were ones of criminality, accomplishments, ranks, clerical & political authority, trade-guilds, & warnings about diseased infested ones to keep away from. While other symbols in clothing said that one had gone on, or was going on a pilgrimage, such as the cross symbols for pilgrimages to the holy land, or crusades, & the cockleshells for returning from a pilgrimage from Santiago Spain, during the pilgrimages of the Middle Ages. As noted earlier, during Christ's world wide trek as the Messenger of the Covenant, the teacher of the mysteries, Christ is sometime depicted as a pilgrim with the cockleshell on his pouch, symbolic in some cases, of having gone over seas, or over water.³⁴⁶²

About the 11th century, those inspired by the sermons of different religious leaders to go on crusades, some would take snippets of red cloth, that were crossed and pinned on the breasts of the many who vowed to "take the cross."³⁴⁶³ This was one of the symbols for the crusaders. During the middle ages, "the released heretic, [on his clothing to mark his identity] a double cross."³⁴⁶⁴

1215, before this time & onwards, garment themes turning legendized, Christians' discriminations against Jews, Muslims, heretics, & "sinners," & others, had become "legal" for them to use clothing symbolism to discriminate in areas where laws were set up against them. Laws designed to separate Christians from others grew more severe. As clothing in early Christian rituals had become symbolic for good or bad, depending on what color, & if they were new, soiled, or washed, etc. This symbolism carried over into the unfortunate ways that later Christians looked upon outsiders, as if they were bad, just for being non-Christians. Thus, as with "sinners," Christians insisted that Jews & Muslims should also wear distinctive clothing that identified who they were.³⁴⁶⁵

The Knight Templars wore tight sheepskin breeches under their outer clothing as a symbol of their chastity & innocence.³⁴⁶⁶

During the Middle ages, into 1300s, & later, different church throughout Christendom made it so that those accused of crimes could have a sanctuary to stay in, while they sorted out their case, or tried to make things right, if they could. For example, at the north country sanctuaries, Durham and Beverley, the person claiming sanctuary raised the ring knocker, and sounded it to obtain admission to the church. A bell was tolled to let known the fact that a person had claimed & taken sanctuary. A detailed account of crimes committed had to be given, & it was to include details of their nature, dates, names of persons, & places, etc., of what was done, & who the crimes were done to. "In cases of murder and manslaughter, the weapon employed had to be mentioned. A gown of black cloth, having on its left shoulder a cross, known as "the cross of St. Cuthbert," was given him to wear. The badge was, we are told, "to the intent that everyone might see that there was such a freeliege granted by God unto St. Cuthbert's shrine, for every such offender to flee for succour and safeguard of their lives."³⁴⁶⁷

14th–15th century France & Netherlands, works like Le Parement et Triumphe des Dames of Olivier de la Marche, shows the symbolism on garments still in use, in some areas of Christendom. For “...each article of female costume symbolises a virtue – a theme also developed by Coquillart.”³⁴⁶⁸ 15th century Christian garment symbolism & lore, seemingly evolved into allegorical tales, personified good virtues or negative vices, draped in fantastical and unreal apparel. Where allegorical figures were dressed up, as were saints, in costumes of the time, with new personages for each thought that was expressed in clothing types, were thus created to tell moral tales.³⁴⁶⁹ Consequently, we might ask, to what extent did the earlier Christians’ ritualistic covenants, oaths, or vows, with their symbolical reminders, as by way of symbols in their clothing, robes & garments, were passed down to later Christians? If so, when & where were such concepts & moral principles’ symbolism, or the basic practices of having moral mottos, as by way of symbolism on garments, were known in later centuries? Clothing symbolism that could thus be derived from earlier Christian mysteries’ garment symbolism.³⁴⁷⁰ We might also ask if in 14th–15th century France & the Netherlands, as in other places, the later Christians there, & else where, could have thus retained such symbolism in their motto symbols on their wardrobes? “...To adopt a motto is, so to say, to choose a text for the sermon of one’s life. The motto is a symbol and a token. Marked in golden letters on every article of the wardrobe and of the equipment, it must have exercised a suggestive influence of no mean importance. The moral tone of these mottoes is mostly that of resignation, like that of the proverbs, or that of hope. The motto should be mysterious. ... The greater number refer to love.... When of such a nature they were worn on armour and caparisons.”³⁴⁷¹ Or, an ornamental covering spread over a horse’s saddle or harness.

15th century Spanish Inquisition perversion of color garment symbolism, as noted earlier, made the “guilty heretics” dress in “yellow gowns of shame,” while others were adorned in filthy rags, & other markings to symbolize their adulterous ways, or other sins.³⁴⁷² In other cases, after being tortured to get a confession, a man or woman thus “convicted,” of “heresy” or some other “sin” or “crime,” were made to wear a cloth that draped over their shoulders, with a hole at the top for their head to go through. The cloth hanged shoulder levels on both back & front sides, down about their knee levels, & on them displayed large different symbols, \, or an X, & in other case other symbols with them to mark their “guilt”.³⁴⁷³ Thus, During the Spanish Inquisition, 15th century, the clothing was marked according to the alleged heretical “crime” a person was said to be guilty of.³⁴⁷⁴

After 1487, privileged clergy, who earlier had some type of immunity from getting in trouble with the civil authorities for alleged minor offenses, or in the case with a second offense, “...to prevent a second claim it was the practice to brand murderers with the letter M upon the brawn of the left thumb, and other felons with the Tyburn T. Ben Jonson, was, in 1598, so marked for manslaughter. An ordained priest could appeal to his Church again.”³⁴⁷⁵

While in 17th century America, The scarlet letter A for adultery, for example, during the Puritan Christian days, marked sinners to identify & shame, or shun the adulterous women in their society.

During 1790s America, “...because the definition of being white was linked with the capacity to be a good citizen, politicians, lawyers, and finally the Supreme Court all wrangled over the meaning of “whiteness.”³⁴⁷⁶

Later traditions, customs & symbolism of garments and robes, have been passed down in the robe wearing customs of important leadership positions in historic

Christian societies, as with other cultures. Certain types of robes are symbolic of important positions in society, such as robes of clergy, the judiciaries,³⁴⁷⁷ like the judge who wears a dark color robe; and university professors who do also. Larry Abraham was concerned that conspiratorial groups would try to capture these positions in order mold public minds. Thus, he calls it, “capturing the robes.”³⁴⁷⁸

18th century to present Freemasonry’s color symbolism is also a big part of their blend of mystery religious concepts, including those of early to later Christianity’s garment color symbolism, thrown into the mix. The white lamb skin aprons for purity, the moral character required qualities needed to join their orders, for they “must be without criminal convictions and be observed to be of good moral character.” If they aren’t, & it’s known to some who are in on the secret ballot of the lodge to which they are attempting to gain entry, the candidate could be blackballed. Black being symbolic of the person being judged as not having a good moral character. Thus, during the voting, traditionally, black & white balls, sometimes cubes, are used for voting in, or keeping out individuals. White for yes, black for no, thus: ““Blackballing” someone, usually in connection with membership of an organization, is thought to derive from this Masonic process.”³⁴⁷⁹

The black & white color symbolism in Freemasonry also includes wearing black suits & white shirts. Like the black & white checkered floors in their lodges, they were symbolic of their ritualistically & actual oath bound commitments of moving from a state of darkness towards the light. If some of them failed to dress accordingly, they were deemed to be improperly attired and will be barred from attending lodge meetings.³⁴⁸⁰

VESTING OR STRIPPED OF POWERS & RANKS: Anciently, to signify mourning, anguish, repentance, punishment, humiliation & submission, etc., different ones tear or “rent” their clothing, & put on sackcloth & ashes, such as in Old & New Testament settings. Garments could signify truth, thus, a rent or torn garment, was to signify bad news, or even the loss of truth, or to show the non acceptance of something said, thus the rejection of a witness statement as non-truth.³⁴⁸¹ While, the taking off, or stripping down, or putting on of different types of garments, or cloth insignias put on, or torn off in symbolic ceremonies, can signify, if torn off, the reduction in status in society, reduction in military ranks, & ecclesiastical reduction or loss of all priestly powers & authorities. In other cases, being stripped of their cloth rank insignias, their priestly robes, or all of their clothes, was done to shame, humiliate, for forced humbleness, & forced or self penance. In the early centuries, while some penances were secret, for minor sins, the penance for apostasy, murder, & adultery, or other notorious sins, became a sort of public reparation for having shamed & scandalized the community. Some penance could be stretched over a life time, like in later versions of penance in the courts of today, with life-sentences. After the prescribed penance was accomplished, they were absolved, declare free from guilt or responsibility. “Public penance included fasts, prayers, special clothing [hair shirts or rough clothing] ...”³⁴⁸² So the persons doing penances would be stripped of their clothing (that sometimes showed their clerical ranks, or civic ranks, etc.), to then be clothed in the special clothing to show that they were amongst the Penitents class in the religious societies of Christendom.³⁴⁸³

In some cases, the taking off, or stripping of clothing is done to show the former rank being added upon with new clothing, added authority, added responsibilities being entrusted, & represents advancements in ranks. In the early to later Christian mysteries, the taking off of old clothing, being naked, was a type of what happened to Christ. How he was stripped, humiliated, mocked, shamed, reduced from King of the Jews, Son of God, to being, in eyes of those who crucified him, just a man who couldn't save himself from the cross, (Matt. 27:40, 42). But after these tests, trials, sufferings, & death, he ultimately became victorious over all his foes, when his dead body was reunited with his now glorious resurrected body, after so much suffering, (Heb. 2:7-11, 1 Pet. 3:14-22, 4:1-19, 1 Cor. 15:20-28, Eph. 4:22-24). Thus, in baptism, the early Christian mysteries, so likewise were they passing through ritualistic symbolic suffering, humiliation, shame, crucifixions, death, the descent, & resurrection, where their nakedness was "clothed upon," as they put on new white garments, symbolic of deification, being clothed in the likeness of Christ's resurrected body.³⁴⁸⁴ A good example of this is the Jewish Christian work, first-third centuries, Odes of Solomon, that has baptismal garment symbolism: "I stripped off sin and cast it from me, and the Lord renewed me in his raiment." (Ode 11.9-10). "I put off darkness and clothed myself with light" (Ode 21.2). "I have put on incorruption through His Name, I have put off corruption by his grace" (Ode 15.6).³⁴⁸⁵ As the negative traits are being put off, or in ritualistic garment types, stripped off, the positive traits, the new white garment in ritualistic types, should be put on, like the Christ like traits of love, etc.! "Grace is for the elect ones. And who will receive it but they who trusted in it from the beginning? Love is for the elect ones. And who will put it on, but those who possessed it from the beginning." (Odes 8:13-14, 23:2-3).³⁴⁸⁶ Here we have a blend of pre-existence themes, blended with garment types, & deification garment themes also. In Colossians 2:12, 3:1-14, these same types of baptismal resurrection deification garment types are also presented, for different negative traits are to be put off, while the positive, put on: "But now ye also put off all these; [different negative traits mentioned earlier, (verse 5), &] anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, filthy communication out our your mouth. Lie not one to another, seeing that ye have put off the old man with his deeds; And put on the new man, which is renewed in knowledge after the image of him that created him.... Put on therefore, as the elect of God, holy and beloved, bowels of mercies, kindness, humbleness of mind, meekness, longsuffering; Forbearing one another, and forgiving one another, if any man have a quarrel against any: even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye. And above all these things put on charity, which is the bond of perfectness." (Col.3:8-10, 12-14).

The stripping of ranks, in later centuries seem to have been passed down from these ancient garment themes & ritualistic types. The loss of the holy garment or robes, the ordeal, tests, sufferings, & quests to find the lost garment, to have it restored, are also part of the garment lore, & ritualistic quests for the naked souls to be clothed again in positive traits, after having been stripped of negative traits. This is one of the themes that we find in The Conflict of Adam & Eve with Satan, where Adam & Eve learns that they had lost their bright nature, & thus seeks to get it back. Satan comes, & tries to give them a counterfeit version of the mysteries, promises them things he can't really give them. His dark nature, as a fallen angel is exposed, they get to see him for whom he really is, and then the pre-mortal Christ promises to rescue them from death & resurrect them, where their former state of glory, often-times, symbolized by a white garment, will be restored to them again.³⁴⁸⁷

First cent., about 50-70 A.D., said to be a Gnostic work, The Pearl, or The Hymn of the Pearl, in the Syriac, Acts of St. Thomas, this & other ancient texts also present the stripping of the garment of light, or the loss of it, & the quest to get it back again. In the story, a young prince left his Father's kingdom, symbolic of how the soul has left its heavenly home, the pre-existence, to be clothed in a body. He's leaving behind in heaven, his royal robe. His soul, stripped of that royal robe, is now on earth life, for he is now wearing flesh. He meets messengers, or sent ones, "...who deliver to him the royal garments he had left behind in the home of his Father. The robe had become greatly enriched by the young man's own triumphs, and his seemingly unhappy experiences- while the prince was wallowing in the muck of this world, the robe had grown so it would still fit him when he returned. His experiences were the source of his growth. As the robe is returned to him, he finds that the garment has become a perfect expression of his newly enhanced Self." The symbols embroidered on it represent how the prince's had become like God. This garment of light, as it has been called, is thus a symbol of having been stripped down, the naked soul soiled by the sins of mortal life, the tests, harsh trials as tests of character. But because the soul sometimes gets dirty by bad choices, needs to be cleansed by washing & anointing. Having learned from the hard lessons of life, the soul ascends cleansed, & thus returns back to heaven to be clothed in the garment of light, rewarded with deification, as the soul, represented as the prince, passes through a heavenly coronation ceremony, is crowned, & given the garment of light in being deified like his Father.³⁴⁸⁸

315-386, Cyril of Jerusalem, lectured on the Christian mysteries of his city: The taking off of the old clothing was a type of putting off the garment of sorrow, & the putting on of the new garment was putting on the garment of Christ. A white-garment that they should keep spotless white. This was not to say that they were to go walking around their communities dressed in white all the time. They were to be dressed, symbolically in righteous whiteness, & thus should keep their garments spotless. Having been clothed in the white robes of salvation & clothing of rejoicing. The white robes were symbolic of how they'd put on spiritual white to resemble the Son of God.³⁴⁸⁹

330-395, Gregory of Nyssa, On the Baptism of Christ: A summation & highlights, of this lengthy presentation is this: Gregory reminds those who have been initiated into the early Christian mysteries about the different lessons & types there in. That they are for their purification, which purges out from soul and body even that sin which is hard to cleanse away. And which brings them back to that fairness of their first estate. For baptism is to cleanse them who were defiled, & exalts us to heaven. So that they who had fallen might be raised, while Satan, who had cast them down might be put to shame. Baptism, then, is a purification from sins, a remission of trespasses. Baptism is not a literal changing of the old man into a child, but is likened to the bringing back, by royal grace, them who bear the scars of sin, and has grown old in evil habits, back to the innocence of babes. (Compare: Eph. 4:22-32, 5:1-13, 26-27, 6:11-19). The type is in how water serves to express the cleansing, just like it does in washing the body clean when it is soiled by dirt or mud. The dirt & mud, probably representing sins, & evil habits. The garment imagery, presented by Gregory, is also seen in the mantle of one of the prophets, though it was but a goat's skin, made Elisha renowned in the whole world. Gregory mentions three immersions in baptism & of Christ's descent, which baptism is a type of, (compare 1 Peter 3:14-22). For Christ, for our sakes, went beneath the earth, that He might raise life from thence. While those receiving Baptism, are in imitation, being taught & guided through the likeness, but are not indeed buried in the earth. For the three times buried in the water represent the grace of the Resurrection in three days, plus the three Sacred Persons on Whom they believed. Ezekiel & others are cited: And I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and you shall be cleansed: from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you. A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I give you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh, and my Spirit will I put within you. (See: Ezek. 36:25–27). Gregory makes reference to Zechariah who prophesied of Joshua, who was clothed with the filthy garment (to wit, the flesh of a servant, even ours), and stripping him of his ill-favored raiment, then adorns him with the clean and fair apparel, (Zech. 3:1–5). This was teaching us by the figurative illustration that verily in the Baptism of Jesus all we, putting off our sins. Here Gregory again presents the garment types, the stripping away of sin imagery. Thus, this putting off of sin is like some poor and patched garment, that is set aside for they are then clothed in the holy and most fair garment of regeneration. Gregory later gives the types of taking off the old man of sin, for the new man of righteousness. Thus, they may recognize the new-born man, discerning by clear tokens the new from the old. In changing their evil ways for good, they had become something different from their former self, bearing in it no token by which the old self was recognized. They had made a transformation from the type of person they'd been before baptism. For the persons they were before baptism was wanton, covetous, grasping at the goods of others, a reviler, a liar, a slanderer, and all that are kindred with these things. But now they'd become orderly, sober, content with their own possessions, and imparting from them to those in poverty, truthful, courteous, affable & were following every laudable, or deserving praise and commendation course of conduct. For as darkness is dispelled by light, and black disappears as whiteness is spread over it, so the old man also disappears when adorned with the works of righteousness. In other words, Gregory is saying they had been stripped of their evil bad habits, like a black garment, & had been adorned or clothed in righteousness, like a white garment. He goes on further: Such ought you to be in your regeneration: so ought you to blot out your habits that tend to sin. More garment imagery is in being fashioned in loving kindness towards their kindred, after the likeness of the Father's goodness. The protective garment is also hinted to in how the devil plots more vehemently against us, when he beholds the beauty of the new-born man, earnestly tending towards that heavenly city, from which he fell. How he raises up against us fiery temptations, seeking earnestly to despoil us of that second adornment, as he did of our former array, or the elaborate or beautiful clothing. But when we are aware of his attacks, we ought to repeat to ourselves the apostolic words, As many of us as were baptized into Christ were baptized into His death (Romans 6:3). Now if we have been conformed to His death, sin henceforth in us is surely a corpse, pierced through by the javelin of Baptism. In this Gregory hints to the symbolical dying, as to sin, & sin being likened unto a dead corpse. Plus, the symbolical killing or separation away of different sins, like how the fornicator was thrust through by the zealous Phinehas, (Numbers 25:7-8). They had died symbolically & stripped themselves symbolically of the dead body of greedy wealth, slandering no more, lying no more, no longer coveting, reviling not. Gregory might have known that these types of negative traits were often depicted as black garments. But, wrote Gregory, their way of living is regulated for another life. They had changed, like one would change their dirty clothing for cleansed new ones. Gregory then sums up the mystery of baptism with more garment themes: "...You [God] banished us from Paradise, and recalled us; You stripped off the fig-tree leaves, an unseemly covering, and put upon us a costly garment; You opened the prison, and released the condemned; You sprinkled us with clean water, and cleanse us from our filthiness.... for He has clothed me with a garment of salvation, and has put upon me a robe of gladness: as on a bridegroom He has set a mitre upon me, and as a bride has He adorned me with fair array. And verily the Adorner of the bride is Christ, Who is, and was, and shall be, blessed now and for evermore. Amen."³⁴⁹⁰ (Compare, Rev. 19:7–9, 14, Rom. 14:8–14, Psa. 132:9, Isa. 61:1–3, 10).

354–430, St. Augustine, Bishop of Hippo, De Doctrina Christiana, written about 397, he used these garment-baptismal types, the stripping away of negative traits & the washing away of the sins of those traits: "Why is there less pleasure in hearing that the saints are men, by whose life and example the Church of Christ strips those who come to her of false doctrines, and receives into her body those who imitate their virtues, and that these faithful and true servants of God, laying aside the weight of secular affairs, come to the cleansing of baptism and arise thence informed by the Holy Spirit to bring forth the fruit of a twofold charity towards God and their neighbor..."³⁴⁹¹ Augustine goes on with garment & baptismal types in an allegory about sheep being stripped or shorn, which is like unto the stripping off of false doctrines, errors, & secular burdens, or affairs. He then mentions the washing, or coming up from the dip, which is baptism. Of them producing twins, or two lambs, which are symbolic of the double law of charity, none being sterile among them. In other words, they are stripped down, or newly shorn sheep, or people stripped of errors, false doctrines, secular burdens, & are washed through baptism to be clothed in charity, producing other good traits. This seems to be the baptismal types used as by way of what happens with sheep, how they are shorn, are washed, & reproduce off spring.

483–492 (reign of) Pope (bishop of Rome in the West), Felix III, when his delegates from Rome notified Acacius, (Patriarch of Constantinople in the East), of his excommunication by Rome, they used the Acemete monks, & got some of them to pin the act of excommunication to the mantle of Acacius while he was performing church services. The mantle being symbolic of the authority, rank & of being an officer in the Church, if it should be degraded & defiled through acts of impurity, habitual sins, or by habitual offenses, this could mean the divesting, or disrobing of the person in a position of power. Consequently, they are considered, or judged by others, to no longer be worthy, qualified, or authorized to continue on with the duties, or performances of their office. Thus, excommunication was one way to reduce in rank, a high-ranking cleric, from their seat of power, or unseat them, divest them of everything. Going back to the symbolical "spotting" of white garments, with dirt, blood, black spots, dusty garments that need the shaking off of the dust, (symbolic of ones' own sins, or the sins of others that need to be shaken off, rid of). Plus, the taking off torn garments. All these clothing types, in religious ritualistic settings, when white garments get marks on them, or has a mark of ill identification put on them, or gets stained with blood, dirt, dust, spots, or symbolical ill-symbols, (like a scarlet letter A for Adultery), or sowed or pinned on them. Or their symbol of rank torn from their clothing. All these signified the reduction of rank in civic or militant settings. Or in religious settings, the defilement of their garments, or the mantle, of those who had been initiated, coronated & trusted with, & invested with a mantle of power & authority, to perform the duties of their particular rank. Signifies their failure to keep their covenants in righteousness according to the religious order they belong to, & according to their particular calling there in. Thus, in the case with the Acemete monks act of pinning the act of excommunication on the mantle of a high ranking cleric, that of the mantle of Acacius, Patriarch of Constantinople, while he was performing the church services. It was symbolic of him being removed from all rights, privileges, powers & authority of his high clerical rank, & signified him being deposed or remove from office suddenly and forcefully. That Acacius, perhaps wasn't worthy, wasn't righteous to wear the mantle that symbolized his high rank as Patriarch, is evident by the fact that those who did the pinning, paid for their audacity with their lives.³⁴⁹²

527–565, during Emperor of the East, Justinian's reign, the Empress Theodora attempted to get Vigilius, a Roman occupying a position in the court system, to be installed as a Pope. However, "Vigilius was duly dispatched to Rome, but as there was no way of getting rid of Silverius except by deposition Belisarius summoned him, had him stripped of his papal robes and ordered the Romans to elect a new pope."³⁴⁹³

1046–1085, it had been earlier, & by another Synod, (1075), had become an issue again, for who could do the investiture coronation ceremonies in selecting popes, princes, kings, Queens & Emperors. The Investiture Controversy, had been a continual issue now for centuries, but peaked during this time, as both political & clerical rivals tugged on each side of the mantle, in a sort of tug of war for supreme power of choice. Both sides claiming investiture rights over the other. Both sides claiming the rights to depose, or divest each other. (Divest: Old French desvestir, from Latin vestire 'clothe'). Both sides seeking the supreme powers to cloth upon (invest) their choice of the person to be invested with certain ranks of power. Or to strip, take off, depose (Old French deposer, from Latin deponere 'put down'), the mantles of authority of ones they didn't like. Thus, stripping, or divesting Civic Officers & Clerics of their ranks, symbolically done by taking off their mantles, or their royal or clerical robes & symbolical clothing of authority, sometimes done ceremonially in private, or public. This was done to show that the person had been stripped of their high position of clerical or civic offices, & no longer held their former high rank. Thus, garment themes got caught in these tugs of wars between the two powers again over investiture rights. Consequently, Hildebrand, (born about 1020), he became a monk, & from Cluny, in 1049, he went to Rome to reform, with his friends, the manner of choosing popes. Ordained a sub-deacon by Leo IX, he eventually became a chief-policy maker & power behind the throne, & continued to reform the way that popes were selected. He & his friends thus made it harder for the on going political tactics of imperial appointments, by coming up with a new papal decree in 1059, & eventually the Sacred College of Cardinals, where Cardinals would cast their votes for selecting the new Popes. Because Hildebrand & his friends argued that imperial selections should cease, so that clerics only should be the ones to invest Popes. These efforts must have been why he eventually became pope & took the new name of Gregory VII, (his influences on the papacy 1046–1085). At a Synod in 1075, he continued decreeing his "divine" policies when he issued a general prohibition of lay-investiture, how that: "The penalty was deposition for the one who received the investiture and excommunication for the investing prince." To this, King Henry IV thought Gregory had gone crazy, but the Pope didn't hesitate to use threats to excommunicate him, if he didn't immediately promote the papal program. Henry countered by calling a council of German bishops to depose Gregory, to which he countered by excommunicating Henry & declared him divested, deposed. He also freed all of Henry's subjects of their oath of allegiance to Henry. The divesting of Henry began as the princes of Germany proposed to meet in Augsburg in February 1077. Henry, admitting defeat, & at Gregory's orders, stripped himself of his royal vestments, symbolically put on the gown of coarse penitent's garb, to show his humiliation, shame, & repentance. He was made to stand in the snow, said to be barefoot, for 3 days & 2 nights, outside the closed gates & the ruin walls of the castle of Canossa, up the Mount of Purgatory, not far from Parma. Thus, stripped of all his regalia, the insignia of royalty, especially the crown and other ornaments used at a coronation, & the distinctive clothing and trappings of high office, worn at formal occasions. Henry divesting & penance was done until Gregory deemed that the emperor had suffered enough penance to be sufficient for going against him. The gates were opened, & Henry was admitted & allowed to kiss the papal toe & beg for forgiveness, which was granted. But the investiture controversy continued on with more political & clerical counters. When Gregory excommunicated Henry again, he marched on Rome with his armies, & only the papal fortress of Castel Sant' Angelo held out. Henry summoned Gregory to invest & crown him as Roman Emperor, but Gregory refused, & perhaps fearful for his life, offered to lower the crown from a rope. Henry then appointed an anti-pope to anoint, invest & crown him properly. Gregory made the mistake of appealing to Robert Guiscard, the Norman ruler of southern Italy, & he, with his army, drove Henry out of Rome, but then subjected the city to pillaging, & selling of thousands of Romans to slavery. Gregory, abandoned by most of his cardinals & execrated or upon the people of Rome that were left in expressing great loathing for him, he left Rome together with the Norman army & promptly died a broken hearted man, dying in exile. Thus, sums up this chapter in the investiture controversy.³⁴⁹⁴

1122, the quarrel over investitures continued, with new champions, for the issue was to be settled by the Concordate of Worms. The emperor surrendered his right to invest bishops with ring & staff, but he retained his privilege of pointing to the future bishop with his scepter before the pope would confer the sacred symbols, & continues with vesting the new bishop. Thus, was this compromise reached between civil & clerical powers, to a certain extent.³⁴⁹⁵

1155–56, under polemical settings, Gerhoh, Provost of the Augustinian chapter of Reichersberg, uses the type of the stripping off of the ritualistic garment, as a loss in judgment settings, such as: "...Jesus standing before Pontius Pilate clad in both the white robe of the priesthood and imperial purple. He then sadly observed: 'It would indeed please me if Caesar's things could be rendered to Caesar and God's things to God, but with this caution, that the Church be not ravaged or stripped of its white robe if the purple is taken off too rashly.'"³⁴⁹⁶

Garment types & terminology are mentioned by Boncompagno da Signa, (also Boncompagnus or Boncompagni, (1165/1175 – after 1240), an Italian scholar, grammarian, historian, & philosopher. In a manual of love letters, one addressed to a nun, he tells her how she had "...decided to put off the honour of this world and receive the monastic garb to live a cloistered life..."³⁴⁹⁷

Late 12th century, Peter of Blois, used the garment stripping themes & types in describing how he had put off, for a while God & the church, sought riches, & other ambitions in the royal court. But later, he broke off his connections with that life style: "In being scourged by the Lord, I received the grace of fatherly correction. I communed with my heart in the night season and searched out my spirit, and I decided to leave this way of life, as Joseph his garment, Matthew his receipt of custom, John his linen cloth..."³⁴⁹⁸ He had put off the old man of sin, like the old garment, or stripped off the negative traits to return to God.

The stripping of protective garments, in early to later Christianity, is also seen in the way that souls in baptism, the type of being in the spirit prison, hades, limbo, purgatory, the jaws of hell; were often naked, because they are not clothed upon, yet. They were shamed, humiliated, tortured, purged by fire of their sins, to then be resurrected by Christ, angels, St. Mary, prophets & other saints, like John the Baptists, who all descend & liberate, preach the gospel & liberates the naked souls during the harrowing of hell. Their naked souls, once stripped, will soon be clothed in white garments, like in baptism. Like in the naked souls riding up on blankets, with angels, thus their nakedness is in the process of being covered by ascension robes, or blankets, often white in color.³⁴⁹⁹

13th c., in many areas of Europe, ‘Criminals’ “were normally run naked through the streets of towns before expulsion.”³⁵⁰⁰ An early 14th century, shaming traditions, that might go back to these concepts of the wicked being naked in hell without the protective garment, & thus were being purged of their sins. This theme seems to be preserved in what was done in southern France, & elsewhere, for “adulterers were often forced to ‘run the town’, nude amid the howling crowd.”³⁵⁰¹ Thus, public nakedness was a form of shaming those who had been stripped of their honor, respect, ranks, & other positive qualities that they were judged as having fallen from. As noted already, clothing colors, & visible symbols on them, often symbolized, or marked persons with different types of good or bad marks of identification: That the person was a condemned criminal, alleged heretic, or a virgin, or clerical leader, or held a certain military rank, or was of a particular class, or of nobility, royalty, religious order, or was held judicial ranks, or educational status, or there were symbols & art works on the clothing to remind the wearer to be charitable, etc.³⁵⁰² The symbolical meaning of being found naked before judgment settings, was also like in numerous art works of Christ as judge, & in The Last Judgment themes in writings, etc. Many of these were carried over into later theocratic ritualistic Christian judicial systems. Where those judged as heretics, criminals, sinners, or not conforming to forced Christianization, in times & places of militant Christian theocracies. They could be stripped naked to shame them, or stripped of every clothing item, properties, & other insignias of class or ranks, & to shame them as naked before all. While in other cases, just a loin cloth, or private parts underwear coverings were on them during their public executions. They were punished according to the judicial judgment setting they were under. Thus, also, in art works of Christ’s Last Judgment, those on the left-hand side of Christ’s judgment, those who don’t have the protective garments or robes of righteousness on, as they are often depicted naked, are also being punished by demons poking their sharp, & in many cases, hot irons at them. While those on Christ’s right hand are often depicted being clothed in white, symbolic of them being judged cleansed of sins, & worthy to enter paradise.³⁵⁰³

1867–1939, Walter Leslie Wilmhurst, on The Meaning of Masonry, tells of the symbolical stripping to nakedness, of souls that are being stripped down of all black negative traits of demonization to put on whiteness, symbolic of purity, white garments, white gloves, white lamb skin aprons, to walk in the light towards divinization of the soul advancing degree by degree toward moral perfection: “For to all of us such initial cleansing and purifying is necessary. As has been beautifully written by a fellow-worker in the Craft:—“Tis scarcely true that souls come naked down

To take abode up in this earthly town
Or naked pass, of all they wear denied
We enter slipshod and with clothes awry,
And we take with us much that by-and-by
May prove no easy task to put aside.

Cleanse, therefore, that which round about us clings;
We pray Thee, Master, ere Thy sacred halls

We enter. Strip us of redundant things,
And meetly clothe us in pontificals.”
(A. E. Waite, Strange Houses of Sleep).³⁵⁰⁴

Other earlier cases of this, is in the clothing of a former higher ranked person, stepping down to let someone else take their place, sometimes done with honors, while in order cases done with shame, for some charge of guilt proven, or alleged in some cases. These types of symbolism were part of the early to later Christian mysteries, & was an Old Testament concept too, with the passing on of the clothes or mantles, showing an important role or responsibility that passes from one person to another. A case in point is the passing of Elijah’s cloak (his mantle) to Elisha (2 Kings 2:13). Or the stripping of Aaron’s garment to be passed on to Eleazar, (Numbers 20:26–28, Exod. 28:2, 29:29).

In the case with Christ, he was mockingly crowned with thorns, as King of the Jews, & with inscriptions in three different languages, Greek, Latin & Hebrew read: “The King of the Jews,” & this title was put on the cross, (Matt. 27:37, Mark 15:26, Luke 23:38, John 19:29). To further humiliate Christ, as he suffered on the cross, the mocking coronation ceremony done earlier, was then reversed, symbolically reducing him of his rank, status, titles, & divesting him of his vestments of power & authority, by having him stripped of his garments & coat, (John 19:19–24). In the early Christian mysteries, those who are about to be baptized, are stripped of all their clothing, symbolic of being stripped of negative traits, the old man of sin, as they’d say, then to later be clothed in white new garments. This, was a type of Christ being stripped, then clothed in the resurrection, which baptism was a type of. The ancient clothing was often made of wool, animal skins, & so the prophetic type of Christ was in how he was like unto the sheep that is sheared of their wool clothing, (Psa. 22:18, Isa. 53:7, Acts 8:32, Isa., 1:16–19). Thus, in the case with Christ, as with the newly baptized Christians, though it was actual humiliation for Christ, it was also triumphant for him when he rose from the dead in his same body, but now glorified. So also with the early Christians, they were humbled, stripped of pride & other negative traits to be clothed in righteousness, & a glorious body, for the white garment was a symbol of their rising up from the font, resurrected & deified, thus rising in rank, after having been stripped of their former sinful rank. These types of symbolical garment themes passed down to later centuries in the dressing down of those charged with heresies.

In early to later garment traditions, customs & color-garment symbolism, the ceremonial VESTING of people to higher ranks & statuses, became part of the religious-state theocracies’ ceremonies during the Middle Ages & later. Thus, the types of clothing put on such people so endowed, became symbols of their power, authority, rank, or status. These vestings were often done by ceremonial clerical taking off of symbolical clothing, & putting on the new clothing, suitable to their new rank, status, authority, or religious, or state powers & ranks to signify the type of offices or positions they held in their particular areas of later Christian societies. As a person could be clothed upon, they could also be stripped of their ranks too, like in royal, religious, & military settings.

Spring 1075, Pope Gregory VII, opposed & forbade the Emperor Henry IV to control the investing & appointment of bishops. Gregory issued a decree “abolishing lay investiture—the formal appointment of a bishop or abbot by a lay ruler, who ceremoniously hands him his ring of office and crozier, [a hooked staff carried by a bishop] or pastoral staff.... Many regarded the investiture as clear proof of the monarch’s right to choose and appoint prelates.”³⁵⁰⁵ The struggle of powers to invest bishops, in this case, also has the stripping of powers, symbolically & literally done with the removal of clothing that signified rank. Both the Emperor, & the Pope used their invested powers to try to strip each other of their powers. Gregory threatened Henry with deposition & excommunication, while Henry called a council of German bishops to vote Gregory to be deposed of his holy office. Gregory followed through with his threats and stripped Henry of his powers by excommunicating him, to which Henry responded by going to the castle of Canossa, near Parma, on a mountain top. The gates were closed to Henry, & at Gregory's order Henry to be made to stand out side, despite the January snows of 1077. Symbolic of acknowledging being stripped of his powers, Henry stood barefoot, "gowned in coarse penitent's garb, and stripped of all his regalia."³⁵⁰⁶ Or the distinctive clothing and trappings of high office, worn at formal occasions. Like in the earlier Christian mysteries, Henry had been stripped of his pride, which was like how Satan was stripped of his pride that caused his fall from being a highly ranked angel of God, during his fall from heaven, for he too was humbled. Plus, like how souls in hell, purgatory, & limbo, were humiliated & often stripped of their protective garb, often depicted naked in the purifying fires of the infernal regions. Which nakedness was covered in ascension robes, like in the mysteries, when they were rescued during the harrowing of hell, the descent, the resurrection or Anastasis, as in also baptism, the descent's ritualistic type.³⁵⁰⁷ These are the symbolical garment theme types that were surviving in these later centuries during this investiture quarrel. After 3 days & 2 nights, Gregory finally opens the gate & lets the humiliated & humbled penitent Henry in, forgives him & he is thus re-invested. However, this didn't stop the quarrel of investitures, for it continued with other power plays on investing bishops, though it was supposedly an issue that was settled by the Concordat of Worms in 1122. The king continued to choose & vest prelates as landholders and administrators, investing them with the insignia of temporal rule.³⁵⁰⁸

July 6, 1415, John Huss, (1369 Southern Bohemia – July 6, 1415, Constance), a Reformer, who was inspired by John Wycliff, was later excommunicated in 1411. He was put through a mock trial, & not allow to talk effectively in his own defense. The Inquisition had already decided that he was heretical, & wanted to pressure him to recant. He refused to be forced into doing so, thus at his trial, 6 bishops took off his priestly vestments, put a cap on his head with pictures of the devil, perhaps symbolic of his demonification. Then they condemned his soul to the devil. He was chained & burned at the stake.³⁵⁰⁹

In many cases, the protective-garments symbolism of earlier centuries was also thus faded off into the stripping to nakedness of the person being thus shamed for whatever they might have done, or alleged to have done, to thus be reduced in rank & status. The shaming could also include being "stripped" of their property, rights, & other things of value, including their life. A case in point is what happened in a royal setting with Enrique IV, September 1464, when a group of rebel nobles circulated a petition declaring him unfit to rule, & claimed him guilty of all kinds of perverse activities, such as homosexuality, etc. Later, in Ávila, a ceremonial dethronement took place near the cathedral. A mannequin dressed as the king in mourning clothes was set up on a mock throne to be divested & mocked, as archbishop of Toledo, Alfonso Carrillo de Acuña, loudly proclaimed a litany of grievances. The mannequin had the symbols of royalty & protection removed, the scepter, a sword, & finally the royal raiments, until the naked effigy was kicked to the ground.³⁵¹⁰

During the Inquisition era, the humiliation of alleged "heretics," included stripping them naked: "The stripping is performed without regard to humanity or honour, not only to men, but to women and virgins, the most virtuous and chaste of whom they have sometimes in the prisons. For they cause them to be stripped, even to their very shifts, which they afterwards take off, forgive the expression, even to the pudenda, [a person's external genitals, especially a woman's] and then put on their strait linen drawers."³⁵¹¹

In other cases, their clothing wasn't stripped, perhaps to add to the effects of the spectacle & let the viewers know that the great Lords & nobles, signified by their clothing, couldn't escape "justice" too. During the 15th century, in France, during the Burgundian terror in Paris, as a case in point, even criminals, though great lords, were punished, by not having their noble clothing removed, as in other cases. Thus, the common people had the satisfaction of seeing the clothing that signified the Lords' high rank, & knew that rigid justice was about to be done, even to criminal lords. For the magistrate had the condemned conducted to the scaffold, dressed in the garb of their high estate.³⁵¹²

During the late 15th and early 16th centuries, in England and Scotland, out door carnival type dramas included Robin Hood plays. During the spring, in on the May Day, the play extended over the eight days of the Whitsun fair. Robin Hood is said to cut off the head of his opponent, and "...puts on his opponent's 'clothes'". The symbolism was both seasonal– the Knight representing winter– and social– Robin becoming a mock lord."³⁵¹³ This was symbolic of the overturning of authority, in that those in authority were signified by their clothing. Thus, the putting on of their clothing, as done in these plays during the Whitsun May Days, was done to symbolize the taking over their positions for a short time.

There are also cases where people have tried to dress in clothing that are not according to their rank or status in later Christian societies. Or their clothing didn't match their life styles & actions, in that they were dressed in the garb of a holy religious order, but didn't live up to the teachings. In some cases, they are like the wolves in sheep's clothing, appearing to be good, but are being deceptive as to what's underneath their animal skin garments, their true nature, clothing their true intentions to do harm others, by acts clothed in kindness (Matt. 7:15).

As early Christian garment themes turned into later Christian legends, & fables, a number of stories developed. 15th century: "In the feudal society gentlemen and ladies formed a kind of club, the members recognizable by dress and speech.... The Clothing of gentlefolk was partly utilitarian, partly symbolic of class, status, and wealth, as all clothing is bound to be."³⁵¹⁴ A case in point is that of a noble girl reduced in rank to be a servant in her own father's estate in 16th century France. Like in the case with the 1998 film version of Cinderella, starring Drew Barrymore & Dougray Scott, Ever After: A Cinderella Story. After her Baron father died, & her step mother took over the place, she was made to slave away for her in law sisters, & the cruel step mother Baroness. However, eventually, Danielle (Cinderella), has an encounter with Prince Henry, who ends up falling in love with her. A servant is sold & she goes to the aid of that servant Maurice, to buy him back, by dressing up in clothing to make her look to be a noblewoman. Because she dressed above her status, she is later exposed by the Baroness in front of Prince Henry, before Danielle could come clean, by telling the Prince about her true identity and servant status. Later, love wins out & she ends up becoming Henry's bride & confronts her cruel in-laws, as she is introduced to them, dressed in royalty.³⁵¹⁵

1867–1939, Walter Leslie Wilmhurst, on The Meaning of Masonry, points out that the meaning of the white lamb skin aprons, the white gloves, & white garments worn in Masonry were reminders to the initiates that they had to be worthy to go through with the mysteries of Freemasonry. How that they had stripped away from their character the black negative traits of greed, unclean thoughts, impurity, & other negative traits that demonize the soul. Thus, symbolically dying to the blackness of the dark side, the west, (the black & white checkered flooring, symbolic of the two ways), to walk towards the east, in the light, being resurrected out of the symbolical grave by hand clasps to receive the secret knowledge of the other emblems & symbols of purification of character. Having been washed pure & white, dressed in white as a symbol of purity, self-perfection, self discipline, as they'd been advancing towards moral perfection & deification. The tools of masonry being emblems of building the inner character, where rough materials, symbolic of the roughness of a character that needed to be built up. Also symbolic of an unpolished character of the soul, which through the tools of the trade, is thus stripped, chipped & fashioned to build an incorruptible, regenerated, purified & cleansed or whitened man. Having stripped off the old man of sin, stripped away the blackness & other demonic traits through symbolical washing, self-cleansing, & purification, to put on, like white clothing, symbolic of purity, the raised soul of purity, cleanliness, moral perfection, in this fraternalized process of the mystery of divinization, & perfection of the human soul.³⁵¹⁶

Orthodox America, The Symbolism of Vestments, Reader Phillip Blyth, From a talk given at the St. Herman Winter Pilgrimage, Redding, California, 1983: "The spiritual significance of all the various liturgical vestments is underlined by the special prayers read during the process of vesting; When the priest or deacon puts on the sticharon, he says: "My soul shall rejoice in the Lord, for He hath clothed me in the garment of salvation and with the vesture of gladness hath He covered me. (Is. 61:10)... Over every thing the priest puts on the phelonion or chasuble a long, circular and sleeveless garment, shorter in front to allow the hands freedom of movement. It is symbolic of the robe Christ wore during His Passion; the ribbons which decorate it are reminders of the flow of blood on Christ's garments. The phelonion is also a token that the priest is "clothed with righteousness" (Ps. 131:9) and thus hedged off from all iniquities. For centuries it was also worn by bishops until it became customary for them to wear the saccos, a garment like a short tunic with half-sleeves, fashioned in all likelihood after the vestment of the Byzantine emperor; as such is a sign of special distinction and honor. Symbolically it serves as a reminder that the bishop must rise to holiness of life. The term "saccos" means a "sackcloth garment" or "garment of humility". "...Although in the early Church the preferred color for vestments was white – as was mentioned above – it was not long before a wide array of colors was used. While there are no set rules as to when to use what colors, certain colors have come by tradition to be connected to particular feasts. White vestments, for example, are associated with the Paschal period (although in some churches the tradition for Paschas is to use red), as the brightest and most radiant celebration of the vanquishing of death. It is a visual reminder that, "He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment" (Rev. 3:5)."

1965, a military version of stripping of rank, also called dressing down, or cashiering, is in the TV series, Branded. The main character, is Jason McCord, played by Chuck Connors, who was stripped of his military rank for allegedly being "a coward." The opening title credits of each episode in the series, features McCord's cashiering, or dressing down: his hat is pulled off, his epaulets are torn from his uniform, his buttons are pulled off, and his saber is broken, while a drum plays. He then walks out of the fort, shamed, humiliated, punished for something he didn't do.³⁵¹⁷

Some fictional legendized case examples of this faded protective garment themes, the stripping of the old rank for a higher rank, symbolized by changing of clothing, are like in The Lord of the Ring series, The Two Towers. This is when the Wizard Gandolf the grey, (dress in a grey cloak & robe), becomes Gandolf the White, (dressed in glowing white cloak & robe). This stripping of his old rank to putting on higher rank, was only after a harsh test of his character, only after a battle with evil! His victory over a very powerful demon from the deep underworld. Perhaps also, reminding us of the Virgin Mary's protective cloak, that often has souls underneath it, or Michael the Archangel's cloak that souls clinging to it for protection. (Examples, mentioned already in this study).

Such things might have passed on down to later heroic imagery & themes, like in the case with the much later comic book themes of super powered action-heroes, or heroines, persons of superhuman qualities, ones that also often are given or accept the missions of protecting & saving themselves, loved ones, & complete strangers, from evil villains, & other types of dangers, & demonic foes. Such as in the case with Superman, an alien human like, but also god-like male hero, sometimes even called a savior of the world. A Kryptonian, who took on a new name, Clark Kent, who was sent to earth as a sort of savior figure. However, he often finds out that he has limited powers, & thus admits that he's not "a god," & can't be everywhere at once, & can't save everyone, or is meant to. However, as he advances in learning, wisdom & his training, & learns more abilities, & realizes his mission, his costume changes. In this case, the comic book cloaks often worn by the protective heroes & heroines, is only hinted to at times in this TV series, Smallville. In the 9th season of that series, the main hero, Superman, is depicted as advancing in rank, as he matures more, is trained more & defeats more bad guys. Thus, these types of advancements, seem to be symbolized by adding a black rain coat & visible insignia, a white S to his black shirt.³⁵¹⁸

WHITE BAPTISMAL ROBES LEGENDIZED INTO WHITE SUNDAY & WHITSUNTIDE TRADITIONS & CUSTOMS

"From the earliest years of the church, Easter was the favorite time for baptism. This, too, represented new life in its spiritual meaning as an awakening of the soul of the Christian into new life with Christ. Those who were baptized always wore white garments for the ceremony, and thus white became the color most closely associated with Easter.... In some area of later Christianity, other traditions included the lighting of ... the large Paschal candle, and then at midnight the consecration of the waters of the baptismal font. Then followed the baptism of the men, women, and children, in that order. In those days, those who were baptized were anointed with holy oil. Then they donned their white robes."³⁵¹⁹

"In the days of the early Christians, Easter was the time when new members of the church were baptized. Afterward they put on new white clothes as a sign of their joy. Now everyone likes to wear something new on Easter Sunday."³⁵²⁰

"...Eastertide abounds with superstitions, perhaps appropriately since this festival was anciently associated with the spring equinox and sun worship. To wear new clothes on Easter Day, the time of renewal, brings luck throughout the year."³⁵²¹

4th century Archbishop of Jerusalem, Cyril, lecturing on the mysteries, explains the symbolical meanings of a baptismal ceremony on Easter. The taking off of their clothing, to then be anointed, baptized, anointed again, and clothed in a white garment.³⁵²²

7th or 8th century, Easter baptisms in the baptistry of the Lateran Church at Rome, includes, amongst other ceremonial activities, the completely disrobed candidates post-baptismal anointing, with oil, on the person's head, & them being dressed in white.³⁵²³

768–814, the Emperor Charles, (800), king of the Franks, (768), known also as Charlemagne, (reigned 768–814), was said to have regulated, among other events, Whit-Sunday. Especially what the clergy was to be wearing, the surplices, (a loose white linen robe worn over a cassock by clergy and choristers at Christian church services on Sundays, & Feast Days). Plus the wearing of black copes, (a long, loose cloak worn by a priest or bishop on ceremonial occasions).³⁵²⁴ Thus, white robes on Whit-Sunday, kept in memory the white robes of earlier Christian baptismal garments.

In 1490, the year of Guild of Smiths at Coventry, color symbolism in costumes, during Whitsun in Easter week, was part of the drama. Those who played tormentors, had costumes that were “jackets of black buckram...”³⁵²⁵

As white garments were a symbol for new life, the light of the resurrection, & were often worn on Easter Sunday, or Whitesunday. In contrast, black was a symbolical color for death, mourning, gloominess, sadness, & still is used today for mourning the death of loved ones, as modern funeral clothing colors often include the mourners garbed in black clothing. An earlier example of this was when king of France, Charles VII (1422–61), died. The cortège of all the court dignitaries were dressed in the deepest mourning, out of great sorrow for the death of their master. The people throughout the town saw six pages of the king mounted on horses covered with black velvet.³⁵²⁶

Earlier, & during the Middle Ages, & up to our day in time, ritualistic color garment types became part of manners of speaking, in describing moods, thoughts, deeds, the weather, places, events, or peoples' characters, all along the ranges of white colors, through to gray on to pitch black. There are many cases in point of this type of use: Monks, for example, may turn to “black boredom, to melancholia.” And: “During the long dark times....” of the Middle Ages. For good, such as peace, the 11th century is described as, the “white robe of churches” that covered Europe is still our wonder and delight.” While images of the Black Death, such as a 15th century art work, shows death as a dark skin personification, cloaked in white, holding a coffin & a weapon the other hand. The white cloak is like a funerary shroud draped over the coffin in death's left hand.³⁵²⁷ Thus, color garment symbolism continued down through the ages.

14th century France, the language of mourning, sombre melancholy included color garment symbolism, in that “...the moral state of the nobles points to a sentimental need of enrobing their souls with the garb of woe.” For it was a time of the misery caused by wars & death, as noted by Georges Chastellain, the historiographer of the dukes of Burgundy & chief of the Burgundian rhetorical school: ‘I, man of sadness, born in an eclipse of darkness, and thick fog of lamentation.’³⁵²⁸ 14th century France, as in other places, experienced the blend of pagan & later Christian symbolism that had turned early Christian garment color symbolism into ceremonial spectacles, especially in the cases of births, marriage & deaths. The death of a king, noble or other person of high political-religious ranks could mean the displaying & carrying of thousands of black vanes. Or black standards, banners seven yards long. Carriages were painted black for the occasion, long black velvet mantles were worn, while on horses, & the people of Royal courts were dressed in black for long periods of mourning. While in other cases, such as in 1393, the Parisians had the surprise of a pompous funeral, not in black, but all white, for the king of Armenia, Léon de Lusignan, who died in exile.³⁵²⁹

In contrast to black horses rode, & black cloth materials they were clothed in, for riders, during funeral parades of high societies, as done in other areas of Christendom. During 15th century Spain, the ceremonies of coronating Christian Kings & Popes included fragments of the earlier Christian mysteries, anointing & putting on royal robes & garments. They were “invested” during papal ceremonies that retained only hints to their former rituals, but in some cases had been corrupted with too much pomp & political influences, in that positions of authority sometimes came with a price. The investitures of religious-political leaders might include processions, where candidates might ride a snow white horse,³⁵³⁰ a symbolic reminder of the white vestments worn by those “cleansed” of their sins through baptism.

In other superstitious color symbolism, green was the favored color to the fairy-race of later Christian mythology, where the wearer of such is believed to be within their power. In such lore, the wearing of a green blouse to an old lady, was bad luck, for she, so the superstitious believed, could fall dead! Thus, the old saying: “If you wear green your relatives will soon wear black.”³⁵³¹ Black being a common symbol related to death,³⁵³² which is why at many later Christian funerals, the relatives wear black clothing. An example in many earlier cases of this, is how during the 15th century, in Paris, France, the late Laurent Guernier, hanged by mistake in 1478, his corpse “was placed on a cart draped in black to take it to Provins to be buried.”³⁵³³ “Traditionally, red, white and blue are happy colors, while black, yellow, purple and orange are notoriously bad-luck bringers.”³⁵³⁴ In other superstitious lore, magpies, being black and white in color, symbolize how “...a messenger from the gods it conveys good news (white) and evil portents (black).”³⁵³⁵ In another superstitious custom, related to bees, the superstitious would tie a “piece of black crepe to the hive” that's been abandoned. While in other cases, words were uttered to the hive & bees that “your master's dead.” Thus, the color black is still often associated with death, a custom that's been handed down from the old days. In other cases, black beetles were linked with weather magic, and many children once believed that killing a black beetle brings rain. “Blackness in sympathetic magic is suggestive of rain-clouds.”³⁵³⁶ In Ireland, old time color symbolism in tree-worship and in fairy trees, uses black and white colors too, such as with black-thorn, or white-thorn. While blackthorn is believed to have ominous properties in the British Isles, and in the Welsh border country, thus, “...bringing its blossoming branch into the house means a death in the family.”³⁵³⁷

A popular color amongst modern young adults, known as Goths, or Gothics, is to see them dress in black, symbolic of death, their dark moody rock music & dark rebellious attitudes about life & death.

1549, Book of Common Prayer, the sacrament of Baptism was suggested should take place at Easter & Whitsuntide. It further said that the baptism of infants should remind every man present, of their own profession to God in his baptism. That baptisms should be ministered in the English language.³⁵³⁸

“THE CUSTOM of wearing new clothes at Easter probably dates back to the time when the New Year started in March and new clothes were worn to signify a new beginning. Some people trace it to the early Church era when white robes were conferred on the recently baptized. According to this theory, the regular members of the Church wore new attire in memory of their own earlier baptisms. The putting on of new garments was soon followed by superstitions about the custom. One of the more widely known rhymes is as follows: At Easter let your clothes be new, or else be sure you will it rue. An American belief is that good luck can be ensured for the year by wearing three new things on Easter Day.... The baptism of converts was preformed at Pentecost, and it still is second only to Easter Eve as a popular time for baptism. The white robes worn by the candidates for baptism prompted the English to call Pentecost "Whitsunday" (white Sunday). This remains the common name of the observance in Anglican churches. Today in the Roman and Anglican Churches the color of the liturgical vestments is red, symbolizing the tongues of fire in which the Holy Spirit appeared."³⁵³⁹

"New clothing, representing a new beginning, has its own distinctive superstitions New clothing is worn at Easter to synchronize with the season of spring and renewal."³⁵⁴⁰ "An American variant of the Old World custom of heralding the spring by buying new clothes as Eastertide is the belief that to be lucky an American woman must wear new things on Easter Day."³⁵⁴¹

"The joyful custom of wearing new clothes on Easter was kept by the early Christians. Easter Week was once called "White Week" or "Week of New Garments." Easter was a popular time for baptisms. People who were baptized wore new white clothes as a sign of their new life. There were other reasons for new clothes. People wanted to be as beautiful as the earth with her fresh leaves and flowers. Also, a common superstition said that anyone who wore old clothes would have bad luck: At Easter let your clothes be new Or else be sure you will it rue! People who were too poor to buy new clothes wore a new ribbon, scarf, tie, or even new shoelaces."³⁵⁴²

"Whit-Sunday, the seventh Sunday after Easter, observed as a festival of the Christian Church in commemoration of the descent of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost. Whit is for white, and is generally taken to refer to the ancient custom of the wearing of white baptismal robes by the newly baptized at the feast of Pentecost (from which our word 'candidate' is derived)."³⁵⁴³

"Whitsunday. In Christian ritual, English name for the feast of Pentecost, ranking in importance with Christmas and Easter. Whitsunday commemorates the descent of the Holy Spirit on the Apostles and disciples, the founding of the Church, the gifts of the Holy Spirit, and the mission to bring the Christian faith to all people throughout the world. The name Pentecost comes from the Greek word for 50 and refers to the 50 days after the Jewish Passover, which the ancient Jews celebrated as Shavuoth, a festival of thanksgiving for the year's harvest (Exodus 23:16).... The Early Church adopted the Greek name from the Jewish feast. When the feast is called Whitsunday, as in The Book of Common Prayer, it refers to the custom in Northern European countries of conferring baptism during the time. The candidates for baptism were dressed in white, thus White-Sunday, or Whitsunday. Since it was too cold in many Northern European countries to baptize during the great Easter vigil, many of the customs were transferred to Pentecost."³⁵⁴⁴

As white protective garment themes faded off into fables, infant baptism & the white vestments for the child, are sometimes mentioned, or hinted to. A possible case in point is in the fables of Iceland, Northern Islands. The Neck, or water spirit that seeks salvation, is among other water spirit lore, the Mermaidens that comb their hair and bleach here their shining white clothes. Torfæus, who wrote in the latter end of the 17th century, in his preface to Hrolf Krakas Saga, the opinion of Icelandic pastor, Einar Gudmund, concerning Dwarfs (small underground people), is that they are creatures of God, consisting of a body and rational spirit. Some of their women have children by men that they were anxious to have them dipped in the sacred font, and initiated into Christianity. However, they, in general though they sought infant baptism of their offspring, found that seeking this rite was in vain. On the lands of Haga a nobleman, Sigvard Fostre, who had a child by a Hill-woman, promised her faithfully that he would take care to have the child infant baptized. In due time when the Hill-woman came with her child and laid it on the churchyard wall, and along with it a gilded cup and a holy robe, which were presents she intended to give to the church for the baptism. The pastor wanted to know who the father was. But Sigvard, perhaps out of shame, didn't confess he was the father. The clerk asked if the child should be baptized or not. "No," said Sigvard, fearful of being found out to be the father of a Hill-child. "The infant then was left where it was, untouched and unbaptised. The mother, filled with rage, snatched up her babe and the cup, but left the vestment, the remains of which may still be seen in Haga." Sigvard's shame of having a child from the Hill-woman dwarf is how that they are sometimes looked upon as being part of the fallen angel demon folk, mischievous types at times. As it turns out, the Hill-woman, upon seeing that her hill-child was thus not baptized, she caused sickness to come upon Sigvard & his later posterity.³⁵⁴⁵ Was the holy robe gift intended to be the baptismal robe for the hill-child? The cup to be used to pour the baptismal water on the child?

"Whitsunday: The English word "Whitsunday" (White Sunday) originated in the custom of newly baptized persons presenting themselves for service all dressed in white. Whitsunday derives its meaning and associations from the Jewish feast of Pentecost. Originally it lasted seven days but was limited, in 1094, to three days; Tuesday was abolished in 1711, and, by order of Pope Pius X in 1911, Monday was excepted as a day of holy obligation. Nevertheless, most European countries still observe the Monday following Whitsunday as a legal holiday...."³⁵⁴⁶

By 1881, with the full mediaeval rituals said to be continued by the Roman Catholic Church, the Directions for the Use of Atar Societies and Architects, 1881, under the aegis of Cardinal Vaughan, on the basis of St. Charles Borromeo, mentions the required aumbry for the holy oils, vessels for the salt & for pouring the water, "white garments," plus other things.³⁵⁴⁷

"Whit Sunday...In the Christian Church it commemorates the descent of the Holy Spirit. The name means 'white Sunday', thought to be an allusion to the white baptismal garments once worn on this day...."³⁵⁴⁸

"The British call Pentecost Whitsunday. The reason for this was that new Christians were often baptized during Pentecost. They wore white robes during the ceremony, giving the holiday the name White Sunday. In time, this became shortened to Whitsunday. All Christian churches celebrate Holy Communion and Confirmation on this occasion."³⁵⁴⁹

Whitsun, is special in England, for at the times of baptism "the candidates always wore white robes. Candidate means 'robed in white.'"³⁵⁵⁰

In later centuries, Baptism for the dead themes retained garment themes, though in legendized forms. The times to expect the appearing of water nymphs called the Navky & Rusalky were around Whitsunday, the time when the dead were honored, or appeased with different gifts, & it was a time for remembering the unfortunate dead. At Bueil in France, 1508, the children were undressed of their swathe, which is wrap that things are sometimes wrapped up in, or in several layers of fabric, or a strip of material in which something is wrapped in. Like how the swathed soul is passed on into the hands of angels. Earlier, it was the disrobing of adults, then later it was changed to disrobing or unswathed infant baptisms, to have them robed again, or swathed (desmailloter et mailloter).³⁵⁵¹

The Navyk & Rusalky appear, they cover their beautiful bodies with green leaves, or a white shirt without a belt, and during Whitsuntide they sit on trees, asking women for a frock, which could be a girl's dress, or a loose outer garment, in particular a long gown with flowing sleeves worn by monks, priests, or clergy. Or they'd ask girls for a shirt, thus women hanged on branches strips of linen, or tore strips of clothing from their dresses to appease them. The Rusalky could be released, baptized, by a simple prayer-formulas, & these strips of clothing seem to appease their wants & pleas to be baptized & perhaps give them the clothing that sets them free from haunting the rivers, wooded areas, lakes & small streams.³⁵⁵²

In Joanne Rowling's Harry Potter series, when a clothing item, a sock, is given, to Dobby, the house elf, from his master, unaware, it sets the house elf free.³⁵⁵³ As noted, legendized baptismal garments themes became the festival of "Whitsuntide," Whit Sunday, or "White Sunday,"³⁵⁵⁴ retaining fragments of baptism for the dead themes. This is because of the water spirit traditions, the Navyk & Rusalky & Spunkies spirits, etc., that are believed require a baptismal prayer formulas, etc., to christen them, (or baptize them). So as with other doctrinal themes turned fables, they sometimes get blended in the mix, over time. Whitsunday, & its later Easter traditions, of giving new clothing to each other, (white garment themes), were still passed down into blends of pagan-Christian fairy tales & fables of later centuries. The giving of clothing to a fairy, elf, naked water-spirit, brownies, or other traditional characters of later lore, retain some aspects of said doctrinal themes, but also because other traditions say these different characters, such as the fairies, etc., were amongst the fallen angels,³⁵⁵⁵ pre-existence themes were also thrown into the legendization blender.

As legendized garment themes goes, the act of giving new clothing, or strips of cloths, etc., was said to have all kinds of variable effects, such as: Help them be christened, calm them, make them happy, banish them, scare them off, even set them free, or set the giver free from being bothered by these mythical creatures. For example, fathers would lay their trousers (or an outer garment covering the body from the waist to the ankles), over a new born baby's cradle, before christening, & in so doing, this was believed to protect the child, (protective garment themes), & keeps him or her safe from being carried off by fairies, in some lore, evil water spirits. If someone gets led astray off a path by pixies, that person was to turn his coat, thus: "TURNING CLOTHES, may have been thought to act as a change of identity, for gamblers often turned their coat to break a run of bad luck."

³⁵⁵⁶ Was the legendary King Arthur coronated & crowned king on Whitsun because coronation ceremonies include being clothed upon in royal robes, like Whitsun is a reminder of too?³⁵⁵⁷

The modern "...ceremony of infant baptism, as practiced in the great church of the world. The priest who performs it is directed to wear a white surplice, & two "stoles," or regalia; first one violet colored, to denote the sinfulness of the candidate, & then, after the evil spirit has been driven out, a white one, the symbol of purity & innocence. After the officiating clergyman had learned the name from the godfather, he gently breathes three times upon the child, to drive away the devil, and says: "Depart from him, thou unclean spirit, & give place to the Holy Ghost the Paraclete." Then he makes the sign of the cross on the forehead & the breast, & says a prayer. Next he lays his hands on the head of the infant, to signify that he takes possession in the name of the Lord, & utters another prayer...." Later during this ceremony, The clergyman "...puts a little spittle on his thumb & touches the ears & nostrils of the child, saying: "Epheta, that is to say, Be opened;" & "For a sweet savor." Again the devil is commanded to be gone. The ceremony of the spittle is regarded as "deeply significative." Man is, we are told, in his natural state, spiritually deaf & dumb. Hence the ceremony of opening the ears & nostrils to "signify the necessity of having the senses of the soul open to the truth & grace of God." "Next a promise is taken in behalf of the infant that it will renounce Satan, & all his works, whereupon it is anointed with oil upon the breast & between the shoulders, in the form of a cross. (Here the violet regalia are changed for the white.) The infant is now asked whether it believes in the Trinity, & the sponsor says, Yes. It is then asked whether it will be baptized, & the sponsor again says, Yes. Then water is poured 3 times upon its head, in the form of a cross..." [In the name of the Father, Son & Holy Ghost]. "...After the water the infant is anointed on the head with chrism consisting of oil & balsam. A white linen cloth is also placed on its head, a reminder of the white garment in which the Christians in ancient days were clothed after baptism."³⁵⁵⁸

In later centuries of Christianity, the mysteries³⁵⁵⁹ passed on into the hands of monks, priests, kings, and filtered down into Knight Orders. As time went by, different fragments were preserved, though in apostate forms, among the masonic Orders.

Garment Color Symbolism Fades Off into Superstitions: In later superstitious traditions, it was considered unlucky to gather blackberries after October 11, Old Michaelmas Day, because tradition said that "Satan cursed the fruit because, when he was cast out of Heaven on the first Michaelmas Day, he fell into a blackberry bush."³⁵⁶⁰ Also, Scottish seers are said to sometimes use the blade-bone of "a black sheep in divination."³⁵⁶¹

"A black cat venturing inside the house means bad luck and must be chased away and the floor swept clean. A white, yellow or multicoloured cat is good luck-bringer."³⁵⁶²

In later centuries, colored symbolism was still used to mean negative things, for example, in 1895, Right Rev. Charles Joseph Hefele, D.D., in his A History of the Councils of the Church, mentions how The Emperor Theodosius II had issued an edict that the peace of the church should be maintained, and that it "should not be allowed that men who had died in the communion of the Catholic Church should be blackened",³⁵⁶³

SYMBOLS OF DEIFICATION: ROBES, GARMENTS & CROWNS: In historic Christianity, the saints halos or nimbus, become bright circular lights & light color rings that represented their repentance & return to godly behavior. Their saintly ranks which were earned by changing from a life of sin, to having done good deeds beyond the common person. In many cases, a person's good or bad behavior, determined if they got a halo or not. Thus, like in the case with iconography in the Eastern Christian Orthodox church, there are art works, where Judas, who betrayed Christ, is depicted without a halo.³⁵⁶⁴

A number of art works show different saints, &, or martyrs obtaining crowns, robes & garments of glory for having suffered for the cause of Christ.³⁵⁶⁵ "In the symbolical language of the earlier mystical literature the 'garment of glory' or 'garment of light' represents the higher celestial, angelic-spiritual nature. The garment of glory in these writings [Enoch-Metatron.] is attributed as well to angels as to the righteous spirits ascending into heaven. The difference between men and angels in such connections is only one of degree of perfection."³⁵⁶⁶

Many artworks of The Last Judgment, the virgin Mary acts as a guide and intercessor, pleading the cases to her Son, the great heavenly Judge. Hence, for souls devoted to her, she represents a prime source of hope for individuals possibility to ascend to bliss where they are clothed with white radiant robes, & get to walk among the angels. Coronations rites were types of the heavenly coronation rites of passage, with assumptions or ascensions, anointings, being invested in royal robes and garments, being crowned, enthroned, glorified, and eventually deified.³⁵⁶⁷ All throughout historic Christianity, the Virgin Mary is seen passing through an after life coronation ceremony in heaven,³⁵⁶⁸ where she is crowned³⁵⁶⁹ by the Father, or by Christ,³⁵⁷⁰ to then sit with the other members of the Godhead, enthroned as the Queen of heaven.³⁵⁷¹ In addition to the Virgin Mary, and the Christ Child,³⁵⁷² other saints are depicted crowned and enthroned³⁵⁷³ too.

During ascension depictions, angels often cloth the ascending soul in garments. In some cases, garments were also a symbolical type of that which was to come in the resurrection, when the resurrected would be clothed in a garment of light and glory just as their spirits had been clothed in a glorious perfected resurrected body. Thus, garments of glory were often mentioned in the different stories, & art works depicting the soul's return to glory.³⁵⁷⁴

Cyril of Jerusalem 315-385, likened the white garments or robes of their mysteries as being types of whitening their actions to resemble Christ like traits. For having put off old garments, they must continue to develop those attributes "that are truly white and shining and spiritual." For they had put on Christ like a garment, & so long as they keep them spotless white, they will "come to resemble (symmorphoi gegonate) the Son of God."³⁵⁷⁵ Thus, more whitening deification-garment types.

Inasmuch as the New Testament abounds in examples of "the crown of life used as an image of the Christian's eternal reward, and symbolic coronation of the saints and martyrs,"³⁵⁷⁶ it also became a popular theme in early Christian art. The crown represented how that the saints had been rewarded with deification, having endured sufferings for the cause of Christ, and having won the fight against the forces of darkness, and vices of the world, during the struggles towards moral Christian perfection.³⁵⁷⁷

For example, on the Troyes cathedral, 12th century, the twelve virtues are crowned for their victory over their adversaries, hence, they "wear their victors' crowns as they trample their adversaries under foot," the same is also true of the 13th century Psychomachia maiden virtues carved at Strasburg north portal.³⁵⁷⁸ Having fought the good fight against the devil, his wicked angels, and servants, and upon having progressed toward higher virtues and overcoming vices, "the Christian is promised that after he has suffered a while, he will assuredly be called to eternal glory through Jesus Christ and receive the incorruptible crown, therefore he can cast all his cares on the Redeemer. These crown of life references then, describe the virtues of perseverance and hope."³⁵⁷⁹

Some of the traditions that seem to have kept alive being clothed in robes and garments, especially during the early Christian mysteries, and the later liturgical dramas, are the ways in which Christian artists show what happened to the soul in the after life. And inasmuch as these mysteries and liturgical dramas where ritualistic types of what to expect at the moments of death and during the after life journey. It is not surprising to see depictions of the moments after death, also depicting fragmental reminders of the same types of things that took place in their ritualistic counterparts.

In later centuries, the white robes of deification were passed down in George Washington's time. The Apotheosis of Washington, has a part that depicts

Washington dressed in white robes, ascending on a cloud to heaven, the title apotheosis means "elevation to the status of a god," thus George Washington is depicted as receiving his exaltation, becoming like his Heavenly Father.³⁵⁸⁰

As the early Christian mysteries became fraternalized amongst the later Christian Knight Orders, & later Freemasonry, the color symbolism of white & black, & white lamb skin aprons, & white shirts & black suit coats, plus white garment themes were preserved in the mysteries of Freemasons. Walter Leslie Wilmshurst, 1867-1939, explains the garment themes & black & white color symbolism, & Freemasonry's version of deification, perfection & purity, in his The Meaning of Masonry, how that: "The true candidate must indeed needs be, as the word candidus implies, a "white man," white within as symbolically he is white-vestured without, so that no inward stain or soilure may obstruct the dawn within his soul of that Light which he professes to be the predominant which of his heart on asking for admission...."³⁵⁸¹ In other words, the candidate for the initiation ceremonies of Freemasonry should strive to be worthy, & white in his character, not so much skin color, for white is symbolic of purity in Masonry, not racial skin color. The whitening of the character was the path of self-perfecting. The white lambskin apron was an emblem of purity & innocence which is associated with the lamb and with the new born child. Now days, when people talk of family members that have strayed from the right path, they often call them the "black sheep of the family." In masonry, the white is the opposite of this, for it's a quest towards putting on purity, thus white shirts, white-apron, white garments, also symbolic of advancing towards moral perfection & deification. Other garment themes are in how the Mason was to strip themselves of all negative traits & put on the new man, or innocence of a new born child. They were going through a purification process, & were being whitened so as to be stainless in their character that was being cleansed by self discipline, self purification, & stripping down of all things that would defile them. Thus, they should symbolically have clean hands & a pure heart, thus the wearing of white gloves, & other color symbolism that was symbolic of the two ways, the black symbolic of demonization, white, east, light of deification.³⁵⁸²

In later Christian, Muslim, & other cultures that do pilgrimages to their sacred sites, white is a popular color of clothing worn, or changed into. A token of having gone on a pilgrimage could also include also getting special clothing.³⁵⁸³

Protective Garments in Historic Christianity: As noted, in the early Christian mysteries, those initiated were naked, having taken off their old clothing to eventually to be clothed in robes, or white garments. Their nakedness was a type of the nakedness of souls who had descended naked, or were thrust down to hell, humiliated & tortured by demons, because they were naked³⁵⁸⁴ & didn't have on the protective garments. But the initiated, having been anointed as if "Christs" & having "put on" Christ, which was their protective garment was a type of, they were ready to do battle against the demonic forces. Plus, to help free the captives souls held there, just as Christ, angels, prophets, saints, & other worthy warriors for Christ had done. They'd come up out of the baptismal font, just as Christ had ascended out of the infernal regions, liberating & harrowing hell, etc. This is why the liberated souls are often depicted naked, when they first ascend with Christ, for they will, like in the ritualistic types, be clothed in ascension robes. However, because it was believed that the demons also infested the air, the naked soul is often clothed in a protective blanket, robe, or some other type of clothing, so as to protect the ascending soul from the fiery darts of the devil & demons. For they were seeking to stop such souls, often surrounded by Guardian Angels, from ascending by grasping hold of them to pull them down back to hell. Meanwhile the Guardian Angelic guides are pulling the souls up on the protective garment, blanket or large burial type shroud, often white in color. This is where the garment themes of the earlier Christian mysteries were being legendized in the art works & in traditions.³⁵⁸⁵

In: The Forgotten Books of Eden, Christ (who was then a spirit), says to Adam & Eve that satan wants to take away and destroy their earthly garment which God had clothed them. This garment helps protect Adam & Eve against the powers of the devil & his fallen angels. Christ asks them: What is satan's beauty that you should listen to him? The narrative says how Adam & Eve made fig-leaves and covered themselves because they realized that they were stripped of their "bright nature".³⁵⁸⁶

Later Christian art-works show a tug of wars between angels of God & demons. The demons attempt to cause the "fall" of those who are on their way towards the heavenly realms, & moral perfection. Angels clasp their arms, hands, or wrists, in order to help them and to pull them up towards the heavens. While demons attempt to hold them back, or pull them down, thus helping in their fall.³⁵⁸⁷

In some cases, early to later Christian artists³⁵⁸⁸ depict those who make it all the way up the right hand path. For St. Peter is there to greet them with a hand clasp at the door to paradise.³⁵⁸⁹

During the Middle Ages, some Knights would, for "a fee he could be buried in a monk's robe."³⁵⁹⁰ Was this because he thought the robe, being that of a monk's, thought it would protect his dead body, or was it for his soul?

7th century mosaic in the cathedral of Monreale, Sicily, depicting the Temptation of Christ, shows a dark color winged devil, confronting a white Christ. While telling the devil to leave, two angels descend down with white protective garments in their arms.³⁵⁹¹

10th c., an angel descends with a robe or cloth to wrap the soul of Mary in, who has just passed over into the hands of Christ, who in turn has passed her on into the arms of an angel, who takes her into heaven.³⁵⁹²

10th century, in offering prayers & solicit the same charity for their own dead, the following is in the entry made in the Benedictine monastery of Grasse, in the diocese of Carcassonne. It tells of a scroll that announced the deaths of "Wifred and others of your Fathers. Which when we heard, we prayed the One and Trinal God, that he would give them now a heavenly robe..." etc.³⁵⁹³

1154, a Bishop of Meissen, when founding a new town, might have hinted to protective animal skins with religious significant & meanings: For the tabernacle of the covenant & the ark of the Lord's witness would not shine with such brilliance were they not protected from storm & rain with goat's hair & rams' skins dyed red & blue. Whence the Church of God is not only to provide the Lord's flock with a good teacher in things spiritual & eternal, but also sagaciously, or having or showing good judgement, to succor it as a provident shepherd in things carnal and temporal.³⁵⁹⁴

1160, in the Winchester Psalter, Christ and the apostles are at Mary's death bed. Christ passes her soul into the hands of an angel who is about to cloth her soul in a robe, while another angel also descends with another garment too. Up above, the hand of God extends out of heaven to bless this moment.³⁵⁹⁵

Romanesque art is the art of Europe from approximately 1000 AD to the rise of the Gothic style in the 13th century, shows souls wrapped up in a protective blanket, sitting in Abraham's Bosom, symbolic of the 3 souls that are in paradise. The Bosom of Abraham,

Romanesque capital from the former Priory of Alspach, Alsace. (Unterlinden Museum, Colmar).³⁵⁹⁶

The Story of Lazarus & Dives. Lazarus and the rich man are shown during life in the top register, in the middle is Lazarus in the Bosom of Abraham, and at the bottom Dives is suffering in Hades. Illuminated manuscript, Codex Aureus of Echternach, c. 1035–1040. (Germanisches Nationalmuseum, Nürnberg. Black demons grasp the soul of the dying Rich man, right out of his mouth, when he died on his death bed. Then scene over shows the souls being carried towards the fires of hades. Above this scene, the poor man's soul, exiting out of the mouth, is being clothed in a white protective blanket by two angels.³⁵⁹⁷

1211–1275, Notre-Dame de Reims (Our Lady of Reims) is the seat of the Archdiocese of Reims Cathedral stone work. Abraham holding little figures of souls in a cloth, representing the "bosom", as angels bring additional figures.³⁵⁹⁸

12th century, in an art work of Lucy, the foundress and first prioress of Castle Hedingham, it shows Lucy's soul being carried to heaven, riding up on a large cloth or vestment. The two angels are grasping, with both their hands, each side of the vestment.³⁵⁹⁹

Mid-12th century, in a miniature in the Shaftesbury Psalter, showing the ascension of souls into heaven, "the archangel Michael with his feet on a cloud holds up a napkin containing several souls" some of which are nude.³⁶⁰⁰

12th century, the life of Guthlac, A.D. 667—714, the hermit saint of Crowland, is illustrated in ink drawings, one of which shows angels greeting his soul, at the moment of his death. One angel is his hand clasping guide to heaven, while the other hold the robe he is to be clothed in during his ascension into heaven.³⁶⁰¹

Perhaps from the 12th century, an ivory carving of the death of Thomas Becket, appointed bishop of Canterbury, England, shows him being martyred by King Henry II, knights. Above this is his soul, ascending into heaven on a shroud, or blanket, with two figures, or angels on each side, pulling him up.³⁶⁰²

1280, another depiction shows two angels lifting up a soul on a garment toward heaven.³⁶⁰³ In another one, the souls are safely taken into heaven to Abraham's bosom, in other cases, it is the Father to which the souls are taken, for some works show the Father holding one or more souls in the napkin in his lap.³⁶⁰⁴ Hence: "As the soul leaves the body—in later depictions in the arts, as in the wall painting at Vrå, Denmark, the soul is shown as a doll-like figure coming out of the mouth of the person—the guardian angels receive it and promise to carry it to "a place which thou never knewest." Thereafter the soul will be taken to the presence of God where, among St. Michael and all the host of heaven, he is judged worthy and welcomed with music and rejoicing into the heavenly court." The soul being taken off to heaven immediately after death is often depicted as a nude of diminutive stature within a napkin being carried up by an angel.³⁶⁰⁵ 13th–16 centuries (?), a German Picture-Bible, the naked "Dives" is burning in hell, without the protective garment, while three angels wrap a large white protective blanket around the naked Lazarus, seated in the bosom of a clothed Abraham.³⁶⁰⁶

1320, the arms of God extend out of heaven over a wedding ceremony, in which the person, perhaps Christ, is grasping the wrist of the bride to bring the hands of the couple together to make the traditional hand grips of marriage. Above this, an angel holds what could be a vest or garment too.³⁶⁰⁷

1332, in a miniature, by Michiel van der Borch, Christ stands in the river Jordan that flows up to almost his hip level, to our right is an angelic being extending out of heaven with the baptismal robe.³⁶⁰⁸ In another part of this source, numerous souls are depicted riding in a shroud into heaven.³⁶⁰⁹ In addition to this, another depiction of Christ being baptized shows just one angel holding the baptismal robe, instead of the usual two or three angels.³⁶¹⁰ Furthermore, in one showing different events, one of them is the death of a woman whose soul is riding up into heaven on a cloth.³⁶¹¹

1470, in a carving in the central roof of the choir of All Saints, North Street, in York, an angel is lifting up a soul on a napkin, while a similar scene in the north choir aisle depicts an unidentified soul being raised up in same type of way.³⁶¹²

15th century, another depiction of a saint being martyred is on a box said to contain the mortal remains St. Laurent, Musée des Beaux-Arts, Moulins. A portion shows an angel anointing the wounds of the body of the saint. Also, the spirit of the saint is in the very act of ascending with an angel while riding up on a garment.³⁶¹³

The Martyrdom of San Cugat, painted by Alfonso de Baena, now in the Museum of Barcelona, about 15th century(?), shows the martyr's soul riding a blanket to heaven, while ascending with the two angels holding each end of it.³⁶¹⁴ In a wall painting at Starston, Norfolk, it shows "a pair of angels lifting the upright and nude soul, who is standing in a napkin, up to the clouds."³⁶¹⁵

1526–30, Jean Bellegambe, Paradise, part of The Last Judgment panel, in one area, before the lighted circular cloud like tunnel, a number of angels holding a white blanket, that naked souls ride up on, help them in their ascensions towards higher areas of paradise.³⁶¹⁶

CLOTHING ITEMS & TRANSPORTING LORE:

As superstitions and little black-devils, black-animal creatures & demonic black-cats lore goes, during the 17th century & later centuries. We might ask: Were white sheets in bedding, once seen as protective white blankets, that kids would traditionally cover their head with, when spooked by the dark dancing shadows of the night, in their flickering candle lit bed rooms? Were such white sheets once believed would help protect children & adults from being carried away by black demons, or evil black garbed kid-napping witches?³⁶¹⁷ Thus, the traditional kid prayer, before going to bed: "Now I lay me down to sleep, I pray, the Lord my soul to Keep. But, if I die before I wake, I pray the Lord, my soul to take."!

1652, Mary Parsons, born Mary Bliss, in England about 1628, & who was later in New England, & married Joseph Parsons in 1646, & lived along the Connecticut River, near Springfield, Massachusetts. She became the victim of superstitious paranoid attitudes of the times & place that were looking for reasons to blame witchcraft on every seemingly natural occurrence & misfortune. Possible protective garment lore is in how she was said to have told of a time when she was harassed by encounters with "spirits." "Once she had been accosted "as she was washing her clothes at the brook ... [when] they appeared ... like poppets." [British word: informal, an endearingly sweet or pretty child.] On another occasion they entered her house, "and she threw the bedstaff at them and her bed-clothes and the pillow, and yet they would not be gone."³⁶¹⁸ Were the clothing, & bedding items believed to have protective powers?

November 1655, with demons said to counterfeit the things of God, like God's miracles, but in with magical powers. Could also the Christian lore about white blankets, or sheets, associated with protection & travel, have also been counterfeited, or at least in witch lore? At any rate, during the witch hunting days of the American Colonists, in the village of Northampton, Massachusetts, the story of an accused witch, a female Mary Parsons, who was seen with "a white sheet bound to her head" & accused of witch-lore kid napping, "suddenly the woman vanished away."³⁶¹⁹ Was the white sheet bound to her head, some kind of magic carpet type transporter? Like the protective white blankets that help transport, or lift souls up to heaven on, with angels on each end of them, & with the soul(s) in the middle. With all these examples of traveling on sheets, & protective garment lore, could these similar basic concepts been legendized further in stories about later clothing items, used to transport with?

In English & Scottish legends, boggarts are fairy type shape-shifting creatures that like dark places. They can either be helpful or hostile, depending on if they get offended, or not. The boggart of Yorkshire, is said to be a brownie, & if offended, can be destructive. "To get rid of a boggart, offer a suit of clothes. It will then don the clothes and simply vanish. You are sure never to see it again."³⁶²⁰

Like the hand & wrist grasping angelic guides through different realms they descend or ascend to,³⁶²¹ in A Christmas Carol, by Charles Dickens, 19th c., Ebenezer Scrooge is visited by 3 spirits that guide him through scenes of Christmases of the past, present & future. The Ghost of Christmas Past takes Scrooge by his arm, then later has him touch his hand to transport him to scenes of his life in earlier Christmas times. The Ghost of Christmas Present has Scrooge touch his robe, & as he does, holding on tight, they are transported to a different place. Garment lore also seems to be hinted to in how that the Ghost of Jacob Marley, who, when alive, had been Scrooge's business partner, was the first to appear to Scrooge. When he does, he tells him of the 3 spirits that will visit him during Christmas Eve. Marley is clothed in a long chain, wound about him, clasped in his mid section, & made of cash-boxes, keys, padlocks, ledgers, deeds, & heavy purses wrought in steel. Marley explained the symbolical meanings to this unusual garb. How that it is required of every man, that the spirit within him should walk abroad among his fellow-men, & travel far & wide, to see how they could have helped others, the poor, etc., by un-vesting themselves of the chains of their wealth, if they have it, & invest in humanity. But because he didn't, like these other spirits, were doomed to witness what they cannot share, but might have shared on earth, and turned to happiness! Thus, Marley explains: "I wear the chain I forged in life,... I made it link by link, and yard by yard; I girded it on of my own free will, and of my own free will I wore it...." Marley goes on to warn Scrooge that he has on even a longer chain, which Scrooge couldn't see, upon looking, but it was there, even though Scrooge could see it, & it was ever growing as time went by. Later on, Scrooge tried to compliment Marley on being a good man of business, to which Marley cried: "Business!... Mankind was my business. The common welfare was my business; charity, mercy, forbearance, and benevolence, were, all, my business. The dealings of trade were but a drop of water in the comprehensive ocean of my business!"³⁶²² Marley holds up his chain at arm's length, as if the cause of his unavailing grief, and flung it heavily upon the ground again. He regrets again, not having helped the poor with his riches. Of ignoring them, as he walked by, while walking amongst the living. In this possible garment type lore, Marley's sum of all his choices of focusing on gathering wealth, & ignoring the poor all around him, all had added up into clothing him in his bad choices. The chain of wealth had become like the dress of the fashionable lady, upon which rides the devil of conceit.³⁶²³ It had become like he had put on negative traits, when he should have put on positive Christ like traits, such as charity, etc., (Col.3:1-14). It was like he had walk about "in the vanity" & been blind to others' needs, "because of the blindness of his heart," & thus had put on more negative traits, when he should have put them off & put on the new man, righteousness & true holiness, (Eph.4:17-32, 5:26-27, 6:10-19, Rev.19:8, Rom. 13:12, Psa.132:9). He could have, had he chosen, been clothed in fine linen, clean & white, for the fine linen is the righteousness of the saints, (Rev.19:8). But instead, the things his soul had lusted after, his great riches, had also come to nought, like other merchants, & the vanity they had clothed themselves in, was no more (Rev.18:11-24, Psalms 109:18-31, Isa.3:16-26). He could have been clothed in the white sheets that other ghosts floated about in, according to the traditions of the times, but instead was clothed in the chain of wealth his spirit could no longer spend. But Marley was there to warn & give Scrooge a chance to repent! To put off the garb of the chain that he had on, & be changed to putting on charity, & other positive traits, so that he wouldn't have to suffer the same fate, (Psalms 103:26, Col.3:14, Proverbs 31:9-26, Ecclesiastes 5:7-20, 9:5-10, Isa.1:16-20, 52:1-3, 59:1-9, 17, 61:1-3, 10). Marley had Scrooge look out his window, when he left, to see like chained souls, clothed in the same negative traits, for: "The air was filled with phantoms, wandering hither and thither in restless haste, and moaning as they went. Every one of them wore chains like Marley's Ghost; some few (they might be guilty governments) were linked together; none were free.... [Scrooge recalls knowing] one old ghost, in a white waistcoat, with a monstrous iron safe attached to its ankle, who cried piteously at being unable to assist a wretched woman with an infant, whom it saw below, upon a doorstep. The misery with them all was, clearly, that they sought to interfere, for good, in human matters, and had lost the power forever."³⁶²⁴

Centuries earlier, 4-5th c., the early Christians, the Coptic sect in North Africa, some of the burial customs includes how the dead are dressed in the clothes they had worn in life, women often had their heads covered with a veil or kerchief, men wore a cap, in this case, probably a white cap. Thus, they believed they were in the proper clothing that they felt would get them ready to meet God.³⁶²⁵

An Irish legend, or the story: "Barney's Tale of the Wee Red Cap," published in 1916. Barney tells David of a story told back in the Old Country of Ireland, generally after St. Stephen's Day, and sometimes on the Eve of St. Stephen's day, it was a custom for them to tell stories, such as the one about his great-uncle Teig of Inneskillen. With all the miraculous modes of travel, that goes on in Christmas lore, of the blond hair, winged fairy female, Christkindl, that wings herself all over the world. It seems fitting for this Christmas tale to also have miraculous modes of travel, with the help of a wee red cap, again, a clothing item. Teig had some of "the good people," knock on his door & he lets them in to get ready for a feast. During which, some of them sang a fairy rhyme about wishing they had their wee red cap, which would drop down, when it appears, & is put on, the one wearing it is transported to wherever they wish. Teig got involved with these fairy folk, in putting on a cap to transport to different areas of the world, such as Spain, Holland, France, Belgium, & the great hall of the King of England's palace. They also use it as a protective clothing item, for when they got in trouble with the King, at the palace, it transported them out of there.³⁶²⁶

Another clothing item with magical transporting & protective powers, is in the fairy tale lore, The Wizard of Oz, (1939, movie). Further on, red ruby slippers, on the feet of 'the wicked witch of the east,' once dead, get magically transported to the feet of a teenage girl, Dorothy. She finds out later, from a white-magical witch, a beautiful "good" witch, Linda, the good witch from the North, that the slippers can transport her back home. Linda is dressed in a light sparkling peach-white colored dress, while the wicked witch of the west, was in a black hat & black dress. (Color symbolism for good & bad, still in use. Also, in earlier Christian baptismal ceremonies, the catechumen would face the west, symbolic of darkness, & thus, would renounce Satan, & all his pomp & evil works).³⁶²⁷ After the witch later confronts Dorothy, another time, always seeking to remove her slippers from her feet. As she reaches out for them, they shock her hands, thus, they are protective clothing items. But also, they have transporting powers, for by clicking the heels 3 times, with them on, & repeating the words: "There's no place like home," Dorothy is transported home.³⁶²⁸

Walt Disney's, Dumbo, (cartoon about 1941, 70th anniversary reissue, 2011), shows storks flying through harsh rainy weather, to deliver different animals' babies, wrapped up in a white cloth. More fragments of protective clothing items & transporting lore?

A similar clothing item is also used in the Harry Potter series, a Harry Potter and the Goblet of Fire, (4th movie 2005), in which a boot is a "port-key," (boots, after all, are for walking). But in this magical lore setting, it's a transporting clothing item that transports the group to where they want to go, when the group touches the boot. Thus, how much of the later Christian protective garments, used as protective sheets or blankets, in realm traveling for souls riding up on them into heaven. How much of this, if any, might have passed down & become legendized in fairy tales about witches' & wizards,' use of clothing items, & Christmas lore clothing item as magical transporters too? In Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince, (movie 2009 Warner Brothers), the Headmaster of Hogwarts, a school of magic, Professor Albus Dumbledore, with long sleeve clothing on, has Harry "take hold" of his left arm near the wrist, and as soon as he touches his clothed arm, they are transported away. This wizard has Harry grasp his left arm on his clothing again, & off they go.³⁶²⁹

MORE 17TH CENTURY GARMENT LORE:

About 1692, during the Salem Massachusetts witch hunts & trials, Ann Putnam Sr., claimed to have seen the ghosts of "six children in winding sheets," whom, when they were alive, were allegedly murdered by witches. More wild accusations made against the alleged witches, have some testify seeing the spirits of victims, called spectral sightings. Thus, the accusers claim to have seen ghosts "in winding sheets and [with] napkins about their heads," who then told their victims' stories.³⁶³⁰ What is of interest here in this study are the ghostly sheets they were allegedly seen, clothed in. Thus, were the white sheets that souls are depicted wrapped in, as seen in numerous earlier Christian art works, derived from earlier white ascension robes for spirits, being passed on into the hands of God, from angels? If so, could the much later traditional ways to depict ghosts in white sheets be later legendized traditions & lore of these earlier garment lore themes? If so, could then the much later Halloween costumes, that of white sheets for ghosts, & the spooky glow in the dark art works of white sheeted ghosts, all be further legendizations of these earlier types of legendary ghost stories, & traditions, & alleged 'spectral sightings'?

1693, a stone monument to Lady Warburton, by Edward Pierce, shows a skeleton holding a shroud: "The monument was probably begun in or soon after 1693, when Lady Warburton died, and finished after Pierce's death by the Flemish sculptor John Nost. The dramatic motif of a skeleton holding up a shroud was probably inspired by French tombs. (Church of St John the Baptist, Chester)."³⁶³¹ Shrouds, blankets, robes, & garments, all seem to be associated with death & the ascension of the soul.

The Virgin Mary is often depicted with souls under her arms, being surrounded with her robes, symbolic of being under her protective care.³⁶³² In earlier centuries, the "Intercession of Mary and the Saints," is part of this protective lore: "Communicating with and honoring in the first place the memory of the ever-glorious Virgin Mary, Mother of our Lord and God Jesus Christ; [& by the merits of saints, Etc.,] ...through whose merits and prayers grant that we may be always defended by the help of Thy protection....”³⁶³³ In some of these art works, Mary’s robes, or cape opens up like wings, which goes back to the ancient symbol of being gathered together under protective open wings, & open wings of healing, which historic Christendom has also used as a type of Christ’s open wings of protection & healing, (Psalms 91:4, Malachi 4:2, John 3:14, Numbers 21:6-9, Matthew 23:37).³⁶³⁴ Protective garment lore also became part of later relic lore, the beliefs of many, that protective powers of the saints came from different saints, including the holy Virgin Mary. Some collections of relics were thus said to contain three pieces of her cloak,³⁶³⁵ which, as noted, it was under her cloak that souls are often seen in other art works, as wrapped up in, or under her arms spread out, with the cloak hanging down around them, thus “enfolded” in her saintly protection.³⁶³⁶

As veneration of the saints became popular in many places of later Christendom, Virgin Mary ‘miracle’ stories, often included different ways & examples of different persons, or souls, she was said to have protected, often-times from evil, from demons, or even from the Devil himself. In the Eastern Church, one story of Greek origin gained acceptance in the Western Latin Church, in the 9th century. It was the story of a clerk, Theophilus, who sold his soul to the Devil, but was saved in the moment of death by the intervention of the Virgin. By the 11th century in the Latin west, large numbers of miracle stories of the Virgin, began to appear. Their sources of origin became cloaked in blends of lore, a few stories were taken from ancient Latin sources, a 6th century book of miracles of Gregory of Tours; others from Greek origin, & in time, theses stories took on a life of their own. For as the patronage of different saints, including the Blessed Virgin became more popular, so also did they become more legendized through the unbridled imaginations of those passing on the tales. What fragments of possible protective garment lore, blended with deification themes, as by way of the divine protective powers of the saints & their relics, is hard to determine in these later stories. But whatever fragments might have been passed down, we might see these in how that these stories tell of the protection of all who love the person from whom these benefits flow. Like the rain, this protective power of the Virgin falls on the just, & the unjust alike, but only on the conditions that they have entered the circle of her allegiance. These stories were not only concerned with her powers to protect the possessions or privileges of the churches, but were about her divine saving powers. She having passed through the heavenly coronation ceremonies to be invested, crowned, enthroned & deified as Queen in Heaven. After which, as a Goddess, the Blessed Virgin Mary, then further empowered with divine graces, is further equip with even more protective powers, as a soul-saver, as she continues to individually visit, & through miraculous interventions, helps the heavenly hosts in their missions to bring about the salvation of souls. This is where deification themes blend with protective garment themes, as the invested, deified Queen of Heaven, with a crown on her head, & with glory shining forth from her, & with open royal cape or cloak, is sometimes also depicted with souls under her protective cloak that extends out from her open arms of mercy.³⁶³⁷

As later militant Christian crusaders & militant marches went forth, those who took part in them, were said to be comforted by the legends about protective battle garb. Their beliefs that the benevolence of “the Virgin Mary would enfold and protect them”³⁶³⁸ & thus also gave them hope, along with their skills at combat. The eventual development amongst Christian Knight Orders, their later religious ceremonies of Knighthood; their washings & being clothed in arms. Of thick metal armor, mail, & other protective shielding; many of these were believed to have been given extra protective powers by religious ceremonial blessings given to the armies by the priests. Later Christian beliefs of divine protection, thus derived from earlier Christian ones, which were derived from the beliefs in protective garments, where the soul, in combat with the forces of darkness, was clothed in a protective robe to shield the soul from the fiery darts of the wicked dark demons, (Ephesians 6:11-16).

The protective under garment & the coats of mail, in Knighthood settings, may have been seen as part of the need for protection for the knights in their commissions to not only protect others, but to pursue evil doers. Thus, the baptismal theme of fighting evil & the protective garment themes of the earlier Christian mysteries, may have also faded off into the symbolism of protective armor & coats of mail in Knighthood Orders.³⁶³⁹

In later centuries, as later superstitions developed, later protective garment traditions faded off into concerns that parents had about the perils & dangers their new born babies faced with regards to demons, witches, evil creatures, evil fairies, & evil spirits; until their babies were christened. Thus all sorts of protective charms, incantations, the placing of iron, salt, garlic, & even the “parents’ clothes in the cradle”³⁶⁴⁰ were believed to offer protection until the time of the christening took place. Thus, christening was believed to offer protection from various demonic evils the new born entered the world in. The swaddling clothing protecting³⁶⁴¹ the naked body of the baby from not only physical scratches; but was also symbolic of protecting both spirit & body from the demonic forces of darkness, which later legends said were lurking in the shadowy places, lakes, forests, streams, & deep places of the earth.³⁶⁴² In 1231, during the lying in state of the dead body of Saint Elizabeth of Hungary, relics from her body & clothing, were sought after. Thus, was it believed by the crowd of worshipers, that strips of her linen had protective powers? Was it also believed, that because holy clothing, or strips of material from saints, & other parts of her body had relic magic in them, that they did “cut or tore strips of the linen enveloping her face; they cut off the hair, the nails, even the nipples...” to obtain them for themselves, for traditional uses, according to superstitious relic lore?³⁶⁴³ More possible protective garment traditions turned to superstitious lore & that developed in later centuries, is how during the 20th century, in Lincolnshire, “a strip of sheepskin suspended from a horse’s collar was used to avert the Evil Eye.”³⁶⁴⁴

As the protective garment themes faded off into later legends, fables, myths, & stories, different heroes are also often equipped with special weaponry & protective shielding against the dark forces. They also have, in some cases superhuman qualities, traits of deification themes being traced in the later stories too. Case in point is in J. R. Tolkien’s series, The Lord of the Rings, in the movie, Fellowship of the Ring, Knights in arms, fighting against the forces of darkness is a big part of The Lord of the Rings stories. J. R. Tolkien, a Catholic, was influenced by Christian symbolism, and used light & dark symbolism for good (light) and bad (darkness), the Lord of Darkness, etc. Gandolf “the grey” becoming Gandolf the white, after a battle with an ancient demon from the deep underworld. Plus, after a near death experience type return to life to continued the fight against the Dark Lord. The protective under garment, the Mithril shirt, white in color, which protected Frodo when he was almost thrust through by an evil cave troll, (which in fables, are part of the fallen angels), as dramatized in The Lord of the Rings saga.³⁶⁴⁵

In the fable, Thorstan and the Dwarf, Thorstan shoots an arrow into a flying dragon, that took a Dwarf’s son. The arrow kills the dragon, caused it to fall, letting loose the Dwarf's son, caught by Thorstan. For this heroic deed, the Dwarf rewards him with a protective shirt, "...and let not my shirt of sheeps'-wool, which I will give you, appear a contemptible gift, for you will never be tired when swimming, or get a wound, if you wear it next to your skin."³⁶⁴⁶ The Dwarf gave him other things that could do different things. Like in Lord of the Rings saga, the shirt from the Dwarf was a protective garment, if Thorstan wears it next to his skin, he wouldn't get a wound.

While in other fables, if spirits can somehow make holes in the linen or woollen garments, they'll seemingly lose their protective powers to protect the wearer from injuries: In these parts of Penbroch, unclean spirits, invisible to mankind, sometimes manifest their presence, such as in the house of "...William Not, by throwing dirt and such things as rather indicate an intention of mockery and injury. In the house of William, the spirit used to make rents and holes in both linen and woollen garments, to the frequent loss of both host and guest, from which injury no care and no bolts could protect them." Other garment symbolism is in how the "unclean spirits" will defile even Priests by throwing dirt at them. Dirt is often associated with unclean garments, soiled garments, soiled feet, that thus need to be washed in holy water, (Isa. 1:16-18, 11:5, Eph. 4:22-24, 5:27, Rom. 13:12, Psa. 132:9, Rev. 7:14, 19:8, 14, Matt. 10:14-15, John 12:1-7, 13:4-17). But in this fable, it says that "...places cannot be freed from illusions of this kind [a sudden change from either poverty to riches, or rather from riches to desolation & poverty] by the sprinkling of holy water, not merely of the ordinary, but even the great kind; nor by the aid of any ecclesiastical sacrament. Nay, the priest themselves, when coming in with devotion, and fortified as well with the cross as with holy water, were forthwith among the first defiled by the dirt thrown at them. From which it would appear that both sacramentals and sacraments defend from hurtful, not harmless things, and from injury, not from illusion."³⁶⁴⁷

In Brittany, fables tell of "a species of malignant beings, called Night-washers (Eur cunnerez noz), who appear on the banks of streams, and call on the passers-by to aid them to wash the linen of the dead. If any one refuses, they drag him into the water and break his arms.... In the district of Vannes is a colossal spirit called Teus, or Bugelnoz, who appears clothed in white between midnight and two in the morning. His office is to rescue victims from the Devil. He spreads his mantle over them, and they are secure. The Devil comes over the ocean; but, unable to endure the look of the good spirit, he sinks down again, and, the object of the spirit accomplished, he vanishes."³⁶⁴⁸ Note the good spirit is clothed in white, and spreads his mantle over them to protect, or secure them. This is like art works of the Virgin Mary's large cape that covers souls to protect them.³⁶⁴⁹

In the Scottish Highlands, fables about possible protective garments, with a cross in it, is in The Young Man in the Shian. A farmer, Macgillivray of about Cairngorm neighborhood in Strathspey to the forest of Glenavon, had two sons, Donald & Rory. Both searching for lost sheep, came upon fairies dancing. Roy's curiosity gave in & joined the dance & was caught up in the whirling movements of the inhabitants of the crevices of the fairy turret. Donald called three times for him, but was unable to get him out, & the family couldn't either. They gave him up for lost, when a Duin Glichd or Wise man, tells Donald to go back to the place a year and a day later. But this time, and "...placing in his garments a rowan-cross, to enter the Shian boldly, and claim him in the divine name, and if he would not come voluntarily, to seize him and drag him out; for the fairies would have no power to prevent him...." Taken out, Rory thought he'd only been gone an hour & a half, & thus having lost track of time, was surprised to find out he'd been gone a year.³⁶⁵⁰ Was it believed that the cross placed in the garment what gave it its protective powers against the fairies, often said to be part of the races of fallen angels? Or was it just the cross, or both?

The further possible legendization of protective cloaks, like the Virgin Mary's cape, is in fictional movies, like when Kurt Russell, played ex-special forces "hero" in Escape From L.A., he's given & uses a long black jacket that is fire proof, & thus used it to protect himself during from fire. Another case might be in the Smallville, series about the rise of Superman. Tom Welling, plays Clark Kent, of the DC Comic series. He's not perfect, not all knowing, has his saintly weaknesses, strengths, powers & difficulties to work through, with the help of his family & friends. In the last episode of the 10th season, episode 22, part 2 of the Final one, Clark Kent, after all the testing, & challenges facing & fight against dark forces, is finally given his cape & shirt, like he's being coronated to be the superhuman superhero that he has become. Being "the man of steel," the cape might just be symbolic of his alien family name, & powers to help protect & save earth from the ever growing dark forces.

WHITE FLAGS, TYPES OF PROTECTION? White flags, & later legendized symbol of Protection? The white flag is an internationally recognized "protective sign of truce" or cease-fire, and request for negotiations, during war times. They'd wave a white flag to signal that they wanted a safe passage across the battle fields, so they could meet up and talk over terms, be it surrender; or peace, or whatever.³⁶⁵¹ Earlier Christian Knight protective garment lore, seem to be in promises to protect those whom a soldier or Knight has sworn an oath of fealty to: "In the commendation, the vassal placed his hands within the hands of the lord. The oath was sworn on a relic— a saint's bone, hair, or scrap of garment— or on a copy of a Gospel. The contract entered into could not be lightly broken."³⁶⁵² Also in militant settings, of surrendering, possible white garment traditions are seen in how: "...The white field draws on symbolism throughout the Bible equating white clothes with purity and forgiveness. People who have been "washed white as snow" in the Bible have been cleansed from their sins (Isaiah 1:18; Psalm 51:2). In conventional vexillology (the study of flags, their history and symbolism), a white flag is linked to surrender, a reference to the Biblical description Jesus' non-violence and surrender to God's will."³⁶⁵³

The Knight Templar flag symbolism, the battle flag, known as the Beausant, could be linked with Masonic symbolism. The flag was divided into 2 vertical blocks, 1 black, the other white. "For the Templars, the black section of their flag symbolized the profane world of sin, from which they had turned in order to commit themselves to the Templar Order, represented by the white section of the flag."³⁶⁵⁴

White flags, in a 16th century example, as in others, meant negotiators bearing a white cloth tied to a stick, "as a sign of peace," were asking for safe passage & protection, so that they could pass through a war zone to parley, or talk over terms of surrender, or peace. Case in point, the Portuguese chronicler Gaspar Correia, writing in the 1550s, claims in 1502, that an Indian prince, the Zamorin of Calicut, sent out negotiators with a white cloth, as a sign of peace, to his enemy Vasco da Gama.³⁶⁵⁵

Could it be possible, that such flag color symbolisms were later fragments of the similar types found in historic Christianity? The white protective cloths, blankets, or robes worn by those ascending up out of the baptismal fonts, having symbolically battled with demonic forces in the underworld; which baptism later became a ritualistic type of. Plus, the protective white cloths, robes, blankets, which many art-works show souls, in the after life, ascend to paradise or heaven on. They being protected, or so shielded by them from the flying darts and arrows of the black monstrous demons, shooting at them?³⁶⁵⁶

APRONS IN EARLY TO LATER CHRISTIANITY, & LATER FRATERNALIZED TYPES IN FREEMASONRY

330–395, Gregory of Nyssa, On the Baptism of Christ, sums up many aspects of the Christian mysteries of his time & area: "...You [God] banished us from Paradise, and recalled us; You stripped off the fig-tree leaves, an unseemly covering, and put upon us a costly garment..." He goes on to mention the spirit prisoners being released, washing to be cleansed of filthiness, clothing in garments of salvation, being clothed in a robe of gladness: as on a bridegroom He has set a mitre upon me, and as a bride has He adorned me with fair array.³⁶⁵⁷

In much later centuries, the Freemasons seem to have kept in remembrance, these earlier types of the early to later Christian mysteries. They put on a white lamb skin apron, symbolic of purity, & the innocence of the entered apprentice. The symbolism goes back to the aprons worn by those involved in stone masonry, the building of the later Christian cathedrals & the stone masonry of building the first temple of Jerusalem. The aprons worn by the stone masons as they did their work.³⁶⁵⁸ In addition to these symbols of the early to later Christian mysteries, are the hand & wrist grasping symbols, they must have learned in great details, as they carved them hundreds of times in the Cathedrals, abbeys, & other stone monuments during the Middle Ages onwards. The hand & wrist grasping of God to Adam & Eve, being created, or lifted to life, by God.³⁶⁵⁹ This was before they are clothed in an apron, then later garments. Also those depicting the resurrection, the harrowing of hell,³⁶⁶⁰ the ascension into heaven, & couples greeting each other in the after life, as seen on hundreds of tomb stones dating back from the 19th century onwards.³⁶⁶¹ Some stone works of Monks greeting each other with hand clasping, as part of Christ's world wide trek themes preserved in monastic Christ-guising policies, & Christ appearing to St. Thomas, etc.³⁶⁶² The white lamb skin apron in Freemasonry, is also related to the story of building the Temple of King Solomon. The whole points of many symbols are to remind them of getting rid in their own characters, unwanted behavior or characteristics in order to refine and improve their moral worth as Masons, morality, equality, wisdom, strength, beauty, goodness, etc.³⁶⁶³ This certainly reminds us of the original clothing types & symbolism in the early to later Christian mysteries.

EARLY TO LATER CREATION DRAMAS & ART WORKS: FRAGMENTS OF THE EARLY TO LATER CHRISTIAN MYSTERIES PRESERVED IN CHRISTENDOM'S MONUMENTS

Ritualistic Hand & Wrist Grasping & Arm gestures in Art Works & Writings: All throughout historic Christianity, depictions of creation dramas in the Garden of Eden, show Adam and Eve being instructed in symbolical ritualistic type of mysteries that include different types of hand & and wrist grips.³⁶⁶⁴

Dr. E. S. Drower notes that the mystery drama includes a representation of "the creation of Adam" and a ritualistic "handclasp."³⁶⁶⁵ Included with these aspects are oath and prayer gestures,³⁶⁶⁶ with both hands, or one hand raised up.³⁶⁶⁷ The pre-existence of Christ is also to be noted in these dramas too, because the pre-incarnate Christ, or his Spirit, before it was later clothed in a body through his birth to Mary, is often depicted instructing Adam and Eve, along with God the Father and angels, sometimes three angels.³⁶⁶⁸ The angels are also depicted making prayer gestures, and other gestures with their arms that Adam and Eve also make during these creation dramas.³⁶⁶⁹ In some cases, they make them in response to the hand of God that extends out of heaven.³⁶⁷⁰ The aprons, garments and robes are mentioned,³⁶⁷¹ and depicted too, for God or angels come down from heaven, to cloth them in garments.³⁶⁷² Their hands are joined in marriage³⁶⁷³ and they're banished from Eden to begin life outside of Eden, where they continue to perform the gestures that the angels, the pre-incarnate Christ, and God had showed them.³⁶⁷⁴ Angels, Christ and even God the Father sometimes descend from heaven to visit them and instruct them on how they will be able to return to their pre-incarnate glory in heaven, through the atonement of Christ, and after Christ rescues them up out of hell by clasping their hands and wrists during the future descent into hell and "anastasis" or resurrection.³⁶⁷⁵ Some of these art works were in, or near baptistries to illustrate how that fallen Adam and Eve, representing humanity, are raised up, by their hands or wrist, out of limbo, hades, hell, the grave, or underworld, during the harrowing of hell. Baptism and earlier baptisms for the dead, and historic liturgical rites for the dead, were ritualistic types of this drama, and so it was fitting for the creation drama to be depicted, in many cases, in baptisteries.³⁶⁷⁶ In other cases, other aspects of the creation drama include depictions of the council in heaven, war in heaven, Satan and his angels being thrust out of heaven, and their fall from heaven.³⁶⁷⁷

In a psalter, the Canterbury Psalter, from the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris, based on a Psalter from Utrecht, the pre-existing, or "Cosmic Christ" is depicted as existing before the creation of the earth, creating the earth, plant life, animal life, and Adam and Eve. In one scene Adam stands with up-lifted hands towards the pre-existing Christ as if in praise and prayer. In other scenes, he instructs Adam and Eve.³⁶⁷⁸

On a silver looking cup, chalice(?), date ?, is the Creation of Eve, etc. In th is case God's right-hand grips Eve's left wrist.³⁶⁷⁹

In a cutout from the fresco paintings at the loggia's interior east wall of the plague cross on Arndorfer Street, market town Maria Saal, district Klagenfurt Land, Carinthia, Austria, E U. Eve's wrist are being clasped by God's left hand.³⁶⁸⁰

1100 c. God's left hand holds the sleeping Adam's left arm, below his wrist, as God take a rib from Adam's side to create Eve.³⁶⁸¹

11th--12th c., in the creation of Eve, bas-relief by Wiligelmo, facade of Modena Cathedral, Christ's left hand thumb rests on about the middle of Eve's right hand palm, but closer to the wrist area than in other cases. Hence, she is being pulled out of a sleeping Adam's right side by the pre-incarnate Christ.³⁶⁸²

1138, Niccolò, fl. c 1120--50, a Romanesque sculptor, shows, in one of six scenes of Genesis, the creation of Eve. Here, she is being pulled out of sleeping Adam's right side by her right wrist that is grasped by what could be the pre-existing Christ's right hand.³⁶⁸⁵

A 12th or 13th century miniature, shows God, or perhaps the pre-existing Christ grasping, with his left hand, the right wrist of Eve to raise her out of Adam's side.

Eve, both arms raised, as if in prayer. Another scene shows their wrist being grasped by a person performing a wedding ceremony, hence, like in numerous other depictions of marriage,³⁶⁸⁶ where the priest or religious leader grasps the wrist to pull the bride's and grooms hands together to make the hand shake of marriage, so also are Eve's and Adam's wrists grasped too.³⁶⁸⁷

12–13th c., stained glass windows in Chapelle de la Vierge of Cathédrale Saint-Julien du Mans. Creation of Eve. In this case, both of Eve's hands are stretched out before her, raised, palms together, as God clasps both of her wrists with his right hand.³⁶⁸⁸

Early 13th century, Amiens Cathedral (Cathédrale Notre-Dame d'Amiens), France. Creation of Eve, stone work of God. With his right hand up in blessing, his left-hand grips Eve's raised right hand. Both of her hands are raised as if in the common prayer gesture. Thus, she is being pulled up into physical life out of sleeping Adam's right side.³⁶⁹⁰

13th c., God pulls Eve into life out of Adam's side by grasping, with his left hand, the left wrist of Eve.³⁶⁹¹

14th century, Schwerin Cathedral (Mecklenburg). Chapel of the Assumption of Mary: Red-chalk drawings to a fresco showing biblical scenes - Creation of Eve. Not a clear example, but a discernable left-hand grasp from a winged angel to Eve's right wrist, another winged angel is behind the other.³⁶⁹⁷

14th century, in a manuscript of the Illuminated pages of the Naples Bible, a two headed God, one body God the Father and Son, grasps, with their right hand, the right wrist of Eve to pull her out of the side of sleeping Adam.³⁶⁹⁸

14th c., on outside, weather worn, chipped stone work of the Creation of Eve. God's right-hand grasping Eve's left wrist. This is on the stairs in the courtyard of the gothic Corvaja Palace ("Palazzo Corvaja").³⁶⁹⁹

1332, in series of Christian art works that depict the creation drama. One section shows what could be pre-existing souls taking part in the creation along with the pre-existing Christ. Other sections show the pre-existing Christ creating other forms of life. The last section on this particular page shows Christ grasping, with his left hand, the right hand of Eve, as he pulls her out of the sleeping Adam's side.³⁷⁰⁰

1336–43, Andrea Pisano, (active c. 1290–1349 in Pisa), Creation of Eve, Marble, Museo dell'Opera del Duomo, Florence. God's left hand grips Eve's right wrist.³⁷⁰¹

1372, God's right hand raised in blessing, while his left wrist grasps the right wrist of Eve to pull her out of Adam's side into life.³⁷⁰⁴

1410, Donatello, The Creation of Eve, but in this case, God embraces Eve as she enters physical life through Adam's side.³⁷⁰⁵

1440–1525, in the middle portion of a work by Monte de Giovanni, different scene of the creation drama are depicted, some of which show the Father pulling Eve out of Adam's side, while another shows Adam and Eve clasping each others' right hands, perhaps in marriage.³⁷⁰⁷

In the Vienna triptych, Akademie der bildenden Künste, the war in heaven, in which Satan and his angels are being thrust out, and fall from heaven, plus the creation drama down below these scenes, shows the pre-existing Christ grasping, with his left hand, the left wrist of Eve.³⁷⁰⁸ This work, is similar, though also different to the works by Hieronymus Bosch, A.D. 1450–1516, who also depicts Christ clasping the wrist of Eve, except, that Christ's left hand clasps Eve's right wrist.³⁷⁰⁹

1480, Postilla in Bibliam, Nicolaus de Lyra Troyes, Creation of Eve. An older looking crowned God, gray beard, with his left hand extended towards Eve, he lets her clasp that hand like the traditional homage hand clasp, God's hand is inbetween both of Eve's hands.³⁷¹⁰

1482 and circa 1516, Hieronymus Bosch, (c. 1450 – 9 August 1516), art entitled: The Last Judgment, inner left-wing (Paradise). Above the Creation of Eve is pre-existence themes, legendized. The war in heaven, the fallen angels as insect like winged creatures flying out from the presence of God. Down below this, the pre-existing Christ (?). Adam is still asleep, Eve is on her knees, completely now out of Adam's side. Christ's right hand is raised in blessing, while his left hand grasps Eve's right arm above the elbow area.³⁷¹¹

16th century stain glass window, both of Eve's hands are up, palms together, as if praying to God, while God's

1510–20, after Hieronymus Bosch, attributed to Hieronymus Bosch. Entitled, the Hay Wagon. Left inner wing of the Escorial Hay Wain Triptych, showing Paradise during Creation of Eve. Above scenes, a legendized war in heaven, with the fall of the angels, turning into winged insect type creatures. Below this, God has just created Eve, no hand or wrist grasping, in this case.³⁷¹⁶

In Russian Folk lore and creation legends from the Tombov Province, a possible reference to the hand clasps in the creation story is mentioned in this way: "God took them by the hand, and they went with him into the heavenly gardens and sang praise to God."³⁷¹⁷

1585(?), Sucevita Monastery, Eastern Orthodox convent, Northeastern part of Romania. Built 1585 by Ieremia Movila, Gheorghe Movila and Simion Movila. The Sucevita murals have a series of frescos, that shows many things. The ladder to heaven, with God greeting, by right hand to right wrist-grip, those who've made it to the top to enter heaven. They are also crowned by angels, while others fall off, or are pulled off by winged black skinned & horned headed demons. Other scenes show the creation of Adam, both of God's hands look to be clasping Adam's right hand. Next over right to this is perhaps the creation of Eve, with God's right hand raised to bless, while his left grips Eve's right hand.³⁷¹⁸

1585(?), Sucevita also has another depiction of the creation of Eve, with God's right hand grasping Eve's right wrist.³⁷¹⁹

Late 16th century, Scottish or British, canvas worked with wool, Creation of Eve, God's right hand clasping Eve's right wrist.³⁷²⁰

Mid to later 17th century (?), Wallfahrtskirche Gartlberg, Pfarrkirchen, Upper Bavaria, Germany, Creation of Eve. An older-looking God, gray-beard, behind his head is a triangle trinity symbol as halo. He is gripping Eve's left hand with his right, as her thumb rests on God's thumb knuckle area. Thus, Eve is entering physical life from sleeping Adam's side.³⁷²²

OATH & VOWS IN HISTORIC CHRISTENDOM

Deuteronomy 10:20, "Thou shalt fear the LORD thy God; him shalt thou serve, and to him shalt thou cleave, and swear by his name." Cleaving might suggest a hand clasping oath of homage, if so, these were passed down into later ceremonies of historic Christendom.³⁷²⁵

The Early anti-Christians charged that the early Christians were taking conspiratorial oaths, plotting to destroy the Roman Government. But after investigations, and witness statements of early Christians, & even apostates from the early Christian faith said that they had taken oaths, but that they had not been conspiratorial. They said these oaths were a vow that they should do no wrong, or any crimes, etc.³⁷²⁶

529, onwards, St. Benedict of Nursia, (480–544), at Monte Cassino, demolished a pagan temple & founded a monastery. Part of his Benedictine rule included a period of learning, that they should serve as a novitiate, pass through a period or state of being a novice, (or a person who has entered a religious order and is under probation, before taking vows). "Hitherto no vows had been demanded of those who entered the monastic life. Benedict felt that the aspirant should serve a novitiate, and learn by experience the austerities to be required of him; and only after such a trial might he take the vows. Then, if he wished, he was to pledge himself, in writing, to "the perpetuity of his stay," "the reformation of his manners, and obedience." The vow, signed and witnessed, was to be laid upon the altar by the novice himself in a solemn ritual."³⁷²⁷

During the Middle Ages, Christian ceremonies had an influence on Knight Orders's ceremonies. Squires who longed to be dubbed knights passed through different versions of Knighthood rites that might include, among other things, prayers with up-lifted hands, oaths, ceremonial baths, being clothed in new garments. Some of the arming symbolism & protective garment themes, which was for protection of himself, others, & to protect Nobles, Kings & the church, included the mail shirt, receiving a shield, & sword.³⁷²⁸ In Christian rites of passage, hand and wrist grips were made during feudal homage oaths done by Nobles with Christian kings.³⁷²⁹ Honorius addressed the militant oaths of Knighthood: "Soldiers! You are an arm of the Church, because you defend it against its enemies. Your duty is to aid the oppressed, refrain from rapine and fornication, repress those who impugn the Church with evil acts and resist the rebels against priesthood."³⁷³⁰

Mid 8th century, Boniface, was the English Archbishop of Mainz, a loyal servant of Pope Zacharias, (reign 741–52), a Greek from Calabria. Boniface demanded that every bishop under his jurisdiction swear an oath of submission to the Church of Rome, St. Peter and his Vicar.³⁷³¹

789 & 802, Charles the Great, had changed the vassal's oath, & revived the general oath of fealty, which was said to have fallen into disuse at the end of the 7th century. He imposed the general oath of fealty on all freemen, which bound all freemen to the King. The change being that it was without feudal intermediaries, & thus that aspect fell into oblivion. But the change also made the oath more binding & potent, as an oath of homage, (which also must have included the traditional hand clasping with them too).³⁷³²

943, Edmund of the West Saxon monarchy, exact an oath of fealty from all men, 'sicut homo debet esse fidelis domino suo'. While in the Frankish kingdom had a general oath of fealty that had fallen into disuse as early as the 9th century.³⁷³³

1059, as the apostasy caused other aspects of the earlier Christian mysteries to become corrupted, the earlier vows & oaths must have also passed through retrogression stages. A possible case in point could be the oath from the Berengar of Tours. In 1178, that oath was used by a council headed by a papal legate to have a Cathar at Toulouse to recant by repeating the oath. Thus, while oaths were being used for good commitments to live a moral life, defend the church & help the helpless, they were also being used in judicial settings to try to get different ones to accept the theocracy dogmas & rituals that came along & were being enforced. Or to witness against others in Inquisition methods.³⁷³⁴

1072, according to the epic movie, 1961, of El Cid, the Castilian nobility led by El Cid and a dozen "oath-helpers" forced Alfonso to swear publicly on holy relics multiple times in front of Santa Gadea (Saint Agatha) Church in Burgos that he did not participate in the plot to kill his brother.³⁷³⁵ Marcos Giráldez de Acosta painting, 1864, depicts the "Santa Gadea Oath". In the middle of the scene, Alfonso VI (with red cape) is swearing with his right hand on the Bible that he did not take part in the murder of his brother Sancho II, while El Cid stands as a witness in front of him. Alfonso VI (1040-1109), the Brave. King of Leon, Castile and Galicia. Oath of Santa Gadea, 1072. Alfonso VI and El Cid. Engraving in History of Spain, 19th century.³⁷³⁶ By the 15th century, swearing oaths to royalty, oaths of allegiance, were still part of Spain's Christian heritage & coronation type customs.³⁷³⁷

In 1098, disgusted with the life of many monks corrupted by their ever growing wealth, immorality & the bad name monasteries were thus getting amongst the common folks, a new order was founded by Robert, abbot of Molesme. He erected a new monastery at Cîteaux near Dijon, France, & the "Cistercians," order tried to live St. Benedict's rule in all its severity. Their vow of poverty was also pushed to the extreme to counter the corruption of wealth, that many monks who had become wealthy, unfortunately fell into.³⁷³⁸

1128, the Knight Templars swore: "I will imitate the death of my Lord, because as Christ laid down His life for me, so am I prepared to lay down my life for my brethren."³⁷³⁹

1159, in Policraticus, ceremonies of knighthood, John of Salisbury, spoke of a new and solemn custom. The new knight went to the church on the day of his knighting, places his sword on the altar, took it up again, as a token that he offered himself & his sword to the service of God. Earlier they'd taken a solemn military oath, in this case, they didn't, but the act was just as good as an oath, which had the same obligation of obedience to the church that bishops & abbots make to their superiors. During the Middle Ages, the vow & oath ceremonial for knighthood was similar to ecclesiastical versions. The word 'ceremonial' includes 'monial' which is also the name for symbols in the middle of clerical & kingly gloves. In oaths or vows of homage depicted in art, hand clasping takes place on the monial symbol in gloves. The person kneeling before the cleric, or kings, would thus clasp, or kiss the monial in coronation ceremonies, homage oath takings, that eventually became common greetings. While in the case with kings & clerics ascending to the throne, or their seat of office, the hand & wrist grasping, with the other ceremonial aspects, anointing, vesting, crowning, enthroning, were also part of their ceremonial rites of deification. Just like in hand & wrist grasps of Christ deifying Adam, (who represents humanity), during his ascension or resurrection in many Anastasis icons. The fragments of these earlier Christian mysteries & their symbolical meanings, thus seem to have been spread into the ceremonial symbolism of coronations of Knights, Priests, Queens & Priests.³⁷⁴⁰ Ceremonial baptism for clerics, a bath for Knights, ceremonial clothing in undergarments & robes, for Knights. While for clerics, anointing, being clothed, often in a white undergarment, then clerical robes of their office. Vows & oaths sworn, were some times done on a Gospel, relic, or holy book, in which they covenanted to defend the church. These types of oaths were done by Knights, Queens, Kings & clerics. For clergy, a clerical hand clasping, to be raised into their office, sometimes from a kneeling position, or sitting position. Plus, in some cases there is a hand clasp along with a kiss on the gloved hand, or ring. While for knights, hands placed in between those, they swore homage to. While in other cases their hands are over the hands of the King. Same types of things with a cleric to their superior cleric, in swearing oaths of homage to defend the church, etc.³⁷⁴¹

1215, it was ordered, by the Inquisition, that in each parish a clergy & several laymen were to be bound under oath to denounce heretics.³⁷⁴²

13th century, in a depiction of the creation drama, the pre-existing Christ confronts Adam and Eve, perhaps about why they have fig leaves on. Adam is pointing over to Eve as if saying that she gave him the fruit to eat. Eve has her right hand raised as if acknowledging that they did eat. Or perhaps it may be that she might be performing a vow or oath, if that is, fragments of the earlier Christian mysteries were preserved in part in this series of art works.³⁷⁴³

Other monastic oaths concerned vows or oaths of poverty, such as those of different Orders, Cistercian monks & Franciscans, early 13th century.³⁷⁴⁴

The early Christian church recognized the property implications of betrothals: "De Sponsalibus et Donationibus ante Nuptias," which required a contract sworn before witnesses.³⁷⁴⁵ 1275-1291, in another, depicting the marriage of Abraham and Sara, their right wrists are being grasped by the one performing the marriage. Their hands aren't joined yet, hence the artist shows the moment before the grasp. Sara's left hand is raised as if performing a wedding vow.³⁷⁴⁶

1308, some barons questioned the interpretations of their oaths, especially to those judged as unsuitable princes. Against Edward II, the barons declared: "Our homage and oath of allegiance ... bind us more by reason of the Crown than by reason of the king's person ... Whence, if the king does not behave reasonably ... his liege men, by the oath taken to the Crown, are justly bound ... to repair it, otherwise their oath is violated."³⁷⁴⁷

Early 14th c., Thomas Aquinas's secretary, Ptolemy of Lucca (died 1327), observed that the emperor received the Empire "from the Church under oath like a vassal getting a fief, which is why the Church can depose him more easily than other princes."³⁷⁴⁸

1340, in Gothic art in Bohemia, two marriage scenes, those of Joseph to Mary and Sarah and Tobias. In one, a bishop is grasping the wrists of the couple to bring their right hands together. The groom's right hand is clasping the bride's right, while both of their left hands are raised as if to signify their wedding vows.³⁷⁴⁹

In later Christianity, Christian pilgrims & hermits had oaths or vows that they would do. "...Hermits had, in fact, been enrolled into a new order in the midthirteenth century by Innocent IV. They adopted the rule of St Augustine and were known at first as the Eremiti Augustini. They increased rapidly and formed communities soon known as the Augustine or Austin Friars. Hermits who wished to live in seclusion or in very small companies were still referred to as Eremites.... Before being able to profess himself as a hermit it was necessary first for a postulant to obtain a hermitage or at least land and the means to build one. Then the consent of the bishop of the diocese was needed for permission to enter the order. Finally a religious service was held at which the prospective hermit took his vows. On 13 May 1394, John Ferrers of Norfolk went before the bishop of Norwich in the chapel of Thorpe and swore, I, John Ferrers, not married, promise and avow to God our Lady St Mary and all the saints, in the presence of you, reverend father in God, Richard, bishop of Norwich, the vow of chastity, after the rule of St Paul the eremite. In the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost. John's new garments and his crook, resembling that of a shepherd, were blessed and sprinkled with holy water, psalms were sung and prayers offered that he would worthily follow the life of a hermit...."³⁷⁵⁰

14–15th centuries, France & the Netherlands, to what extent the early Christian mysteries' vows & oaths were passed down in their original formulas & purposes are questionable. It seems that by these later centuries, some earlier aspects survived in different religious & civic settings oath or vow ceremonies. But, in some cases too, vows & oaths had lost their seriousness in some ways, and were taken for just about every superstitious deal, or ordinary occasion that came along, & thus hardly meant anything binding to a lot of the common folks, while in other cases they were taken serious too.³⁷⁵¹ "The cross of Saint Laud was specially sent for from Angers to take an oath upon, for Louis [XI reigned over France, 1461–83] made a difference between oaths taken on one relic and on another. These are traits reminding us of the Merovingian times."³⁷⁵²

14th–15th centuries, Orders of Christian Chivalry & Knighthoods, inherited mixture of monastic vows, & other vows or oaths, from the early Christians. These different types of oaths, as they developed in Knightly Orders, became a mixture of other militant oaths from other cultures' militant traditions. Like earlier ones in the early Christian mysteries, some of these vows or oaths were serious promises to commitments & covenants to improve their characters towards developing Christian moral perfection, & to protect themselves, the church, pilgrims, & others in danger, as well as their fellow Knights. Oaths of homage to a Lord, King, Queen or church cleric, often included different types of hand grasping ceremonies, with hands placed inside of the hands of those they swore to protect, when called upon, in times of war, or some other situation, where their skills at arms was said to be needed.³⁷⁵³

1454, during the Burgundian festivities at Lille, the guests took an oath to undertake the crusade.³⁷⁵⁵ By the mid-15th century, Spain, with the Moors having troubled the Christian lands in Spain for a long time: "For centuries the Christian kings had taken their oaths of office with the pledge to destroy the infidel kingdom of the south."³⁷⁵⁶

1483–84, by this time, perhaps the use of oaths & vows in the early Christian mysteries had become more & more traditionalized towards having people commit to more political-religious issues, & settings. Whatever might have been the case, Tomás de Torquemada, (Oct. 1482, appointed inquisitor for Aragon & Valencia), made the Jewish rabbis of Toledo, Spain, to swear an oath that they would become informants against their own people. While for other examples of oaths, Worthies in Barcelona had complained to King Ferdinand that Torquemada's appointments of 2 new inquisitors had gone without approval & were "against the liberties, constitutions, and agreements solemnly sworn by Your Majesty!" Others oath taking cases, in Inquisition setting, influential Conversos (Jews forced to become Christians), were also forced to take an oath that they would do all in their power to ferret out lapsed Christians.³⁷⁵⁷

About 1512, Martin Luther, for his Doctor of Theology, at the University of Wittenberg, swore an oath, with his left hand, 'on the holy gospels,' to defend the holy scripture, & not to teach doctrines that the Catholic church had condemned. He also swore to defend other things related to the school & faculty.³⁷⁵⁸

Later, in Martin Luther's 27 Proposals for Improving the State of Christendom, #8 suggested that: "the far-reaching and fearful oaths, which bishops are wrongfully compelled to swear to the pope, should be abolished. They keep the bishops bound like domestic servants...." He goes on to point out the source for the oath as being in the Significasti.³⁷⁵⁹

Some Christians took a vow before going on a pilgrimage. During the Middle Ages, monks and nuns were "men and women who had taken life-long vows of poverty, obedience and chastity". The medieval Church influenced the oaths and vows taken by the sovereign kings and rulers who believed that their right to rule was given to them from God. During the coronation ceremonies the king "had to take an oath to defend the Church and be faithful to his people, and was anointed with oil to consecrate or set him apart for his position." Some art works depict different aspects of the coronation ceremonies. One such work, is of "the Order of the Coronation of the Kings of France the king kneels before the altar and is anointed by the Bishop with oil as a sign that he is set apart to rule his people in the name of God." Some took vows of silence. St. Francis vowed that he would rid himself of his possessions and devote himself to the service of the poor. Friars took the same vows of poverty, chastity and obedience just as monks and nuns had, except the friars worked in the community rather than in a secluded monastery as the monks and nuns did.³⁷⁶⁰

"Many pilgrims also kept the vow of chastity on the way; others did not. Hence the proverb Ir romera y volver ramera ("Go a pilgrim, return a whore"). . . . Many went on pilgrimages to fulfill a vow made either by themselves or on behalf of another. Such a vow could be made in the case of recovery from a severe illness in which the intercession of the saint was believed to have restored one from the very brink of death. Or, again, one might have been in severe physical danger and promised to visit a shrine if one should be delivered from the peril. Such vows had a component of cupboard love in the religious motive if undertaken for a parent or other relative, or out of charity for a friend, or as a member of a guild for other members. . . . Aeneas Silvius Piccolomini who led a dissolute life before becoming a priest. . . in fulfillment of a vow he made during a tempest. . . he walked barefoot on the frozen ground to White Kirk near North Berwick and on his return had to be carried rather than led by his servants. . . . The importance of the vow of poverty was stressed in the narration of The Life of Saint Alexis."³⁷⁶¹

1540, a new religious order was formed, The Jesuits, or "The Society of Jesus," organized by a Spaniard, Ignatius de Loyola. He had them take vows of poverty, celibacy, & obedience. They swore absolute obedience to the pope. The pope granted them immunity from taxation & exempted them from the jurisdiction of the bishops.³⁷⁶²

17th century, in Paris, at the Hôpital de la Salpêtrière, on Easter, one of the children, according to custom, repeated the baptismal vow and all present kissed the font.³⁷⁶³ There were baptismal vows, and wedding vows too.

1673 – 1716, during the Reign of Saint Louis, according to Manuscript Paintings from Paris, couples, during the wedding ceremonies, grasp each other with their hands, while their other free hands are raised up to make a gestural oath or vow, known as "an oath of fidelity."³⁷⁶⁴

18th century to now, Freemasonry seems to have kept in remembrance these type of oaths & vows of earlier Christian mysteries. In that oaths & vows at the altar are done, which altars have laid upon them their sacred law, often a bible, which was to guide them in building a positive character in living moral & perfected lives. "Because the oath is sworn at the altar in the presence of the Bible or other sacred text, it is seen as a sacred promise sworn within the sight of God."³⁷⁶⁵

1789, oaths upon the sacred text, often a bible, are taken by those sworn into governmental positions & offices, such as in the case with the 1st president, George Washington. What left over fragments of earlier Christian oaths on bibles, during Christian Knightings, & Royal court settings, could have influenced later Freemasonry? Whatever might be the case, the first founding Fathers' oaths in court settings, & for the presidential oaths, were derived from Masonic ones, so it would seem, as in the case with the said swearing in of Washington. For it was administered by Robert Livingstone, the Grand Master of New York's Grand Lodge.³⁷⁶⁶

ANCIENT PRAYER GESTURES & CIRCLES

Numerous, early to later Christian art works of the Prophet Daniel are often depicted as praying in the lions' den, with up- lifted hands. In the Mosaic- Hebrew sacrifices, one of the prayer gestures was to stand praying with up-lifted hands. These types of prayer gestures have also been discovered in the New World,-- the ancient Americas.³⁷⁶⁸ The early to later Christians of the scattered branches of Christianity had developed different ways to pray. Some of the gestures were moving gestures with symbolical meanings. As the centuries went by, prayer gestures and prayer circles faded off into traditional round dances, which were in some cases symbolic of the round dance that the righteous and the angels do while holding hands in the afterlife realms of paradise. Other later art works, such as The Birth of the Virgin, shows small children angels clasping hands and forming a circle in the air.³⁷⁶⁹

A.D. 30—100, Clement of Rome, writing to the Corinthians, wrote: "Full of holy designs, ye did, with true earnestness of mind and a godly confidence, stretch forth your hands to God Almighty, beseeching Him to be merciful unto you, if ye had been guilty of any involuntary transgression."³⁷⁷⁰

Further on Clement of Rome wrote: "Let us then draw near to Him with holiness of spirit, lifting up pure and undefiled hands unto Him, loving our gracious and merciful Father, who has made us partakers in the blessing of His elect."³⁷⁷¹

Justin Martyr, A.D. 110—165, in his Dialogue With Trypho, wrote how that Moses outstretched hands was a prayer gestural type of the cross.³⁷⁷² In later Christian works of the cross, on each side of the horizontal parts of the arms of the cross, there are people with up-lifted hands, as if making the traditional Christian prayer gesture.³⁷⁷³

Clement of Alexandria, A.D. 153-193-217, wrote how they "raise the head and lift the hands towards heaven, and stand on tiptoe as we join in the closing outburst of prayer".³⁷⁷⁴ He also wrote: "Come to our mysteries and you shall dance with the angels around the Unbegotten and Eternal one, while Logos of God sings along with us. . . the great High Priest of God, who prays for men and instructs them."³⁷⁷⁵

In the third century catacombs, St. Callistus, Rome, is a fresco of a Christian woman, praying with up-lifted hands, and with her face veiled.³⁷⁷⁶

Second half of the third century, in the painted ceilings of the catacomb of SS. Pietro e Marcellino, Rome, Christ, represented as being the Good Shepherd, is encircled by praying figures with up lifted hands in four directions, and one showing Jonah, with up-lifted hands, being swallowed by a great fish.³⁷⁷⁷

330, Christian sarcophagus, Nat. Mus. Rome, shows a female figure praying with hands held out at shoulder or neck level.³⁷⁸¹

St. Ambrose, A.D. 340—397, Bishop of Milan, "speaks of the believer as dancing the spiritual dance in the ecstasy of faith. One of the most interesting survivals in this connection is in the apocryphal of Acts of John (94—102) where there is a round dance of the Twelve Apostles with Jesus at the centre."³⁷⁸²

First half of the 4th century, on a Christian sarcophagus, Mus. Pio Cristiano, Vatican, a praying female figure holds her hands at neck level.³⁷⁸³

In many early Christian ceremonies, after baptism, washing, anointing, clothing in a white garment, the sacrament or Eucharist given them, the initiates took part in becoming "orants," (or praying with up raised hands. In some cases, they prayed in a circle. Cyril of Jerusalem, 315-386, for example, explains that this rite began with the deacon providing water for the officiating priest to wash his hands with. Surrounding the altar in a circle, the deacon has them kiss one another in a form of reconciliation, or to restore friendly relations between. They weren't suppose to have bad feelings towards each other, if they were to take part in the prayer circle. The priest then prays in behalf of those in the circle, for a blessing on the Eucharist, for kings, soldiers, allies, the sick & offers up petitions, in behalf of the dead, thus, prayers for the dead.³⁷⁸⁴

Coptic Christians, Praying Couple Curtain, 5th-6th century Antinoë, Egypt. Both with up-lifted hands. In the Benaki Museum, Athens.³⁷⁸⁵

In Coptic Christian art works a number of examples show the traditional prayer gesture as being with up-lifted hands. This prayer gesture was also done by many different pagan religions in the Old world area. Two reliefs of the Egyptian national saint, Menas show a person with up-lifted hands. Also a "Praying man with a cross." Is said to have been found on a "Fragment of a limestone niche from Sheikh Abada". Another fragment of a limestone relief shows a "priestly saint praying" with up-lifted hands.³⁷⁸⁶

Prayers for the dead, or art works showing the dead praying, still show them with up lifted hands. For example in early Christian sarcophagi art, Old Testament themes are shown with other types and themes, such as God delivering his faithful servants, Daniel in the lions den with up lifted hands in prayer, the three Children in the fiery furnace, again often shown with up lifted hands. "On the whole, these scenes are visual counterparts of prayers said in the Office of the Dead, in the form it is known to have had since the Middle Ages, and also of the invocations in other Christian prayers. The same practice had obtained in the earlier Jewish and Gnostic liturgies". In Jewish and Christian images, such as Noah saved from the flood and Daniel in the lion's den,³⁷⁸⁷ "both with their arms raised in prayer, were familiar themes in the Jewish iconography of Antiquity."³⁷⁸⁸

The prayer gesture with up-lifted hands is seen in later Christian art works. For example, Monks and others are depicted as praying with up-lifted hands.³⁷⁸⁹ "...Another miniature (folio 37a, Fig. 20) represents the longitudinal cross section of a magnificent Gothic cathedral with the royal couple at prayer" [in this case, the couple do not have their hands raised up,] "while monks praying in the open,..." [a number of them, not all, are depicted as lifting their hands towards heaven.]³⁷⁹⁰

Prayer gestures with up-lifted hands were done by orthodox Christians as well as some of those who were considered heretics. "Among the Christian heretics of the later Roman age were the monophysites, who held that Christ was not human and divine, but had one composite nature. A sixth century fresco from one of their churches near Asyut represents the three children of Babylon in the fiery furnace." It also shows a number of persons with up-lifted hands as if in prayer.³⁷⁹¹

7th century, Frank Agilbert, trained in Ireland, became the bishop of Wessex, and was present at the Synod of Whitby, and died bishop of Paris. His tomb, now at Jouarre, east of Paris, shows souls in a last Judgment scene, with up-lifted hands in prayer. Another parallel tomb is found in Northumbria.³⁷⁹²

827—844, Rome, in the mosaics of the vault chapel of San Zeno, Christ is depicted in a circle, while four angels, with up-lifted hands, touch the circle. Hence, it may be that this could be a fragment that preserves, in part, the prayer circle traditions.³⁷⁹³

9th-10th c., some ivories showing the celebration of the mass, shows the participants around the cleric in the middle. In one ivory of this, the cleric in the middle has raised hands, out away from him slightly, about shoulder level. In his left hand, he holds a book (song-book, gospel, scriptures, instructional book for the mass?) In this case, there is no altar in the middle visible. He is surrounded by different 12 participants making different arm gestures. They are all facing the cleric in the middle, one with his back to us, has both-hands raised out away from him slightly, about his head level, palms facing away from us, fingers point upwards, thumbs extended. 3 of the other participants, going upward on our right, make arm gestures, first one's left hand is visible, the other two participants' hands are not. But all three might be making the same gestures, like as the first, that has his left-hand palm up, fingers curled in slightly, his right extended out, palm facing us, thumb up, fingers extended in front of him, about mid level to him. The other two have their right hands are similar to the first, but their left hands are not visible. On our left, the first 3 have their left hands extended out as described, except two of them have their fingers curled in. Their right hands, all visible in their case, are up by their right shoulder, right breast area, thumbs up, palms facing them, not us. These 6 seem to be either singing, or praying, at least their mouths are open, as if speaking, or chanting. The 5 at the top area, behind the one in the middle, are holding things in their hands, different things, (relics, books, bread for the Eucharist?). Their mouths, as the one in the middle of the circle, are not open. Another ivory, shows a similar 5, doing the same as the said 5 at the top, as in the other ivory. The cleric in this case, is behind an altar that has a chalice in the middle on it, with two books on each side, one opened, & a plate with three ring type objects on it (3 breads for the trinity?). At the bottom, facing the one in the middle, the middle person of the 5 has both hands raised about head level, palms facing away from us, thumbs extended slightly, fingers pointing upwards & together. At least two of the others are making the same types of gestures, but differently, as in the other ivory. Two of the 5 have their backs to us & we can't see if they are making any gestures or not. But at least 4 of that 5 have their mouths open as if singing the mass, or praying, or chanting. Two angels, each with wings, are at the top of the ivory, have their hands raised at about shoulder level, up by their arm pits, fingers extended away from them, thumbs up, palms facing us.³⁷⁹⁴ To what extent did different aspects of the prayer circle survive in the celebration of the mass?

11th—13th century, is the date given for an icon that shows the Virgin Mary, praying with up-lifted hands.³⁷⁹⁵

1020, Saxony, in a famous legend of the Middle Ages, The Cursed Carollers of Kölbigk, in his Life of St. Edith, the Flemish-born monk named Goscelin, through a pilgrim named Theodoric, tells the tale about the pilgrim's claims about a miracle that took place in Saxony about 1020. Here in this legend is what could be a faded fragment of the prayer circle, which in later centuries faded off into circular hand clasping dances. Twelve people were gathered at the Church of St. Magnus in Kölbigk on Christmas Eve, led by one Gerluus, in the company of two girls, Mersuind and Wibecyna, and the priest's daughter Ava, whom they forced to join the circle. There, they "joined hands and danced in the churchyard." This round dance or carol, was echoed by those who repeated certain parts. However, the manner in which it was done upset the priest who asked them to stop. When they refused, he invoked, through Saint Magnus, the wrath of the Lord upon them, and they found that they couldn't break the circle or stop dancing.³⁷⁹⁶

1341-9, those who took part in later circular dances, form a circle by grasping each others' wrists and hands. An example of this in the Monastery Church, Lesnovo, Serbia. Wall painting of Psalm 150, dated 1341-9.³⁷⁹⁷

1420's, Fra Angelico's Last Judgment depicts the round dance of the angels in paradise, in which saints clasp hands with the angels when they enter the circle that is being formed.³⁷⁹⁸

1431, Fra Angelico, A.D. 1400—55, in his The Last Judgment, shows souls of the blessed and the angels joining hands in a round dance in a paradise type heavenly garden. Others near by watching this circular dance, are making prayer gestures, not the ones with the hands above the head, or at different levels, but with the hands together, with the finger pointing upward, and at about chin level.³⁷⁹⁹

1432, Jan van Eyck's The Adoration of the Lamb, from the Ghent Altarpiece, shows a number of angels around an altar with a lamb standing on it, the lamb representing Christ. A lot of the angels are kneeling, facing the Lamb they've surrounded, their hands are in front of them about chest level, placed together, with fingers upwards, the traditional hands-position of adoration & prayer. In the outer areas, others in almost a half circle are singing, while others are making other gestures with their hands & arms, such as both hands raised about shoulder level.³⁸⁰⁰

In the monastery of St. John Lampadistis, Kalopanayiotis. A work dated back to "ca. 1500" shows the pre-existing Virgin Mary and Christ-child in the middle of the burning bush as part of the vision of Moses. Mary has her hands raised up in the tradition prayer gesture. Another depiction of Mary and the Christ-child, shows them both with up-lifted hands. This one dates back to 1494 A.D. Some of the apostles seem to have been depicted in the act of making prayer gestures during communion with Christ. Another depiction of the Virgin Mary with up-lifted hands dates back to the 2nd decade of the 16th century A.D. Another depiction of the Virgin Mary & the Christ-child shows Mary with up-lifted hands in prayer, this one dates back to 1474 A.D. Another shows a similar scene of Mary & the Christ-child, Mary has up-lifted hands as an orant or one in the act of a prayer gesture. This one is dated back to the 14th century A.D.³⁸⁰¹

1568, shows Mary and the Christ child. Mary's hands are raised as if in the traditional prayer gesture.³⁸⁰²

Prayer gestures in Monastic Egypt: "...his arms outstretched in the form of a cross to heaven, calling on God."³⁸⁰³

In the Biblia Pauperum, "Melchisedech holds a chalice in his right hand, lifting up in his left a Host on which Abraham gazes, his right hand raised in a gesture that is typical of elevation scenes. . . . An Israelite in the background looks up to heaven with both hands outstretched. The gaze towards heaven from which the bread rains down and the raised hands are features of the iconography of the manna in the desert."³⁸⁰⁴ It may be that the up raised hands and other gestures mentioned are types of sacramental gestures, and prayer gestures.

Late 19th century, in Russian Icons, St. Serafim of Sarov is depicted on his knees, and with up-lifted hands, while praying.³⁸⁰⁵

Some modern Christians, such as the London staff of the Church Missionary Society, perform a circular dance worship in their chapel. One aspect of it, as it was caught on film, shows a photo of them on their knees in a circle with up lifted hands, clapping or touching each others hands. It is not certain here if this modern method of worship was derived from earlier Christian prayer circle dances, or if it is part of other traditions. Whatever might be the case, it is interesting to note a possible fragment of the earlier traditions.³⁸⁰⁶

VEILS & GARMENT SYMBOLISM IN HISTORIC CHRISTENDOM

Veils were used in historic Christendom,³⁸⁰⁷ in some cases, wedding traditions retained parts of the veil traditions. While in other cases, they were in connection with rites of passage through different realms in the after life, and thus were part of the different versions of the early Christian mystery dramas. Paul, in writing to the Corinthians about the ordinances and prayer, mentions the veil that the woman covered their head with. (1 Cor. 11). In 1898, excavations of ancient Corinth, some of the reliefs included "a veiled female figure," which seems to suggest that veils were used by women in ancient Corinth.³⁸⁰⁸

In early Christian sarcophagus art works, carvings on tombs, different themes from the mysteries were depicted. For inasmuch as the Christian had been "initiated into the true wisdom, i.e. Christian doctrine; a group of musicians evoking the harmony of the celestial abode; masks of the seasons at the two extremities of the coffin, symbols of the eternity of the after-life; a curtain in front of which is the portrait of the dead man; dolphins and sea monsters reminding us of his voyage to the Other World; or scenes of the hunt, an ancient funerary theme taken over by the Christians as an allusion to Christ, hunter of souls."³⁸⁰⁹ Note here that there was "a curtain in front of which is the portrait of the dead man", could such a curtain be part of veil lore? A praying figure is called an "orant" often seen in art works with up-lifted hands.³⁸¹⁰

Tertullian, 145-220, what was the dispute "about the veiled dress of women"? (ANF, 3:286, Tertullian, Against Marcion, Book I, Chap. XXI). Was it over how that women in the early Christian church should not be clothed in sexually distracting thin see-through clothing? How that such things were reserved for the activities of Christian marriage between bride & groom? For would a "veiled dress of women," so dressed, if it revealed too much, could become too much of a challenge for males, & their attempts to follow Christ's teachings about not having impure thoughts towards women? (Matt.5:27-28). Or were there disputes over the symbolical meaning of garments, veils, & wedding clothing in marriage settings?

For in some areas of the later Christian church, when many began to discourage marriage, as different ones also sought solitude, even forsook their wife & children to go off & live the celibate life, (or abstaining from marriage and sexual relations for religious reasons).³⁸¹¹

Tertullian wrote at length On the Apparel of Women, & mentions the Tyrian and the violet-colored & grand royal hangings, purple colors & other colors in their garments. The material for them being fashioned from sheep, that are God's creatures he created, but which are not born purple or sky-blue in color of their fleeces. Such clothing, & hangings of veils or perhaps curtains, or clothing that hanged on the pagans, while involved in their profane pleasure seeking activities of worldly shows, such as at their idolatry, frenzies of the racecourse, atrocities of the arena, turpitudes of the stage, etc., which a Christian shouldn't take part in. As if hinting to how that such apparel, or garments are defiled by such activities, (See: Rev. 3:1, 4-5), Tertullian further on wrote, how that in the pagans thus having used fashioned the fleeces of the sheep into hangings, & garments that they put on during their devilish activities, they have there by made the animals victims, for "...the animals which are made victims, are God's workmanship; since even the material thing which is adored is God's (creature). Thus then, too, with regard to their active use, does the origin of material substances, which descends from God, excuses (that use) as foreign to God, as guilty forsooth of worldly glory!" (ANF, 4:17, On The Apparel of Women, chap. 8).

Tertullian goes on with his discourse On the Apparel of Women, cautions about modesty, connects it up with other body types, how that we are "the temple of God," & thus: "Modesty is the sacristan and priestess of that temple, who is to suffer nothing unclean or profane to be introduced (into it), for fear that the God who inhabits it should be offended, and quite forsake the polluted abode." (ANF, 4:18, On The Apparel of Women, book 2, chap. 1).

The types seem clear in what Tertullian is presenting: The materials of the temple, the hangings (curtains or veils), the white garments worn, the other clothing adorned, should remain pure, not polluted, for nothing unclean or profane should be introduced. The women should be dressed modestly, as to help the men taking part in the mysteries, to also remain unpolluted in thought & deeds. They weren't to cloth themselves in vanity, or seek the glory of the world, like in the pagan activities mentioned. But, they were to not make the white fleeces of the sheep, which their white garments, veils, & hangings were probably fashioned from, to therefore become defiled, polluted, unclean through un-modesty, like unto the seductive dress fashions of the pagan culture they lived in. But instead: "That salvation — and not (the salvation) of women only, but like-wise of men — consists in the exhibition principally of modesty." (On the Apparel of Women, Book 2, chap. 1). Tertullian goes on to warn against the relaxed fashions that could tempt Christian women into adorning licentious extravagance of attire, to become more desirable to the males, but which could then end up attributing to them sinning through fornication, etc. Thus, to solve such things before they get started, Tertullian encouraged more modesty in their choice of apparel. He then hints to the reward of doing such things, that of deification & perfection. Thus, Tertullian suggest that to help subdue them becoming an object of carnal appetites, they should not copy the fashions of the pagan cultures they live in, but instead: "Necessary it is that you turn aside from them, as in all other things, so also in your gait; since you ought to be "perfect," as (is) your Father who is in heaven." (ANF, 4:18-19, On the Apparel of Women, Book 2, chap. 1, Matt.5:48).

Tertullian, further on, mentions how they should be clothed in concealment of their bodily beauty to avoid becoming objects of lust, & temptations for the glances of the beholder's eyes. Again he connects the old types of the goodly garment of the soul, (footnote suggest Gen. 17:15, see also 16, garments made from skins of the goats, animal skin-garments). Further on, more garment types of deification & exaltation are contrasted with the vain glories of the flesh & the world: "To us, in the first place, there is no studious pursuit of "glory," because "glory" is the essence of exaltation. Now exaltation is incongruous [or out of place] for professors of humility according to God's precepts. Secondly, if all "glory" is "vain" and insensate, [or 1. lacking physical sensation. 2. lacking sympathy; unfeeling. 3. completely lacking sense or reason,] how much more (glory) in the flesh, especially to us? For even if "glorying" is (allowable), we ought to wish our sphere of pleasing to lie in the graces of the Spirit, not in the flesh; because we are "suitsors" of things spiritual." (ANF, 4:20, On The Apparel of Women, Book 2, chap. 3). Thus, so that both the male & female Christians may be crowned in exaltation, the voluptuousness of the holy Christian women, if so naturally beautiful, should be so adorned in her apparel as to not give occasion for carnal appetite & unchastity, least such exposure becomes a stumbling block (which cause falling), & they give into the temptations of fornication, or adultery, or cause impure thoughts in on looking youth. The exception to the rule, is in the cases between wife & husband, in privacy, but not in public display. Much further on, Tertullian, after discouraging the women from painting their faces, reminds them of veil coverings for their heads. How "God bids you "be veiled." (ANF, 4:20-22, On The Apparel of Women, Book 2, chaps., 3-7, n.4: 1 Cor. 11:2-16, de Or., c. xxii & treatise de Virg. Vel).

Did the early Christians & church Fathers know about how in the Greco-Roman world of the 3rd century, thin-veil like clothing, were sometimes worn by the pagan women to arouse sexual feelings, & thus such things, warned against & disputed over, if practiced by once pagans, now converted Christians, could invite the men into the sins of the flesh? In the Greco-Roman culture, women's "brassiers," were likened unto the "ultimate veil," that was to remain covering the breasts, even during sex, but it must have been thin enough for moon light to shine through, or low fire lighting romantic & erotic settings. For, according to Greco-Roman libertine male policies, if their 3 taboos were followed: "The once chance a descent man had of seeing a little of his beloved's naked skin was if the moon happened to fall upon the open window at just the right moment."³⁸¹² With such see-through veil type clothing thus used in ancient times, on down to modern times, for seductive and sexual arousings.³⁸¹³ Could the early Christians have counter these with their own symbolism & veil wearing rituals, that, like the garments, that were also types of veils, were reminders of their oaths, covenants & promises to God to remain pure, clean, virtuous & to also keep their wedding vows, keeping sex within the bounds of marriage?

Tertullian goes on to warn the blessed sisters of the Christian communities to take heed that they don't adorn themselves in "prostitutionary garbs and garments." He goes on to contrast the rich fashions of the world, in contrast to the fashions of humility. Again, like with other early Christian Fathers, Tertullian continues to the use of garments, veils, & temple clothing, as types of what the Christians were to put on, if they wanted to be perfected & deified. He used 1 Cor. 7:31, to point out how the fashions of this world pass away. Speaking to the rich Christian women, Tertullian, contrast their rich clothing with that made by God: "It was God, too, who devised by careful thought the manufactures of those very garments which, light and thin (in themselves), were to be heavy in price alone...." (ANF, 4:23, On the Apparel of Women, Book 2, chap. 10). As noted, from the art works of women with up-lifted hands in Christian prayer, (Orants), in some cases, they have a thin, see through veil covering their heads. Could this be the types of apparel that Tertullian has in mind? Contrasting it with the veils worn by the rich women in the non-Christian cultures, where such thin see through apparel was, as Tertullian had suggested, something that the Devil, & his fallen angels, the "sinful angels," (Tertullian uses Enoch pre-existent themes), or how "those angels," disclosed both the material substance of this kind & their charms, makeup, jewelry to help tempt couples into the sins of lust of the flesh! He goes on to contrast the clothing worn by the Gentiles, & those of the Christian women, who shouldn't be attending the pagan temples, shows, holy days of Gentiles, or public gatherings, where women like to dress up for show & vanity. He then reminds them of the symbolism in their Christian mysteries, by asking, "...why not go forth clad in your own armour; (and) all the more, in that (you have to go) to such as are strangers of the faith? So that between the handmaids of God and of the devil there may be a difference; and so that you may be an example to them, and they may be edified in you; so that (as the apostle says) "God may be magnified in your body." But magnified He is in the body through modesty: of course, too, through attire suitable to modesty." (ANF, 4:23-24, On The Apparel of Women, Book 2, chap. 10).

Tertullian continued to remind the Christian women of their symbolical meanings & types of their clothing, with the use of Christian types of their mysteries. How that though having rich clothing, they should not let their rich apparel make them vain, but should remember that they had put on, like clothing, humility. For if clothed in those characteristics, it might be said of her: "Ever since she became a Christian, she walked in poorer garb!" Will you fear to appear poorer, from the time that you have been made more wealthy; and fouler, from the time when you have been more clean?... (ANF, 4:24, Book 2, chap. 11).

"It was almost as if the apostles had looked at the women of the early imperial Rome and deliberately taken them as a reverse model of all that was desirable in Christian womanhood. Certainly, they were adamant that every good Christian woman should hide her charms, veil herself in church, and permanently abjure cosmetics.... Every seductive woman was a threat to male salvation. "Even natural beauty," wrote Tertullian, "ought to be obliterated by concealment and neglect, since it is dangerous to those who look upon it."³⁸¹⁴

In the Gentile & pagan cultures, the thin see through head veils & see through clothing of prostitutes, were thus counterfeit veils, of the devil, his reversals of the good symbolical clothing of the Christian women symbolically put on. Thus, they must have also been mis-interpreted by outsiders, as being as if Christian women were harlots. Thus, Tertullian warned the women to be a good example, to shine with good works, so that the non-Christians won't think them as if they were harlots. Their moral, chaste garb should match their shameless character that they ritualistically put on. Further on he reminds them of the ritualistic journey of the soul, often depicted in art, of the white garments that the angels carry souls, such as the martyrs, up to heaven on, for "...the angels who are to carry us are (now) being awaited! Do you go forth (to meet them) already arrayed in the cosmetics and ornaments of the prophets and apostles; drawing your whiteness from simplicity..." He goes on with more types & reminders of their mysteries, how that they were to be dressed, eyes painted, (make up), with modesty, bashfulness, silent mouths, ears to hear the word of God, neck fitted with the yoke of Christ. Head submitted to your husbands, & thus, they'd be enough adorned. Thus, they were to busy their hands with spinning, keep their feet home, & not array themselves in gold, (perhaps symbolic of vanity), but: “Clothe yourselves with the silk of uprightness, the fine linen of holiness, the purple of modesty. Thus painted, you will have God as your Lover!” (ANF, 4:25, Book 2, chap. 13).

In Tertullian’s On The Veiling of Virgins, he continues commenting on the purpose of women’s apparel, & how the veil is for modesty, & is a symbol for virginity. He does a commentary on 1 Cor. 11:5-16, the veiling & unveiling of the women’s head. Of women & virgins keeping themselves covered for modesty sake. He makes reference to the creation drama, Adam & Eve, (often depicted in historic Christian art with hand & wrist grasping, when God raises Adam out of the dust of the earth, or Eve out of Adam’s side). Plus, also in the “marriage-tie,” which in historic Christianity, includes, in many cases, a tie, ribbon, or cloth that is wrapped around the clasped hands of the couple’s joined hands, symbolic of their covenant of marriage & becoming one-flesh. (ANF, 4:30, On The Veiling of Virgins, chap. 5).³⁸¹⁵ How much of this symbolism did Tertullian know about too, as he brings into his commentary, about the veiling of women & virgins, & the marriage-tie, & how the veil is also for virgin modesty? Did he have in mind what would later become the wedding veil that brides now often cover their heads with? It seems so, for Tertullian goes on to suggest that the veil was like an honorable mark of their virginity, & to further help keep the women & men virtuous in thoughts & deeds. Thus, the virgin was to be veiled until the proper time of unveiling, during marriage. He later then uses a biblical type, that of Rebecca (Gen.24:64-67), as an example of the veiling & unveiling of the virgin in the marriage hand clasping setting, in Christian wedding rituals: “And the betrothed indeed have the example of Rebecca, who, when she was being conducted — herself still unknown — to an unknown betrothed, as soon as she learned that he whom she had sighted from afar was the man, awaited not the grasp of the hand, nor the meeting of the kiss, nor the interchange of salutation; but confessing what she had felt — namely, that she had been (already) wedded in spirit — denied herself to be a virgin by then and there veiling herself. Oh woman already belonging to Christ’s discipline! For she showed that marriage likewise, as fornication is, is transacted by gaze and mind; only that a Rebecca likewise some do still veil. With regard to the rest, however (that is, those who are not betrothed),... let the vow of continence itself look (to them).... If the contact of a man makes a woman, let there be no covering except after actual experience of marriage. Nay, but even among the heathens (the betrothed) are led veiled to the husband. But if it is at betrothal that they are veiled, because (then) both in body and in spirit they have mingled with a male, through the kiss and the right hands, through which means they first in spirit unsealed their modesty,....” (ANF, 4:34, On The Veiling of Virgins, chap. 11). Tertullian pointed out, that if the heathens have their girls that reached maturity, veiled before their wedding, or the joining of the right hands, in pledging & vowing her to the maturing male, so much even more so, should it be in the Christian setting of marriage. The virgin is veiled, the marriage-tie with the joining of the right hand is done, & the unveiling of the bride for the kiss, symbolic of their proper union & lawful joining is done, where by they can both experience, there after, the other activities of marriage, when properly completely unveiled of all clothing. Otherwise, anything less than this, Tertullian seems to suggest, brings about the sins of fornication, adultery, & other lusts of the flesh, which the veiling of virgins was intended to help prevent. Thus: “Let her whose lower parts are not bare have her upper likewise covered.” Thus, those who advance in maturity, may persist in virginity, with its appropriate garb. (ANF, 4:35, chap. 12).

Thus, it’s clear, from Tertullian, that the veil coverings for the heads of women, was an important part of the ceremonies & symbolical meanings for different types of clothing, in early Christian church settings. In fact, their outward appearance & clothing was to suggest to onlookers, to the males in & outside the church, that they were virgins. Their veils & clothing, were thus symbolic of their virginity. (ANF, 4:35, chap. 13).

A virgin today, is one that hasn’t had sex, whereas virgins in ancient thought, such as in historic Christianity, are virtuous women, who have remained pure, & clean before their marriage, & remains faithful after to their husbands, after their marriage, & even after bearing children. They are still considered amongst the class of virgins, symbolized by their veils, & clothing. So Tertullian warns against those women, who still try to use the veil symbolism, to appear to still be virgins, but who had fallen from the grace of their virginity, & approach God, in the church, appearing to still be properly veiled & clothed in virginity. But, can’t hide what they’ve done from God, who knows that they’ve unveiled themselves, & are pregnant. That they’re attempting to hide it from others, but that their crying baby, gives away them having fallen into lustful sins: “If an uncovered head is a recognised mark of virginity, (then) if any virgin falls from the grace of virginity, she remains permanently with head uncovered, for fear of discovery, and walks about in a garb which then indeed is another’s. Conscious of a now undoubted womanhood, [she knows that her lustful acts with a male has caused her to be pregnant,] they have the audacity to draw near to God with head bare.” (ANF, 4:36, chap. 14).

It seems that at some point, perhaps in the early Christian mysteries, & in church settings, the women, veil & un-veil their faces, at the proper times, & as directed, such as when they draw near to God with head bare. Now this is a good thing, when done by the worthy. However, as Tertullian seems to warn: How dare some ‘have the audacity to draw near to God with head bare’ knowing that they have become unclean through lustful acts, & are now pregnant! Making a mockery of all the veil & apparel symbolism that symbolized virginity! The early Christian mysteries being a ritualistic type of repentant cleansing, preparing and purifying to whiteness of the soul, (symbolized by the white ritualistic clothing items, including veils). Plus, as a type of ascending to paradise, ascending towards being in presence of God, drawing near to him, so that they may be “drawn” into his presence of the Lord, by hand & wrist grasping, which is how Christ also “draws” souls unto himself. These, as seen in the art works of realm traveling, or being drawn into mortal life, as God did, in creating Adam & Eve. Or in descents, & ascensions into & out of lower & higher realms. So also, like in ancient Israelite Temple settings, as also in the early Christian mysteries, they were to have clean hands & pure hearts, having been washed & purified of former sins, (1 Cor. 6:9-20, chap.7). Or, from their youth, many had saved themselves so as to remained virgins. But, that some should then still try to approach God, having fallen from virginity, & remained unrepentant, unclean, & their white clothing & veils stained with the spots of sins, & should then try to draw near to God & enter his presence, when no unclean thing can! That was the audacity! For though they might try to hide their sins from others, by still appearing to be in the proper garb, veiled & in white. They still can’t hide such things from God. Thus, as in the hand clasping of marriages, where children are brought into life in proper settings, under the vows & covenants of marriage. It seems that Tertullian is pointing out the “audacities,” of some of those who try to progress through the mysteries, knowing that they have fallen from virginity, but try to appear still clothed & veiled in virginity. How that for them to do so, makes a mockery of the very covenants & clothing symbolism, the veils, & white clothing of the mysteries, that they still put on themselves, despite knowingly living a life of sin. This seems to be what Tertullian has in mind, as he comments further On The Veiling of Virgins.³⁸¹⁶

Tertullian then offers the contrast: Whereas in the case with the virgins of motherhood, they give births in more happy & shameless settings, having done it properly, and these virgins' children, look like their fathers, born under the proper settings of marriage. (ANF, 4:36, chap. 14).

From Tertullian, we can see a deep understanding of the symbolical types of the clothing of the mysteries, as being symbolic of preventing & keeping them away from lustful thoughts. The veil & other apparel, were not only physical blocks & concealment of the women's beauty, but they also were reminders to them, & the men of the double meanings that they had. That their whiteness was the whitening & blotting away of the stains of sins, & after they being washed, like their clothing, like their characters, they should remain spotless, chase, & put on positive traits, like white clothing & veils, represented. They shouldn't put on the negative traits, represented as the clothing of harlots, but should avoid such negative traits, such as vanity, pride, lust, etc. They weren't to also let their rich materials, adorn them in prejudices toward the poor, but were to be an example of good. For, further on Tertullian wrote: "It betakes itself for refuge to the veil of the head as to a helmet, as to a shield, to protect its glory against the blows of temptations, against the darts of scandals, against suspicions and whispers and emulation; (against) envy also itself." (ANF, 4:36, chap.15).

Tertullian further on encourages all ages groups of women Virgins to put on the "Panoply of modesty" (in the sense 'complete protection', later 'complete set of arms or suit of armor'), which he likens the veils to. "Wear the full garb of woman, to preserve the standing of virgin." He also likens the wedding garb to them being wedded to Christ, (the early Catholic nuns wedded to Christ, concept?). "Christ is He who bids the espoused and wives of others veil themselves; (and,) of course, much more His own." (ANF, 4:37, chap. 16). He mentions Arabia's heathen females, that veil & cover themselves even more, & for modesty sake, rather than to "prostitute the entire face." Tertullian also hints to more ritualistic activities of the early Christian prayer ceremonies, how that the Christian women were to be veiled: "But how severe a chastisement will they likewise deserve, who, amid (the recital of) Psalms, and at any mention of (the name of) God, continue uncovered; (who) even when about to spend time in prayer itself, with the utmost readiness place a fringe, or a tuft, or any thread whatever, on the crown of their heads, and suppose themselves to be covered?..." Thus, during these occasions, Tertullian encouraged them to veil their faces & heads. (ANF, 4:37, chap. 17).

"Paul in his letters recited the traditional catalogues of opposed groups of persons— Jew and Gentile, slave and freeman, Greek and barbarian, male and female— in order to declare that such categories had been eradicated within the new community. The sole initiation into the group— a single purification bath— was presented by Paul as a stripping away of the garments of all previous social and religious categories, and the putting on of Christ, by which Paul meant the gaining by each believer of a single, unpartitioned identity, common to all members of the community, as befitting "sons of God" [& daughters] newly adopted "in Christ."³⁸¹⁷

John Chrysostom, in Antioch, dared attacked the public baths, social gathering point par excellence of civic upper class society, & aristocratic ladies that would expose themselves before the eyes of troops of servants, draped only in heavy jewelry, symbolic of their high rank.³⁸¹⁸

Was there also disputes over counterfeit mysteries that the early Christians might have known about, or once took part in, before becoming Christians, & then later taking part in the early Christian mysteries? For while the find linen, clean & white was to represent the righteousness of the saints, like a bride that made herself ready for marriage, (Rev.19:7-9, Isa. 61:10).

Or, was there a dispute that challenged the early Christians, when critics pointed out the parallels to their mysteries & those of the pagans? Did Tertullian thus know of such a dispute, amongst other issues? For example, a Syrian relief, ca. 200, shows the Syrian woman invisible beneath her veils, the Syrian goddess has become a nude Venus.³⁸¹⁹ Thus, were these seen, (if known by early Christians), as satanic-counterfeits to the veils, symbolic of chastity, virtue, innocence & purity, as used in early Christian mysteries?

153–193–217, Clement of Alexandria: "For we compare spiritual things with the spiritual. Wherefore in accordance with the method of concealment the truly sacred word, truly divine and most necessary for us, deposited in the shrine of truth, was by the Egyptians indicated by what were among them called adyta, by the Hebrews the Veil. Only the consecrated . . . were allowed access to them." (Stromata, Book 5, ch. 4).³⁸²⁰

In later centuries, 4th c., onwards, Could there have been disputes over, & controversies about dress codes? Disputes over policies about contacts with the opposite sex, in desert hermit monastic settings? For: "The Good monk was supposed to carry even his own mother across a stream, carefully shrouded in his cloak, "for the touch of the flesh of a woman is as fire."³⁸²¹

During the 4th– 7th centuries, & later, Christendom's diverse versions of earlier catechumen mysteries, liturgical rites, & masses, upon being like unto going through different realms, being ritualistic types of birth, being "born again," or being symbolically crucified, or dying as to their former life of sin, or being like unto burials in tomb-shaped baptismal fonts. Plus, symbolic of descents into the underworld, & resurrection.³⁸²² They'd also go through canopies, curtains or symbolical veils that were opened or drawn aside, to let them enter, as types of leaving one of the realms, to pass through into another.³⁸²³ Moreover, because naked did we enter life from our mother's womb, naked shall we return, (Ecclesiastes 5:15, Job 1:21, 1 Tim. 6:7). In like manner, the catechumens took off their old clothing, symbolic of putting off the old person of sin, & being naked, they were like unto being "born again," thus having passed through the curtains into the baptismal font area. John P. Lundy wrote that Ciampini explains an ancient mosaic on the right of the altar, in the chapel of St. Pudentiana, in Rome, as representing nude trine immersion and the Confirmation together. "The legend is significant enough. "Here in the living font the dead are born again." Alcuin, who, in the eighth century, saw this mode of Baptism, says this of it: "Baptism is performed in the name of the most Holy Trinity by trine immersion (submersion), and rightly so, because man, being made in the image of the Holy Trinity, is restored to the same image, and because he fell into death by a three-fold gradation of sin, he thrice rises from the font to life through grace."³⁸²⁴

They were also symbolically, & ritualistically about to die, like Christ on the cross. Thus, they were also likened unto Christ, who was said to be naked, while hanging on the cross, thus naked exiting life, when he "gave up the ghost."³⁸²⁵ The Roman soldiers had stripped him of his rank as “King of the Jews,” by taking his clothing off to humiliate, & shame what they thought was just another criminal, though Christ was innocent.³⁸²⁶ Also, descending naked down into the font was a type of descent into the underworld of death, which is why a lot of art works show naked souls in the underworld, & naked souls being resurrected.³⁸²⁷ They haven’t gotten their protective garments yet. So also the catechumens in baptism. When they ascend up from the font, sometimes with a ritualistic hand or wrist grasp, they are anointed again, then they’ll be clothed in ascension robes, or baptismal robes, often white, symbolic of purity, the chase veil of innocence, the robes of righteousness.³⁸²⁸ So also are the naked souls in the art works clothed in protective-robes, blankets, & white garments, after rising naked in the resurrection from the realms of the dead, limbo, hades, purgatory, or hell. Thus, in the ritualistic settings of this journey of the soul through different realms, there are curtains, veils or canopies to pass through, & which hung around the baptismal fonts, or between pillars. On & around some pillars, are seen hand symbols, & sometimes hand-clasping too.³⁸²⁹ It’s interesting to note also how many different later baptismal fonts that are not down in the flooring, but raised bowls, have pillars in the art works on & around them too.³⁸³⁰ The curtains were also to give the naked some privacy, & to separate the males & females from seeing each other. Perhaps, like the veil on the womens’ faces,³⁸³¹ the curtains also acted as a way to prevent lustful thoughts to enter into the hearts of both sexes, to keep their minds from wandering, for that would have defeated the whole point of them taking off, like old clothing, symbolic of taking off the old person of sin. To then advance towards putting on righteous traits of self discipline, clean thoughts, kindness, charity, etc., which was the symbolical type in stripping down, washing, anointing, baptism, & putting on clean white garments.³⁸³²

“By the time of St Cyril the ritual had become complex, and probably to a large extent stereotyped. The catechumen was first stripped naked. St Chrysostom says, “At baptism men are as naked as Adam in Paradise”; St Ambrose, that “Men came as naked to the font as they came into the world”; St Cyril of Jerusalem, “As soon as ye came into the inner part of the baptistery ye put off your clothes, which is an emblem of putting off the old man with his deeds, and, being thus divested, ye stood naked, imitating Christ that was naked upon the cross.” The documentary evidence is supported by that of the frescoes and mosaics....” Also: “As we know that the catechumens, at any rate in early days, stepped down into the piscina naked, this colonnade may have been retained with the practical object of hanging curtains round it; there is indeed some evidence that curtains were actually employed.”³⁸³³

Thus, in some places, “the men were baptized first, and then the women: in others different parts of the Baptistery were assigned to them, and curtains were hung across the Font itself.”³⁸³⁴ Roger J Adam notes that: “During the last instructions just prior to baptism the catechumens were veiled, or had their faces covered, in order that “their mind might be more at liberty, and that the wandering of their eyes might not distract their soul.”³⁸³⁵ 318—386, S. Cyril, Archbishop of Jerusalem, wrote of a ceremony at Jerusalem: “Thy face has been veiled, that thy mind may henceforth be free, lest thy eye by roving make the heart rove also. But when thine eyes are veiled, thine ears are not hindered from receiving the means of salvation.”³⁸³⁶ “As great multitudes both of men and women were baptized at the special seasons, the Baptisteries were large buildings outside the Church, such as the Baptistery of the Lateran, said to have been originally built by Constantine. The font itself also was large enough for several persons to be baptized at the same time. In some places the men were baptized first, and then the women: in others different parts of the Baptistery were assigned to them, and curtains were hung across the Font itself.”³⁸³⁷ “It is likely that curtains were used in the basilica to separate the side aisles from the nave, and thus to hide the men from the women. It is certain that they were hung from the architrave which connected the columns in front of the altar, in order that at certain moments they might be drawn across the nave to hide the liturgical acts of the celebrant. This we know because the metal attachments for such curtains are still to be seen in some places. By the same token we know that curtains were hung about the ciborium.”³⁸³⁸ Clement of Alexandria used similar imagery: those who have the truth enter by drawing aside the curtain (Miscellanies 7.17). “The employment of curtains in certain baptisteries to enclose the font and so to limit the number of those who would see the candidates in their nudity is indicated by the existence of nails around the superabacus of the ciborium in the subterranean baptistery at Carthage and in that of Kélibia. At Fréjus and Albenga a second basin, of tiny dimensions, at the side of the font, was probably use for the pedilavium, which in the Milanese rite immediately followed the post-baptismal unction and the preceded the vesting in white robes.”³⁸³⁹

354—430, the veil may also have been a symbol of the slavery and darkness of sin, as St. Augustine regards the removal of the veil on the octave of Easter as symbolizing the spiritual liberty of the baptized.³⁸⁴⁰

4th or 5th centuries, Coptic Christian Tunic or shirt has a possible, but faded—straight line navel area symbol, a possible but more faded V symbol above that about right chest high area, & a possible but faded even more, if not a wrinkle, but if not, a reverse L symbol. These types of symbols are sometime seen in curtains too. Some of the burial customs of the Coptic Christians was how that the dead are dressed in the clothes they had worn in life, women often had their heads covered with a veil or kerchief, men wore a cap.³⁸⁴¹ On a Byzantine white veil, or curtains, are a number of symbols, [] on left curtain, on the middle are [+] on the right white curtain, [] located at Agios Eleftherio Church, Athen Greece.³⁸⁴²

E. Goodenough, in his study of Jewish symbolism, discovered that in Christian art the garment and robe were marked with signs at right angles, the gamma or square, or simply with a straight bar with prongs. He concluded that the marks had some religious significance or symbolic force.³⁸⁴³ In the Pistis Sophia, a Gnostic text of great importance, the garment is marked with the sacred Name and with five mysteries. (Erbeta, Gli Apocrifi, p. 400—401; Pistis Sophia 8—10). It should be noted that the ancient garment bore the same tokens as the veil of the temple at Jerusalem. In the Testament of Levi, for example, the veil is the induma of the angel or the personified temple. (Marinus DeJonge, The Testament of the XII Patriarchs, p. 124). 6th century, the Mosaic on the right side wall of the nave, palace of Theodoric, remains of hand symbols are still visible on at least 4 columns. The curtains are tied open, hung in the middle, in between the pillars. Some of the curtains have angle designs on them, as above these are the same types of angle designs in the white robes of people above the curtain scene.³⁸⁴⁴ The Basilica of Sant' Apollinare Nuovo is a basilica church in Ravenna, Italy. It was erected by Ostrogoth King Theodoric the Great as his palace chapel during the first quarter of the 6th century (as attested to in the Liber Pontificalis). This Arian church was originally dedicated in 504 AD to “Christ the Redeemer”.³⁸⁴⁵

As noted earlier, hand clasping near or around pillars, could have been part of the covenants, vows, & ritualistic entering into a different realm of existence that baptism in the baptisteries represented. Symbolically dying & being resurrected, as baptism was a type of, (Rom. 6:3–23). The speculation that ritualistic hand & wrist grasping could have been done, with a hand extending out from the other side of the curtain, (curtains that some times have angle designs, & other symbols on them, which are also similar to the symbols on early Christians' white robes).³⁸⁴⁶ Thus, through these curtains, a hand could have extended out to the initiates on the out side to be grasped in different symbolical ways.³⁸⁴⁷ This is evident by the art works that show hand symbols on columns, & hand clasping near, different ones that lined up with columns.³⁸⁴⁸ Plus, different types of hand & wrist grips in baptismal settings, & in baptismal types, such as the enactment of the creation of Adam & Eve, & their resurrection.³⁸⁴⁹ Baptism being likened unto the death of the old Adam, (& Eve), and the birth of the new man & new women, the second Adam, Christ.³⁸⁵⁰ Baptism being a type of the resurrection from the underworld, which often show Adam & Eve being raised by Christ with different types of hand & wrist grasping, the start of their deification, in the baptismal-descent themes of the descent into hell, hades, limbo, purgatory, the Anastasis.³⁸⁵¹ Plus, hands that extend out in ascensions into heaven, or paradise, or in souls being lifted up out of the fires of purgatory by saints, angels, & in some cases the Virgin Mary.³⁸⁵² Thus, in these baptismal settings, with the curtains around the font areas, a ritualistic hand could have been extended for those passing through the mystery of baptism to clasp in different ways. Thus, allowing the catechumens in through the curtain, (like the old veils of temples).³⁸⁵³ They'd enter, or perhaps would be pulled into the inner baptismal area, where they'd strip their old clothing off, symbolic of stripping off the old person of sin, to eventually be clothed in new white garments, symbolic of putting on the "chase veil of innocence," or of being clothed in a deified resurrected body, as part of the baptismal mystery.³⁸⁵⁴

450–1066, during the Anglo-Saxon period, in Britain, veil lore seems to still be part of different cultures' wedding customs, including Anglo-Saxons' "care-cloth" ceremonial veulings. "This enveloped both bride and groom. Aware and afraid of higher powers, the couple thereby acknowledged their presence and, even more so, tried to protect themselves from them."³⁸⁵⁵ Fragments of the protective garment-cloth lore seems to have survived in such ceremonies.

During the 15th century, curtains associated with baptismal fonts were still in use, but perhaps served different functions, if they even had retained their earlier symbolical types by then. Thus, the "font-cloth" could have had three uses, to envelop the chrismatory when it was brought to the font, such as in 1576, at Chelmsford the 'lawn clothe to carry ye Chrismatory in.' Another was it was a necessary part of the rite of the blessing of the font on Easter Eve. Another was that it was placed over the font cover to protect it. Could there be a protective garment theme in this? With fonts often being associated with being a type of the underworld, the watery abyss, of death, burial & resurrection. Plus, with the water being blessed, & demonic forces exercised away, as in earlier centuries. Could they be faded reminders of such religious ideologies been continued on in the thinking of later Christendom? Thus, could the font-cloth have been thought of as also having the same protective qualities as protective ascension robes for those souls passing over in the afterlife? For, when ascending, they sometimes have to pass through the fiery darts of the devils, shot at them! Which devils, were discouraged from assaulting the souls further, if it wasn't for the guardian angels, & protective blankets that souls are often depicted as wrapped in, or ride up on, while ascending into paradise or heaven!

Thus, with baptism being a type of resurrection, & the white robes symbolic of ascending up out of the grave, perhaps the font-cloths were seen as protective clothing to keep demonic powers & forces from polluting the blessed waters of baptism.³⁸⁵⁶

Ciborion, or Ciborium is a canopy or covering supported by columns. Also called curtains & veils that were used not only in churches, for privacy sake, because catechumens, male & female, were naked at times, separated by said curtains, before they were clothed in the baptismal robes.

But, in the case with other mysteries, the sacrament of marriage, or early to later Christian weddings, the bride often, & still does the veulings & un-veilings of her face. The bride & groom did & still do the different types of hand & wrist grasping ceremonies, as part of the wedding ceremony.³⁸⁵⁷ In some cases, veils covering the brides' faces, were done for "...the concealment of the bride's face and explains why in ancient times (and still today in some primitive groups) the bridegroom was not permitted to set eyes on his bride until the very moment when they were about to consummate their marriage."³⁸⁵⁸ After the wedding, in the privacy of their bed room, while in other customs, such as "bedding the bride," not so private, for even the couple is stripped by others & escorted to the bed with different comments made by the wedding guests. But, in many cases, in private, the veil comes off, as do the clothing, they pass through another veil or the curtains, that hang around some more expensive beds, such as for nobles & royals, or rich merchants, etc. At least in later centuries, with those more wealthy than the peasantry. Their beds were often elaborate, large & had the four decorated posts, that sometimes had biblical themes on them, & the curtains around them. In some cases, such as "bedding the bride," the Priests does the blessing the beds, & this was believed helped with protecting the couples' activities in producing children, but also could have been for keeping out jealous devils who might, upon seeing the unveiled beauty of the bride, then try to carry her off. Thus, the veil was a protective cloth, concealing her beauty to prevent lustful thoughts of the males, or devils that might see her, so lore goes.³⁸⁵⁹ The blessings of the couple & beds, might have also been for protecting the couples while sleeping too, for if one slept with their mouth opened, the devils were believed to enter into the mouth & take possession of the soul, so more devil-lore goes.³⁸⁶⁰ Thus, these surviving bits of pre-existence lore, that of post-war in heaven, post-fall from heaven activities of the fallen angels, also might have been part of protective cloth-coverings, in veils & curtain lore. Beds with veils, canopies or curtains around them were therefore fitting for thoughts of & symbolical types in themes about realm traveling & different aspects of the journey of souls that took place in them. For beds were where souls entered life, through wedding consummations, & child births, often done in beds, during earlier centuries, before modern hospitals birthing centers. Plus, where souls sometimes exited mortal life, leaving the mortal-body upon their "death bed."³⁸⁶¹ Thus, as ritualistic types of early to later Christian mysteries were to be thought of as being types for what happens in mortal life too. Beds, with their veils, curtains or canopies, were the places where spirits were brought into mortality as newly weds would open the curtains to their beds, strip down naked & consummated each their own marriages, behind the closed curtains of their own beds. But not always closed, for there are some cases in art, where they are left open. And if so, was this to invite pre-existing spirit babies of the yet unborn, to descend down from heaven to start their mortal experiences by entering into the wombs of their mothers to be? If so, this might be why some art works show baby spirits, called homunculus, a Latin word meaning "little man/human,³⁸⁶² descending down from heaven. In some cases, they descend through a circle of winged baby heads, & enter the womb through the traditional early to later Christian symbol for realm travelers, the mandorla () or almond shaped portal opening that holy realm travelers pass through, as mentioned earlier.³⁸⁶³ One case in point, but not including the mandorla, shows a naked baby spirit descending down from the Trinity towards a naked couple in bed. One that has the curtains opened, like in the Illumination from Jean Mancel, Vie de Nostre Seigneur Jésus Christ, fifteenth century, Bibliothèque Nationale de France, Paris.³⁸⁶⁴

But what Christian wedding ritualistic types might have survived, if any, down to medieval times & later, with bed veils, curtains, or canopies? Did couples think or know of the earlier Christian mysteries' parting of the veils, curtains & canopies, as done in the churches, during early to later Christian mysteries? Plus, as done in the later masses, & liturgical rites?³⁸⁶⁵ Would they have been taught to make any possible symbolical connection between the parting of the curtains during church ceremonies, & their parting or drawing aside the curtains or canopies around their beds? Would these later medieval newly wed couples have made any ritualistic symbolical connections between the stripping to nakedness of the catechumens behind the veiled off baptismal fonts, or behind the curtained off areas in the baptisteries? And later at their homes, their stripping down naked as newly weds, & consummating their wedding, having been joined together, earlier, by clerics who had them join their right hands in the hand clasping rites of Christian marriage?³⁸⁶⁶ Thus, the unveiling her face for the first kiss as man & wife. Moreover, with protective garments in early to later Christianity being types of the veil, & also daily reminders, & symbols, with symbols on them, as reminders of vows taken in the early to later Christian mysteries, to be pure, clean, spotless from sins, to remain virtuous, white garments for virgins, to be clothed in chastity, veil coverings to keep the mind from wandering into unclean & lustful thoughts, as mentioned. All these ritualistic types, early to later Christian clothing fashion symbolisms, later wedding ethical practices, seem to have survived in some aspects in later ritualistic Christian wedding practices. For there were proper time allowed for the unveiling of a woman to expose her body to a man, & that was within the bounds of marriage, (1 Cor. 6:9-20, 7:1-17). Consequently, in the newly weds' bed room, especially for the rich noble or royals of Christendom, the unveiling of each other & the passing through the veil or curtains around the bed may have been a type of passing through into the area where realm traveling takes place. Like in ritualistic types of realm traveling through veils or curtains. Like customs of unveiling beautiful art works, & unveiling of the new act on stage, or the opening of the veil on a newly wed bride as the beginning of a new life, as a couple.

Because veils, curtain & canopies have been used to "cover up" good deeds being done in the early to later Christian mysteries, to give some privacy to the sacred ordinances being performed. This may be why early anti-Christians vilified the early Christians for not letting just anybody into their mysteries. Accusing them of "covering up," under a "canopy" of darkness, what they were really doing! Accusing them of turning over the lamp, so that in the cover of darkness, they could do all types of sexual acts on each other. Not crediting the early Christians for their strong virtues, & virgins, who were martyred for not giving into the commands of their Pagan masters to have sex with them. The ancient critics rumored all types of false charges against the early Christians in general because of their "secret meetings," wondering what really went on during their gatherings. The fact that there were different heretical apostate early Gnostic sects that blended pagan & early Christian rituals & perverted doctrine & interpretations of scriptures to justify perversions & sexual orgies, didn't help matters either. For the moral early Christians got blamed & labeled with such groups, as ancient critics generalized the early Christians' mysteries as being "secret orgies," to vilify all Christians, & thus justify in their minds, the rumors being spread against them. Plus, to justify persecuting them all in general, despite how other early Christian apologists attempted to get the critics & civil authorities to not mistreat them for what the heretical sects were doing, which was against early Christian moral codes & vows taken to live moral clean & virtuous lives.

As veils, curtains & canopy uses in the Churches, faded off into later traditions & customs of privacy, this may be where the modern expressions of there being "a cover up," are derived from. Like when someone in government, or some theocracies, or in politics are alleged to have done some scandal, or an action or event regarded as morally or legally wrong, and causing general public outrage. But then they try to "cover up," the deeds, or "white-wash" them. Perhaps such modern expressions have their roots in the use of curtains, & blankets or covers on, & around beds, or coverings for naked ascending souls, ascending to heaven. Or the curtains that hanged around baptismal fonts to cover the nakedness of those taking part in the rituals, as naked catechumens, before they are clothed in the white garments.

1070—1100, in a "Gospels" book, a hand symbol extends down through curtains that have been drawn back.³⁸⁶⁷

In 1399, when a procession of the Bianchi reached Venice, the women were dressed in "white with faces veiled."³⁸⁶⁸

In some cases, in 14th or 15th century Venice, girls "wore great veils (vela subtilia) of white silk which covered the head and the breast,"³⁸⁶⁹ perhaps to conceal their beauty, and thus keep the males, passing by on the street, from lusting after them. Whatever might be the case, it is a tradition that seems to go back into early Christian mystery dramas.

In historic Christendom, many believed this happened to righteous, for during the first moments of their deaths, a veil is lifted to reveal the face of God. "The crucial moment in one's life is the moment of death since the conditions of one's soul at that instant will determine whether one will in fact be admitted to bliss. For those who have been baptized and have devoted themselves to good works and to holiness of mind and body, crossing the river of death will mean that the veil will be lifted so that one might see God "face to face" instead of in a murky reflection. Such souls will be taken up into heaven to be with the angels and other saints."³⁸⁷⁰

17th century, some alternate forms of canopy, instead of resting on the floor, some hung from the roof over the baptismal fonts. At Tuxford (Nots), the font itself has a conical Jacobean cover, of flowery design in the cloth, & suspended above this is a matching canopy, dated 1673. Other canopies were fixed to the wall or to a pillar and panelled down to the ground. There is a fretted canopy that projects over the font to the floor, at Pilton (Devon), another is at Swymbridge in the same county.³⁸⁷¹ What religious symbolism might have survived during these later centuries that might relate to the earlier use of canopies, curtains or veils over or concealing earlier fonts, or areas where rituals took place?

18th century, Sieur de Moléon witnessed at St. Lô, Rouen, the covering of the font with a white cloth, this was done after its blessing on Holy Saturday. This, he noted was what they still do in many of their country parishes. Thus, many other places had the same type of veiling of the baptismal font. In earlier to later centuries, they weren't always white, for some were colored, painted, some had cross symbols on them, others decorated with images. Some veils or ritualistic canopies, are the survivals of the ancient ciborium, baldachins, or curtains, & are all related to each other in connecting up with sacraments, baptisteries, liturgical rites, masses, burials, holy of holies, temple curtains, & monumental memorials for dead nobilities. They are sometimes used as baptismal font coverings, sometimes hang in between pillars to veil off different holy places. They sometimes covered the mesna or holy altars, which altar cloths also had the same types of symbols, angles, crosses, & other symbols & designs as did the curtains & early to later Christian robes.³⁸⁷² Different rituals, such as masses, were performed behind these curtains, in some cases. Thus, curtains called tetravela hung between the columns; these altar-curtains were used to cover and then reveal the view of the altar by the congregation at points during services.³⁸⁷³

By the 18th century to later, these earlier symbols underwent phases of fraternal legendization processes in the symbolism of Freemasonry, which seems to be a mixture of different mysteries kept in remembrance by the different fraternal brotherhoods, & masonic orders. Which also seemingly blends in early to later symbolism of the early to later Christian mysteries. They have, for example, a resurrection drama, where the initiate is lying on a rug with his head near a crossed-bones symbol in X form, & a V symbol is above these symbols.³⁸⁷⁴ Perhaps the initiate's head, near the cross-bones, represents death, as in other early to later Christian depictions of the skulls & bones under Christ crucifixion art works. It is under the cross that traditions say Adam was buried, & hand symbols, & sometimes hand-&-wrist grasping is done, as often depicted in art, to resurrect the dead. Thus, the possible fraternalizing of these earlier symbols in Freemasonry. Adam & others are brought back from the fall, lifted from their former life of darkness into their new life of Christian moral perfection sought after, as they come forth from their grave under the cross.³⁸⁷⁵ In Freemasonry, the initiates symbolically die, symbolic of setting aside his old ways for a new life, to be raised from death to a life of vowed improvements, from darkness to light. Thus, the symbols, & use of building tools: The square, & compass, that symbolize, that the initiates have vowed to be truthful, to gain more knowledge & expertise in helping improve his or her own character, & those of his fellow members of the order, & others. To build more moral traits in their own lives. To be on the "level," truthful, & practice equality, that we are all equal in the sight of God, & should improve ourselves in physical, material & spiritual inner development. The plumb line, represents: Goodness, fair play, treating others equally, equal justice for all, untainted by unworthy bias. The square symbolized morality, it also was a building tool, symbolic of building & perfecting their own character, thus the needs to strive to ensure behavior & conduct are upright, & without deviations. Like building a wall, if it's not exact, it could fall, so also with their moral character.³⁸⁷⁶

In 1817, Princess Charlotte died, a monument of her was sculptured by Matthew Coates Wyatt, 1777—1862, the son of architect James Wyatt, 1746—1813. The monument is in the S. George's Chapel, Windsor, and shows the moment when "the Princess ascends to heaven. . . flanked by angels, one of whom holds the tiny baby, whose stillborn entry into the world caused the Princess's death." Behind her and the angels, there is a curtain, slightly opened, could this represent the veil of death which divides one realm of existence from another?³⁸⁷⁷

In Russian folk beliefs, brides were subject to attacks by the devil, hence, numerous series of rituals contained in the wedding ceremonials were believed to protect them from the devil, one of which was "veiling the bride".³⁸⁷⁸ Similar to this, another example, says: "...Fear of jealous demons who might carry off a lovely bride led to the custom of disguising her identity— and hiding her face behind a "curtain." This was also thought to be effective against the "evil eye" once considered to be a ubiquitous and potent malevolent force."³⁸⁷⁹

THE HAND OF GOD UNVEILED

Hand symbols³⁸⁸⁰ were not only used by the ancient Jews³⁸⁸¹ as symbols, and types for God, and the Messiah. They were also used by early to later Christians too.³⁸⁸² In our quest to understand the symbols and types behind the World Wide Wounded Wanderer, we need to understand another prophetic type, and the illustrations of them in art works, writings and the scriptures. These prophetic types of Christ's overseas journeys are all part of the symbolism behind how Christ also taught the different people he visits the holy mysteries, thus, helping them to understand what their prophets had prophesied in their own lands concerning his birth. And also, his life, redemptive acts of mercy, works, death, descent into the underworld, resurrection, & post resurrection treks around the earth. This is what we are to understand when we read about the arm of mercy³⁸⁸³ being extended to all, and how the Lord will make bare his holy arm in the sight of all nations. Thus, some of these symbolical types and symbols are as follows:

1. The hand of God.³⁸⁸⁴
2. The guiding hand of God, (Psa.73:23-24).
3. The saving right hand of God.³⁸⁸⁵
4. A hand that rescues.³⁸⁸⁶
5. Hand sign blessings,³⁸⁸⁷ or ones that extend power.³⁸⁸⁸
6. A hand extends down out of heaven to welcome and shake the hands of those who enter into heaven.³⁸⁸⁹
7. Symbolical finger symbols.³⁸⁹⁰
8. The hand extended to arm's length out of heaven.³⁸⁹¹

In additions to these, is the hand that gives the law, or the word to Moses. In some cases, the hand of God is depicted in the very act of handing down a book, or "tablets" out of heaven to Moses.³⁸⁹²

Cyprian, A.D. 200—258, lists many of these types, some of which were types of Christ going to other realms, and other parts of the world.³⁸⁹³ All these are also seen in early to later Christian art works³⁸⁹⁴ throughout the centuries.³⁸⁹⁵ For example, the hand of God extends down out of heaven as Christ ascends into heaven.³⁸⁹⁶ The hand of God extends down to receive Elijah as he ascends on a chariot.³⁸⁹⁷ On a coin is a depiction of Constantine being received into heaven by the hand of God in a similar manner as Elijah is.³⁸⁹⁸ The right hand of God extends down, and is about to lift Christ into heaven, in a motif dated A.D. 971—984.³⁸⁹⁹ A.D. 1150, the right hand of God extends out of the clouds to grasp the right wrist of Christ, on an altar frontal from Broddetorp.³⁹⁰⁰ In one portion of a 11th —12th century ivory carving, the hand of God extends down from heaven. In another portion of this same work, the right hand of the Father is holding the right hand of Christ, to raise him into heaven.³⁹⁰¹

These types of things were based on the scriptures too,³⁹⁰² for example: Psalm 77:15: "Thou hast with thine arm redeemed thy people, the sons of Jacob and Joseph." And: "That led them by the right hand of Moses with his glorious arm, . . . that they should not stumble?" (Isaiah 63:11-13, 7-9, & 15-16).³⁹⁰³ Thus, the Lord, or his prophets act as guides by taking hold of the hands³⁹⁰⁴ of the people they guide.³⁹⁰⁵ Another example is found in Isaiah 42:6—7: “I the LORD have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, for a light of the Gentiles; To open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the prison house.”³⁹⁰⁶

In another passage, “I [the Lord] will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness. . . . For I the LORD thy God will hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, Fear not; I will help thee.”

In another verse, “Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands” (Isaiah 41:10, 13; 49:16). And yet, another aspect survived too, that of showing the hand of God extended to those who seek his help. For example, other artists show two Kings and a poor man appealing to Christ by reaching out their hands toward Christ who is also reaching down out of heaven toward them. In another, a hand with a mark in the middle of the palm, extends down out of heaven toward a man who is reaching up toward the hand. The mark in the hand suggests a nail mark wound, thus, it may be the hand of Christ.³⁹⁰⁷ While in other works, it is the Father who extends a helping hand in order to take hold of the hands of those ascending into heaven.³⁹⁰⁸ Accordingly, “the Hand of God reaching out of heaven to rescue the souls of the just and translate them to Paradise.”³⁹⁰⁹

We have already considered a number of sources about how Christ passed through the doors of hades, limbo, etc. In addition, how that Christ’s hand is held, and how he holds, in different ways, the hands of those he rescues out of the underworld, and those he lifts into heaven.³⁹¹⁰ Furthermore, we have already considered how these types of symbols passed over into the traditions about the wandering Christ, and the manner in which travelers, pilgrims, the poor, etc., were to be greeted at the door as if they were the World Wide Wounded Wanderer, himself. In light of all these, we might be able to better understand what Tertullian [A.D. 145—220] had in mind when he wrote about how the Father held the hand of Christ when he passed through the gates and doors of the nations of the world. “For whose right hand does God the Father hold but Christ’s His Son? --whom all nations have heard, that is, whom all nations have believed.”³⁹¹¹

Gregory of Nyssa, A.D. 335 or 336 through about January 10, or March 9, 395,³⁹¹² wrote his response to Eunomius at a time when a war of words raged over what the nature of the Godhead was like. Thus, during this polemical mess, he asks a question as to whom the Almighty is. Who it is that holds the ends of the earth in his hands, and spans the measures of the universe? In other words, is the Father the Almighty who knows what and who lives in the universe which he created? Or is the Son under the sovereignty of the Almighty Father? What might be of interest here in this whole polemical mess is a possible reference to a fragment that gives us the same types of things that are seen in later Christian art works. For in later centuries, Christian artists attempted to depict versions of the Godhead according to the Nicene Creed’s three in one polemical debates held during and after A.D. 325. Thus, they blended these early Christian concepts about the nature of the Godhead with the concept of their universal reign over the world, and the universe too. This is why we see in many art works, three heads on one body, or a three faced God who is the ruler over the world and the universe. Art works that developed into a later symbolical mess from the mess which the Nicene Creed era spewed forth on post 325 Christendom.³⁹¹³ But to return to Gregory, he asks who the God over all is? He then suggests that St. Paul, suggests that: “our Lord Jesus Christ, Who, as He Himself says, holding in His hand “all things that the Father hath,” [John 16:15] assuredly grasps all things in the all-containing hollow of His hand and is sovereign over what He has grasped, and no man taketh from the hand of Him Who in His hand holdeth all things? If, then, He hath all things, and is sovereign over that which He hath, why is He Who is thus sovereign over all things something else and not Almighty?”³⁹¹⁴ In later art works, the grasping hand of the Father holds souls. These symbolical indications to God’s saving powers to save and help the human family, who he and his son reign over, are in fact the later results of these earlier Christians’ words, then being illustrated by numerous artists.³⁹¹⁵

The hand has been used as a symbol in many cultures for many different reasons, and meanings, especially in historic Christianity,³⁹¹⁶ is where we find it being used more often than in the other cultures.

Dr. N. Hass "...observed that Jehohanan's [skeletal remains on the] right radius (the upper arm bone as the arms outstretch) had both a surface cut and a distinct wearing action from the victim's writhing on the cross. This "scratch" on the bone was positioned between the two lower arm bones at a structurally more solid location to fix a nail. This evidence, coupled with a strict reading of the New Testament, indicates that both hand and wrist could have been pierced.”³⁹¹⁷

In many cases, the hand clasping in historic Christianity includes grips on the area of the palm & wrists. Thus, could these grips be symbolic of the wounds Christ could have received from nails driven into both the palm & wrist areas? The main theme of Christendom is how that it’s through the wounding, the crucifixion of Jesus, the whole atonement drama, that mankind can be saved. What are they being “saved” from? From the demonic forces, that seeks to grasp hold & pull souls down to hell. What often is depicted saving those ascending to heaven? Angelic hand clasping guides, & guardian angels. In some cases the arm or hand of God extending down to bless, protect & take hold of the ascending soul. Souls are also often depicted in the hand of God, too. Thus, the saving-hand of God, grasping the hand & wrist areas with different types of hand grasping, was the ultimate symbol for the early to later Christians in being saved & welcomed by God into heaven.³⁹¹⁸

In historic Christianity, baptismal scenes of Christ, showing different versions and types of baptism, often also show the hand of God extending down out of heaven over these different versions too.³⁹¹⁹ In other cases, the hand of God extends during Christ’s transfiguration.³⁹²⁰

4th century Christian work, the Emperor Constantine is represented as being the vicar of God, or the representative of God on earth. Hence, he is being crowned by the hand of God that extends out of heaven.³⁹²¹

The hand of God extends down in a depiction of "Charlemagn's grandson, Charles the Bald, is seen in this ninth-century picture surrounded by officers of state and receiving a Bible from the monks St Martin of Tours.”³⁹²² In another work, the hand of God extends to bless Able who offers to God the sacrificial lamb.³⁹²³

830, in an ivory panel, Christ’s right hand is grasped by the hand of the Father. Only the right hand of the Father is seen extending down out of heaven in the clouds. The Father’s thumb rests on the “pointer” finger’s knuckle.³⁹²⁴

Mid 9th century, Carolingian, in The Vivien Bible, and the Moutier-Grandval Bible, are depictions of the hand of God extending down out of heaven to hand the Law to Moses.³⁹²⁵ Numerous other examples of the hand of God, giving the law to Moses, plus extending out of heaven in other biblical events, suggests that this was a popular way to depict these, and other events.³⁹²⁶

850—860, in an illustration of Psalm 26, from the book cover of the Prayer book of Charles the Bald, the hand of the Father extends out of heaven, while it is as though Christ greets David, with a right-hand clasp, at the door way to a church or building.³⁹²⁷

940, in the Bible of Leo the Patrician, is a page that shows the hand of God extending out of heaven to give a tablet to Moses, on which is written the Law.³⁹²⁸

996, the hand of God extends out of heaven to crown the Emperor Otto III, in a Christian art work from the 10th century, in the Aachen Gospels. He is also in a mandorla symbol, and holds an orb in his right hand, hence, this may be symbolic of how he moves about his empire as the substitute for Christ.³⁹²⁹

11th century, above a stone sculpture depiction of the crucifix, on the exterior west wall of the south transept at Romsey, the hand of God extends down out of the clouds.³⁹³⁰

1015, on some bronze doors, "from St Michael's", is a number of scenes, one of which shows scenes of Genesis, with the hand of God extending down out of heaven on one scene.³⁹³¹

1019—1020, a depiction of the coronation of St. Henry II, shows two people supporting his arms that are raised up. If there is any fragment of the traditional clasp here, they are being done on his arms, rather than his hands. However, it may be that no ascension to the throne clasp are intended to be interpreted here too.³⁹³²

Mid 11th century, in the Farfa Bible, there is a drawing of the arm of God extending down out of heaven.³⁹³³

1070—1100, up above the ascending Virgin, a hand extends, with the two largest fingers extended, and the thumb over the two smaller fingers which are curled in. The Virgin is in a mandorla, a symbol often seen around Christ, or saints as they travel into other realms of existences.³⁹³⁴ In another work, dated back to this time, and from a Gospels book, the same type of hand symbol is seen extending down up above through some curtains that have been drawn back.³⁹³⁵

A hand-clasp is given to a person who is about to enter into a Franciscan Order & this seems to have preserved & could be based on the "rites of passage" hand clasps of the earlier Christian mysteries.³⁹³⁶

11th-13th century is the date given for a fresco, from St. Clement of Tahull, Museum of Catalan Art, Barcelona, shows the hand of God extending out from the middle of circular designs.³⁹³⁷

In a 12th century mosaic of The Agony in the Garden, an angel descends from heaven reaching out his right hand to Christ, who is reaching out too. Could this be before the clasp?³⁹³⁸

12th century, the life of Guthlac, A.D. 667—714, the hermit saint of Crowland, is illustrated in ink drawings, one of which shows angels greeting his soul, at the moment of his death. One angel is his hand clasping guide to heaven, while the other hold the robe he is to be clothed in during his ascension into heaven.³⁹³⁹

The hand of God extends down in a scene that depicts the Pentecost. The hand is in a circle & below the hand is the dove which represents the Holy Ghost.³⁹⁴⁰

1130—1140, on an ivory cover of a Gospel Book from St Gereon, Cologne, the hand of God extends down over Christ on the cross. The two largest fingers are extending down, while the others are curled in.³⁹⁴¹

1146, in the Wedric Gospels, the arm of God extends down holding the dove, symbolic of the Holy Ghost, which is speaking into the ear of St. John. In the lower corner of this same work, is a smaller circular section which also has the hand of God extending down from above.³⁹⁴²

1150, the right hand of God extends out of the clouds to grasp the right wrist of Christ, on an altar frontal from Broddetorp.³⁹⁴³ The hand of God extends in blessing symbolism, above Christ on the cross, in an art work, Danish crucifix, from Tirstrup, c. 1150.³⁹⁴⁴

1130—1187, in the Mosaics of Norman Sicily, the hand symbol is seen, for from "the celestial sphere from which the from which the hand of God and the dove of the Holy Spirit emerge."³⁹⁴⁵

1145—1147, the hand of God extends down over the cleansing of Naaman in the River Jordan.³⁹⁴⁶

1051—65, the right hand of God extends down over Christ on the Cross, from the Gospels of Countess Judith. The Gospel book belonged to Judith of Flanders, who might be depicted in this art, clinging to the bottom of the cross, & it was made for her probably when she was in England during this time.³⁹⁴⁷

1160, in the Winchester Psalter, Christ and the apostles are at Mary's death bed. Christ passes her soul into the hands of an angel who is about to cloth her soul in a robe, while another angel also descends with another garment too. Up above, the hand of God extends out of heaven to bless this moment.³⁹⁴⁸

Numerous hand and wrist grips are seen in Christian iconography, for example, in one portion of a 13th century work, Eve is pulled out of Adam's side by her hand, as God, or the pre-existing Christ grasps, with his left hand, the right wrist of Eve's two up lifted hands, as if she is praising or praying. Another portions shows a type of this in how that a small figure's hands are being grasped while being pulled out of Christ's wound in his side, while Christ is on the cross. Down below this scene, Adam and Eve's wrists are being grasped as if they were about to be brought together to make the clasp of marriage. The next sample blends both the creation clasp as a type of the clasp in the resurrection, for down below the crucifixion scene, Eve's right wrist is grasped as she is being raised out of Adam's side.³⁹⁴⁹

An early 14th century mosaic, made at Constantinople, shows the hand of God extending down out of heaven over forty martyrs.³⁹⁵⁰

1323--1326, in a Gothic art piece, lower right corner, the arm of God(?) extends to grasp the hands of those reaching up this extending arm's right hand.³⁹⁵¹

1390, Bartolo di Fredi's art work of The Presentation of Christ in the Temple, shows Christ's hands about to be clasped by Mary in a similar manner as in rite of homage hand clasps done between nobles, Knights, and Christian Kings.³⁹⁵² In this rite, in some cases, both hands of one of the subjects are placed together with in the hands of those of the king's hands.³⁹⁵³

13th century, in an illuminated manuscript, the hand of God extends out of heaven to bless the scene of pilgrims and their equipment being blessed.³⁹⁵⁴

Another work shows Christ reaching out to a heavenly being which is also reaching out towards Christ, as Christ ascends towards the hand of God that extends out of heaven too. Hence, the artist may have chosen to show the moments in the ascension, right before the hand grips take place.³⁹⁵⁵ During these centuries, panel series of art works, showing different scriptural events, show in some, the arm of God extending out of heaven.³⁹⁵⁶

1320, the arms of God extend out of heaven over a wedding ceremony, in which the person, perhaps Christ, is grasping the wrist of the bride to bring the hands of the couple together to make the traditional hand grips of marriage. Above this, an angel holds what could be a vest or garment too.³⁹⁵⁷

his is helped up to a higher level by helping hands from a group of assemble saints.³⁹⁵⁸

In the tympanum of Saint Foi of Conques, a stone work, the hand of God extends towards a praying figure. On the right hand side of Christ, as Judge, Peter greets souls, by clasping their hands, at the door of paradise. Also on the right-hand side, a church leader grasps the hands of those he is guiding to Christ.³⁹⁵⁹

Another depiction, 12th-14th centuries(?), shows one of the chosen souls being handed over to Peter who stands before the entrance to Heaven. With his right hand, Peter hold a set of keys, while his left hand is grasping the hands of the soul being received into heaven.³⁹⁶⁰

Early 14th century, cross symbols or symbols in the hand are seen on different depictions of different people in later Christian art. Gloves often had this symbol in them to. Could these be types & symbols of the nails that Christ had received in his hands?³⁹⁶¹

14th century, the hands or hand of God, or of Christ are often seen in the depictions of the souls ascension into heaven. The hand or hands extend down from above to welcome the ascending soul. In some Byzantine manuscripts, some artist have depicted "...the victorious soul stretching up from the top of the ladder to receive the crown of life from the Redeemer depicted not as a full-length figure but by a tiny pair of hands extended from the top right hand corner of the miniature." "...In the fourteenth century ms. of Bartolomeo di Bartoli's Canzone, heavenly hands hold a crown and a scroll inscribed with the Corporal and Spiritual Beatitudes over the head of an already crowned figure of Spes who sits enthroned over 'Judas desperatus' with his hang-rope."³⁹⁶²

1446-9, Vecchietta: The Virgin Receives the Souls of Foundlings. In this art work illustrating a ladder of Paradise, the virgin, helps infants up the ladder of paradise by clasping their wrists.³⁹⁶⁴

1493, The creation dramas as depicted in early to later Christian art works is often another place where we see different types of hand clasps. For example, Wolgemut's work is said to have been part of the massive Nuremberg Chronicle, 1493. In this creation drama God clasps the wrists of Eve as she is being raised or pulled up out of Adam's side.³⁹⁶⁵

1676, the hand of God extends out of a cloud to give finger gestures of blessing upon St. Theodore Stratilates.³⁹⁶⁶

1670—72, the wounded hand of Christ extends down out of heaven with the judgment scales.³⁹⁶⁷

18th century, the hand of God extends out of a cloud to present a crown above Maria Theresa, Apostolic 'KING' of Hungary.³⁹⁶⁸

Symbols in gloves: 1422, on the middle of the hand of a Christian religious leader's glove is a circular symbol with a X shaped design in it.³⁹⁶⁹

1444—1510, Botticelli painted Barnabas and others, on the glove of the religious leader in the center, is a () mandorla shaped symbol, perhaps symbolic of the nail mark wound in Christ's palm.³⁹⁷⁰ Another work show a symbol similar to this, in the middle of the right-hand glove area.³⁹⁷¹

HAND & WRIST GRASPING GUARDIAN ANGELIC REALM TRAVELING- GUIDES

There are numerous early to later Christian art works of angels protecting & guiding prophets, saints, & souls through their heavenly journeys. Numerous ones of angelic guides grasping souls' hands, or wrists to ascend into heaven, to protect & rescue souls from the dark demons grasping at souls too, as they attempt to drag souls down to hell. Numerous art-works of Guardian angels, clasping the hands or wrists of children to guide them over dangerous areas. Others of them watching over them as they pass over rivers, through dangerous bridges that have boards missing, etc. Or areas, which have slipping & falling-hazards. Thus, their hand & wrist grasping, in ritualistic symbolism, as in many art works, are to also help the soul from "falling" away. Or slipping, stumbling from the snares, stumbling blocks, or other fall hazards placed by demons, along the path of life, or along the journey of souls. Thus, these & many other examples of hand & wrist grasping, are symbolic of many things in historic Christianity: Protection, support, fall-prevention, welcoming, entering into other realms, realm-travel, guidance through dangerous areas, or guidance through paradisaical realms, & reunion of family members in the after life. Plus, of course, of being raised towards the rewards having endured to the end in the on going quests for Christian moral perfection & deification.³⁹⁷²

In later centuries, 18th century Freemasonry, perhaps to present, could also have hand clasping guides in their mysteries. At least this is what seems to be indicated by the art works. The candidate is blind folded, & his guide, with a white lamb skin apron on, (white symbolic of purity), is guiding by clasping with his left hand, to right hand, thumb resting on the top middle area of candidate's right hand.³⁹⁷³

HAND GRIPS ON MONIAL SYMBOLS ON LATER CHRISTIAN GLOVES

A symbol that seems to go back to earlier Christian mysteries is the hand clasping done on later Christian gloves that have different types of symbols in the middle of the hand, called the monial symbol.³⁹⁷⁴

1432, Jan van Eyck's The Adoration of the Lamb, from the Ghent Altarpiece, shows a number of clerical leaders with gloves on that have monial symbols in the middle of the hand.³⁹⁷⁵

In 18th c., to later Freemasonry, the wearing of white gloves seems to have kept in remembrance these earlier aspects of early to later Christian mysteries. In that they symbolized tokens of innocence, & like with later clerical gloves, sometimes are worn during different hand clasping rites.³⁹⁷⁶

ANOTHER SIGN OF THE GREAT APOSTASY: "FORBIDDING TO MARRY"! The apostasy away from traditional marriages was seen in how, at first, bishops were required to be wed & if they had children, to keep them under a godly like rule, though also "in subjection with all gravity." (1 Tim. 3:2, 4). Peter was married, (Matt.8:14). Tertullian tells of how marriage was common amongst the clergy in the early church. Clement of Alexandria, as cited by Eusebius, was written against those who rejected marriage: "And will they," says he, 'reject even the apostles!' Peter and Philip, indeed, had children, Philip, also gave his daughters in marriage to husbands, and Paul does not demur in a certain epistle to mention his own wife..." Clement also notes that the scriptures counsel that marriages to be done. Hippolytus reprimanded some heretics for attempting "to dissolve marriages that have been cemented by the Deity." (ANF, 5:112).³⁹⁷⁷ But then, as one of the signs of the apostasy, it was predicted that in the latter times, some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, & doctrines of devils, etc., plus: "Forbidding to marry," (1 Tim. 4:1-3). Irenaeus, 115-202, noted how some of the heretics of Saturninus & Marcion (110-165), called Encratites (self-controlled), preached against marriage, (ANF, 1:353). Marcion announced that all propagation, (or breeding by natural processes), must be abandoned at once.³⁹⁷⁸

From about the 2nd century, onwards, as different rituals & beliefs became lost, discontinued, discouraged, & fragmented in different areas of Christendom, so also did deification themes of perfection, become fragmented & blended with other foreign dogmas that crept in, such as celibacy. Many Christians, seeking a substitute for the rewards of perfection in martyrdom, sought extreme self punishing modes of suffering. Thus, many left their families, their spouses, refused to get married, or even have visual, or physical contact, at least as much as possible, with the opposite sex. They inflicted all kinds of sufferings upon themselves, as they developed different methods of self penance & denial of fulfilling fleshy lusts. Thus, those who followed extreme Monastic perfection themes, sought celibacy, & in some extreme cases, castrated themselves so as to reduce the temptations of lust for the opposite sex. Many went off into the deserts & lived the lives of Christian hermits, as marriage & children, eventually were considered too much of a distraction away from their extreme quests for Christian moral spiritual perfection.³⁹⁷⁹ “The tendency to disparage the wedded state, and to exalt celibacy into a counsel of perfection— is not only discouraged in Scripture but had its root in dangerous heresies, and runs counter to the express and repeated teachings of Holy Writ.”³⁹⁸⁰

A number of anti-body-Greek-Philosophy tainted early Christian Fathers,³⁹⁸¹ also began to look upon the physical-sex act, even in marriage, & its pleasures, as counter-productive to their quests for spiritual perfection. Sex outside marriage was a sin, fornication, forbidden. But in time, even sex in marriage was eventually viewed as inherently evil, but necessary to relieve the sexual tensions, & produce children. But was, according to Tertullian, “obscene,” & Augustine, “concupiscence,” transferred “original sin” down through the generations, & thus influenced the asceticism for centuries after him.³⁹⁸² While others sects, amongst the extreme Gnostic groups, in blending the early Christian mysteries with Heathen apostate mysteries, went completely in the opposite direction & tried to justify their immoralities as being sanctioned because they were “saved by grace,” & not by living any moral codes. Such groups may have contributed to early anti-Christian rumors about the crazy orgies in the “secret” meetings the early Christians were alleged to hold, late at night.³⁹⁸³ But then, later on: “Christian abhorrence of sex began with the fathers of the church, who insisted that the kingdom of God couldn’t be established until the human race was allowed to die out through universal celibacy.”³⁹⁸⁴

Forbidding to marry, certainly came true in later centuries of historic Christendom, for by the 11th century, the celibate life was enforced, whereas Priests were married during Christianity’s 1st thousand years.³⁹⁸⁵

By the 16th century, these were one in many things that later Reformer, Martin Luther fought & wrote against. He was also considered in a state of rebellion & heresy, by Catholic standards & policies of the times, for after being wed to Katherine von Bora, he later wrote in a letter, 5-26-1526, how: “There is about to be born a child of a monk and a nun.”³⁹⁸⁶

SYMBOLISMS OF ETERNAL LOVE: The apocryphal Gospel of Philip, 70:9-21, tells of how the holy of holies is the bridal chamber, where the woman is united in the bridal chamber, & those so united, (by hand or wrist grasping?), “can no longer be separated” in this “true mystery!”³⁹⁸⁷ In other words, the couple’s marriage, so long as they remained faithful to each other, would endure. That this concept of eternal love that endured beyond mortal life, was known in early Christianity, is evident by the writings

& funeral monuments of marriage. Origen wrote of probably some Orthodox Christians that believed that marriage endured beyond the resurrection, (ANF, 4:297, De Principiis 2.11.2).³⁹⁸⁸

Eternal love was often symbolized in early to later centuries by hand clasps of married couples, as seen on many brass funeral monuments, funeral stone carvings of married couples, & later tomb stones, with the husband’s & wife’s family names on them with different dates of events in their lives, births, marriage & deaths. The hand clasping shows such things as a lacy clothed down to the wrist area of the hands, for females, & suited-hand down to the wrist area for males. Symbolically depicting, the male-groom & his female wife-bride’s greeting or welcoming each other in the after life. That their love continues on, for each other, in the after life realms. Thus, the earlier to later Christian beliefs that in the resurrection, or at least in the after life, each other’s experiences, & company, with even their children, would be remembered, & “not forgotten.” Thus, hinting later on, that fragments of eternal love & family togetherness, with Parents’ posterity, does continue, if the love is strong enough, within their own families that will be united again in heaven. For as early to later beliefs of heaven go, the love they had for loved ones, will also continue, but under more glorious circumstances, than the hard ships & challenges experienced in mortal life.³⁹⁸⁹ Many of these tomb stones, with hand clasping symbols on them, date back to the late 1700s into the 1800s, & if known by different ones like Benjamin Rush, signer of the Declaration of Independence, & if the eternal love symbolism was believed, this might be why he wrote of his wife, Julia: “And when my mortal part shall lay... Who shall with me to Heaven ascend? my Julia.” Eternal love beliefs also show up in a letter of husband to wife, during the Civil War, 1861-65, such as Sullivan Ballou to his wife, before he was fatally shot in the Battle of Bull Run. Before this he wrote for her to “do not mourn me dead; think I am gone and wait for thee, for we shall meet again.”³⁹⁹⁰

Consequently, with the basic concepts of eternal love still being retained & passed down, mostly out of natural ways of love that couples have for each other. With all these in mind that such beliefs were known & handed down through the centuries, it’s easy to track through the centuries, what happened to the beliefs & symbolism, especially with all the monumental evidences, tomb stones, funeral art & eternal wedding symbolisms, in hand clasping rings, etc.

HAND & WRIST CLASPS IN HISTORIC CHRISTIAN MARRIAGES

In a work showing the scenes of the Creation of the Universe, the Earth, and all kinds of life. Eve is raised out of Adam’s side with a helping hand clasp from God. Another portion shows Adam with his right hand raised up (perhaps making the marriage vow?) While his left hand holds that of Eve’s right. God is there as if instructing & (perhaps performing the marriage?). Other hand clasps are seen here in other scenes, for God holds Adam’s right hand, as he explains & shows him the tree of knowledge of good and evil. Another portion shows Eve sitting down while God bends forward as if to raise her up on her feet for He has taken a hold of both of her hands. Could these art works reflect the faded memories of the earlier Christian mystery dramas of the creation?³⁹⁹¹

In many cases, double and triple types of hand and wrist grasps³⁹⁹² are seen being done during the marriage ceremony. At least, this is what the art works seem to suggest. In some cases, double clasps³⁹⁹³ are down in the way in which the one performing the wedding, brings the groom’s and bride’s hands together by grasping their wrists, or in some cases, arms. Other artists show different types of hand and wrist clasping, while the hands of the one performing the rite, still holds the wrists of the

In the Metropolitan Museum of Art, an early Christian art work shows "the marriage ceremony of a Christian couple: inscribed above are the words Vivatis in deo, "May you live in God." The couple are clasping each others' right hands too.³⁹⁹⁶

"Marriage of the Virgin. The high priest joins the hands of the kneeling betrothed couple (Pinakothek, Munich)". The hand clasp, (as it has been depicted here in this art work), is made with the right hands of the couple. On page 116 the marriage veil is mentioned here too. "...The young bride was borne in a litter in her wedding dress with her head veiled..."³⁹⁹⁷

300--310, on marble is carved, among other things, Adam and Eve embracing and clasping each others' right hands to form the "dextrarum junctio, the official marriage gesture."³⁹⁹⁸

4th century, on a circular work, a couple grasps each others' right wrists in marriage. Above the joined hands is a large wreathed crown, and there is also an inscription that reads VIVATIS IN DEO, a formula used since the days of Clement of Alexandria in Christian wedding ceremonies.³⁹⁹⁹

610--629, on a silver dish, is a Byzantium work that shows a couple clasping each others' right hand in marriage.⁴⁰⁰⁰

A 7th--8th century silver plate from Constantinople, shows the couple gripping each others' right hands during the "Marriage of David",⁴⁰⁰¹

In the sample of iconography studied by Jennifer O'Reilly, there is a 13th century Christian work that shows what could be God grasping the wrists of Adam and Eve, like later Priests would during marriage ceremonies, hence it is as though God were about to join Adam's and Eve's hands in marriage.⁴⁰⁰² Along with the other hand and wrist grasping that connect up with imagery of realm traveling, and the mysteries,⁴⁰⁰³ the sacrament of marriage, when it became more and more legendized in some areas of Christianity, included tree and branch imagery that were types of lineage, and other symbolisms, that seem to contain fragments of washing and anointing, though in fragmented forms. For in one work, "Christ received the Gifts of the Holy Ghost so He pours them out on the faithful virgins who seek to please the eternal Spouse."⁴⁰⁰⁴ And inasmuch as one of the sacraments was marriage, another work shows the blood of Christ flowing down, as if to anoint a couple clasping hands in the sacrament of marriage.⁴⁰⁰⁵

During the 11th--15th centuries, different types of hand and wrist grasps⁴⁰⁰⁶ were such a part of Christian wedding ceremonies, that it seems that one of the ways to depict a man and his wife together, was to show them grasping each others' hands. Hence, it is as though the different types of hand and wrist grasps became symbols that the couple had been joined together in marriage.⁴⁰⁰⁷

Both the mid-thirteenth and early fifteenth century manuscripts of the Bible Moralisée depict Eve being drawn from the side of Adam, with the "second Eve drawn from the side of the second Adam at the Crucifixion and of the betrothal of Adam and Eve paired with the mystic marriage of Christ and His Church, Mary Ecclesia" showing again different types of hand and wrist grips in illustrating these types.⁴⁰⁰⁸

In Giovanni di Paolo's altarpiece, the mystic marriage of St. Catherine show the moment of the clasp, hence, both the groom and Catherine are gripping each others' right hands.⁴⁰⁰⁹

A hand clasp is depicted as being done with the right hands of a couple, but also in this particular art work a religious leader seems to be in the process of binding their hands together with a strip of cloth. (15th cent. A.D.)⁴⁰¹⁰

Another depiction shows a couple as they clasps each others' right hand during a Roman marriage rite. This ceremonial marriage rite is called "...the solemn clasping of hands (dextrarum junctio) which formed an important part in the Roman wedding..." This source also mentions the bride's veil.⁴⁰¹¹

1250--1285, in early Gothic manuscripts, from the Hereford, Cathedral Library, a lettered art-work shows a Bishop grasping the wrists of a couple to join their right hands in marriage. In this case, the groom's middle finger looks as though it is touching the middle part of the bride's right hand.⁴⁰¹²

1275--1291, in a depiction of Baldwin IV, he gives Sibylle in marriage to Guy de Lusignan by grasping them both by their right wrists to bring their right hands together.⁴⁰¹³

1320, the arms of God extend out of heaven over a wedding ceremony, in which the person, perhaps Christ, is grasping the wrist of the bride to bring the hands of the couple together to make the traditional hand grips of marriage. Above this, an angel holds what could be a vest or garment too.⁴⁰¹⁴

Early 15th century, in a composition of the wedding ceremony of Philippe d' Artois, Comte d' Eu, and Marie, daughter of Duc de Berry, the couple are joined together by their right hands by a religious leader who holds the right wrist of the groom. In this case, the ceremony take place outside the church.⁴⁰¹⁶

1420, in a drawing of a wedding ceremony, the couple is joined together by their right hands, with the help of a man who brings them together by grasping the groom's arm.⁴⁰¹⁷

1452--1456, in Jean Fouquet's depiction of the Marriage of the Virgin, from the Book of Hours of Étienne Chevalier, the religious leader joins the right hands of the couple, by grasping their wrists.⁴⁰²¹

Hapsburg emperor, Frederick III, reigned from 1440 to 1493, and is depicted by Pinturicchio, in the Cathedral Library, Siena, as entering into marriage with Eleanor of Portugal. In this case, they are joined together by their right hands, with a religious leader by their sides.⁴⁰²²

1469, Spain, King Ferdinand V of Aragon, (1452--1516), & Queen Isabella of Castile (1451--1504), reigned: 1474--1504, united in marriage, with also what sound like an oath of homage hand clasping ritual too. In the presence of the Archbishop of Toledo, Ferdinand approached his bride-to-be & kissed her hand, but she recoiled her hand from it. At this, the archbishop waved it aside as trivial. "Even if Ferdinand was somewhat below Isabella in stately power, she had given her hand to him, and for that, she owed him total obedience." Had she placed her hands inside his as an oath of homage to him, before their wedding day? On about October 19, 1469, the archbishop of Toledo, assisted by the Cardinal of Spain, Rodrigo Borgia, married the couple. Was there the traditional hand clasp in marriage involved?⁴⁰²³

1488--1541, Bernaert van Orley's Flemish work of the marriage of the Virgin, shows the couple joining each others' right hands.⁴⁰²⁷

1504—5, another marriage scene that depicts a hand clasp, is that of Albrecht Durer's Marriage of the Virgin, woodcut from the Life of the Virgin.⁴⁰²⁸

1518, the hand clasp in marriage is depicted in anti-Reform art work which shows a "Reform minister officiating at the marriage of the fool and the she-devil. From Thomas Murner's anti-Lutheran pamphlet Von dem grossen Lutherischen Narren, about 1518."⁴⁰²⁹

In an imitation of contemporary artists from the Renaissance to Baroque styles, imitating Durer's style, with his monogram, is another depiction of a marriage ceremony. In this case, the religious leader grips gently the arm of the bride with one hand, and the wrist of the groom with the other hand to bring their right hands together. The couples' right hand thumbs rest on each others' second fingers' knuckles.⁴⁰³²

In an early 19th century interpretation of the Creation, by Thomas Blake, God is grasping, with his right hand, the right hand of Adam, while his left grasps Eve's wrist, as if God is introducing Eve to Adam to perhaps marry them.⁴⁰³³

The Quakers join hands and face each other to repeat their wedding vows.⁴⁰³⁵

A 19th century depiction of the Emperor Valens shows him offering "...the hand of asyhum to the Visigoths..." which consist of a hand clasp.⁴⁰³⁶

1853, Walter Howell Deverell, 1827--54, his As You Like It, painting, shows Celia in the guise of a boy, pretending to Officiate at the "marriage" of Orlando and Rosalind, in guise of boy. The interesting thing about this "so-called marriage" is the right handed clasp, for their thumbs rest on each others' second knuckle down.⁴⁰³⁷ A similar clasp is found on a tapestry that depicts the marriage of Tobit.⁴⁰³⁸

1890's, a Spanish work, carved bone and ivory on wood, shows the marriage of the Virgin, with a right hand grip. Pseudo-Gothic Triptych, ascribed to Francisco Pallas y Puig, A.D. 1859--1926.⁴⁰³⁹

HAND CLASPING WEDDING & BETROTHAL RINGS

In the Gospel of Philip, it says that when the woman is united to her husband in the Bridal Chamber it symbolized how that they could remain a couple in the next life and beyond. "Those who are united in the Bridal Chamber will no longer be separated" (Gospel of Philip 70:9-21).⁴⁰⁴⁰

Concerning the circle in marriage traditions, the ring being circular, round and without end, it symbolized how that it was hoped that couples' love for each other would continue forever.⁴⁰⁴¹ "By its very form the wedding ring is a symbol of the intention of both parties to keep for ever the vows they have made, to recognize as eternally binding the ties which join them in marriage."⁴⁰⁴²

In many early to later Christian wedding rings, they consist of two hands clasping together.⁴⁰⁴³ Rings were also worn by civil & religious leaders, which hands and rings were kissed during hand clasping greetings & ceremonies.⁴⁰⁴⁴ In fact, in some cases, the kiss of peace, is: "A ceremonial gesture, as a kiss or handshake, used as a sign of unity and brotherhood among those celebrating and attending the Eucharist."⁴⁰⁴⁵ Furthermore, the "liturgical kissing of a bishop's hand usually means a kiss impressed upon the ring he is wearing at the ceremony."⁴⁰⁴⁶ Consequently, it stands to reason that there may have been fragments of the earlier Christian mysteries preserved in these, and later traditional greetings & ceremonies. Especially when we also note that the conferring of some pontifical rings included hints to rites of passage hand and wrist grasps, as evident by the different references to different hand clasping elements in the mysteries, such as passing in through the gates of Heaven, Brides, raising up the fallen, etc. For example, in 590, in the sacramental conferring of the pontifical ring upon a bishop, a translation into English of St. Gregory's formula says this: "Receive this ring of distinction and honor, a symbol of faith, that thou mayest seal what is to be sealed, and reveal what is to be revealed, and that to believers baptized into the faith, who have fallen but are penitent, thou mayst by the mystery of reconciliation open the gates of the Kingdom of Heaven." Another version of the conferring of the ring hints to the wedding ceremony, which, as we have already noted, often includes different types of hand and wrist grips. Hence, a more modern formula says: "Receive the ring of faith as a sign that thou wilt guard the Bride of God, Holy Church, with undaunted faith."⁴⁰⁴⁷

In raising up the fallen, there are different types of hand and wrist grasps seen in the art works, especially too, in rites of passage hand and wrist grasps through the gates or doors to paradise, or heaven.⁴⁰⁴⁸

The reference to the Bride of God, is that hint which suggests the connection with earlier types and clasps in Christian weddings. Earlier, in the mid-thirteenth and early fifteenth century manuscripts of the Bible Moralisée, we see, among other hand and wrist gripping types, the clasps seen in "the mystic marriage of Christ and His Church, Mary Ecclesia."⁴⁰⁴⁹

Furthermore, inasmuch as the early anti-Christians,⁴⁰⁵⁰ Celsus, Caecilius,⁴⁰⁵¹ and Fronto, were disturbed by what they perceived were secret elements in the Christian mysteries, how they would "recognize each other by secret marks."⁴⁰⁵² And how that they would "extend the hand for greeting at the bottom of the palm they make a tickling touch and from this they ascertain whether the person who appeared is of their faith.”⁴⁰⁵³ Plus how that the secrecy of their mysteries and meetings, were largely due, in part, to the persecutions which the early Christians had to endure.⁴⁰⁵⁴ But also, because of how there were certain things which they felt should be reserved for those who had proved themselves to be worthy and ready for the mysteries.⁴⁰⁵⁵ It comes as no surprise to see elements of these “secret” aspects filtering down into later Christian customs. Hence, in later centuries, this concept that certain elements of the mysteries ought to remain secret, seems to be hinted to in the writings of Isidore, Archbishop of Seville from 601 to 636 A.D. He states that the pontifical ring is “one of the canonical insignia of the episcopate and terms it “a sign of pontifical honor, or a seal of secrets,” adding that the priests must keep many secrets confided to them hidden in their breasts as though beneath a seal.”⁴⁰⁵⁶

The hand clasp in marriage was often depicted in jewelry, thus, two hands clasped together make part of a collection of wedding rings.⁴⁰⁵⁷

The Eastern Orthodox, including Greek and Russian Orthodox are similar, in their Marriage Rites, as the Catholic Church, for they also join hands.⁴⁰⁵⁸

6th century, A.D., a golden marriage ring, Byzantine, shows two hands clasping.⁴⁰⁵⁹

6th --7th century, on a gold octagonal marriage ring, Constantinople (?), perhaps referring to the octagonal shape of the Church of the Divine Concord at Antioch, Christ stands between the couple to officiate the wedding rite, which is done as the bride and groom join right hands.⁴⁰⁶⁰

A medieval drawing of a ring shows two right hand clasped together with lombardic lettering on the band area.⁴⁰⁶¹

12th century, English, a silver ring has two right hands clasped together, symbolizing a sign of faithfulness, especially in love and marriage. The ring, along with many others, was deposited about A.D. 1180, and later found at Lark Hill near Worcester, England, in 1854.⁴⁰⁶²

13th century, a simple Lombardic type, shows two right hands that will make the grip. Inscribed on the band area is: IO SVIDE DRVERIE (a reverse N) E ME DV.⁴⁰⁶³

14th century, a French right hand clasping ring was found with coins and other things, during a demolition of a house in la rue aux Juifs at Colmar, France, in 1923.⁴⁰⁶⁴

14th century, two rings connect together by joining the hands.⁴⁰⁶⁵ Another 14th century hand clasping ring is made up of two rings that connect together to into one when the hands on them are joined together.⁴⁰⁶⁶

1420, in a French painting, during the time of Jean De Berry, the Father grasps the wrists of Adam and Eve to bring their right hands together to make the grip know as the “unctio dextrarum,”⁴⁰⁶⁷ while two angels hold the mantle of the Father.⁴⁰⁶⁸

15th century, a number of British rings show different types of hand grips on them, one shows right hands clasping. Another, the thumb rests on the knuckle of the 4th finger. On a third ring, two right hands clasped; on another, the thumb rests on the third finger’s knuckle; & the fifth is of two right hands making the clasp. These rings are called “love rings.”⁴⁰⁶⁹

First half of the 15th century, “On a gimmel ring... in the Londesborough Collection, is an engraved head of Lucretia; at the back appear two hands clasped.”⁴⁰⁷⁰

The bringing together of the two, in some cases three parts of the ring, in some cases by two hands that clasp together to make the ring hold together. The concept of marriages that extend even in the after life realms, seems to be retained, somewhat, in how the rings are connected together, and in the words that some times are inscribed on the rings, such as a 16th century German work: “Quod Deus conjunxit homo non separaret (Let man not separate what God hath joined together).”⁴⁰⁷¹ “As a general rule all rings bearing clasped hands were termed gimmel rings, although the designation properly belonged to two or more separate rings joined together.”⁴⁰⁷² Another Christian ring has the hand grip, and the words inscribed on it that signifies “Jesus Nazarenus Rex.”⁴⁰⁷³

16th century, a “bezel in form of clasped hands,” or hand clasping ring, can be seen in the British Museum.⁴⁰⁷⁴

During the Reformation, about 1525, Martin Luther got married to a woman, Katherine von Bora, as depicted in an old art & enacted in a black & white movie, where the Clergy tells them to take each other by the right hand to make their wedding vows. The Clergy’s also clasps their hands, left hand thumb visible, rests in the middle top area of Luther’s hand. In a German art work, with 1522, Marriage of Bishops, Monks, and Nuns, the Clergy’s right hand thumb rests on the groom’s top middle area of his right hand. This looks to be the same type of multiple joining of the hands of groom, bride & clergy, as in the movie.⁴⁰⁷⁵

1550s, a French or German ring, the fede ring with two right hands making the marriage grip, from the Italian mani in fede, meaning literally ‘hands in faith,’ has been used since Roman times, and signified Christian betrothal or marriage.⁴⁰⁷⁶

Early 17th century, Flemish, a multiple band, sometimes used in betrothal rings, shows two separate clasps, both made with right hands.⁴⁰⁷⁷

17th century, in the Albert Figdor Collection, Vienna, a betrothal ring of gold, has two clasping hands on it.⁴⁰⁷⁸

1761, French, right-hand clasping rings.⁴⁰⁷⁹

Tying the knot as types of Marriage Hand & Wrist Grips: Another custom that seems to reflect the ancient symbolical concepts behind the different types of hand and wrist grips in the world’s marriage rites is how different nations, and cultures tie a knot together to signify couples’ unions. As case in point is in Indian Hindu wedding rituals, in which the priest ties the groom’s sash to the bride’s veil, after which the couple exchange vows, which includes a part in the seven steps, septa-padi, signifying eternal friendship,⁴⁰⁸⁰ where one says to the other that they have become theirs’ forever.⁴⁰⁸¹

In the case with historic Christian weddings, different types of hand and wrist grips sometimes include a sash or long thin cloth that is wrapped around their joined hands to symbolize the couple has tied the knot, and are thus joined together as husband and wife.⁴⁰⁸² In old Christian rings, called “gimmel rings” derived from the Latin “gemelli” twins, often consist of two or more separate rings that clasp together by a hand clasp. “On each circlet there is a band, so disposed that when both are brought together the hands are clasped and hold the separate rings in place. Occasionally there are three or more rings combined in the same way. . . .”⁴⁰⁸³ These clasps were likened unto the “knots” that bound the two families together. Hence, the saying of tying the “knot” in marriage, derived from these hand clasping marriage traditions. Herrick refers to this: “Thou sent’st to me a true-lover knot; but I Return a Ring of jimmals to imply Thy love had one knot, mine a triple tye.” “A specimen of this type of ring is given in the privately-printed catalogue of Lady Londesborough’s collection (London 1853, p. 17). This is described as “a triple gimmel, the first and third circlet having each a hand, so that, when joined, the two hands are clasped together and serve to conceal two united hearts on the third ring. Of German workmanship.”⁴⁰⁸⁴ One old ring has the hand clasp inscribed with the words: “Our hands and hearts with one consent, Hath tied this knot till death prevent.”⁴⁰⁸⁵ On this same graphic page is another hand clasping ring, a gimmel ring, made of three rings that clasp together by two hands that make the hand shake, when the rings are brought together.⁴⁰⁸⁶

Wedding Vows or Oaths, and Hand Grips: The early Christian church recognized the property implications of betrothals: “De Sponsalibus et Donationibus ante Nuptias,” which required a contract sworn before witnesses.⁴⁰⁸⁷

13th century, in a depiction of the creation drama, the pre-existing Christ confronts Adam and Eve, perhaps about why they have fig leaves on. Adam is pointing over to Eve as if saying that she gave him the fruit to eat. Eve has her right hand raised as if acknowledging that they did eat. Or perhaps it may be that she might be performing a vow or oath, if that is, fragments of the earlier Christian mysteries were preserved in part in this series of art works.⁴⁰⁸⁸

1340, in Gothic art in Bohemia, two marriage scenes those of Joseph to Mary and Sarah and Tobias. In one, a bishop is grasping the wrists of the couple to bring their right hands together. The artist picked the moments before the clasp. In the other, the religious leader grasps the wrist of the bride with his right, while his other hand holds a rod or rolled up document, perhaps the marriage certificate(?). The groom’s right hand is clasping the bride’s right in this case. Each of the brides have their left hands raised as if to signify their wedding vows.⁴⁰⁸⁹

13th-15th centuries, in some cases, English speaking peoples had their Priests bring couples together to perform the wedding rites outside the church doors. In a depiction of this, the priest’s right hand is raised up, as if showing them the gestural oath of fidelity, as the couple grasps each other by their right hands.⁴⁰⁹⁰

During the Reign of Saint Louis, according to Manuscript Paintings from Paris, couples, during the wedding ceremonies, would grasp each other with their hands, while their other free hands are raised up to make a gestural oath or vow, known as “an oath of fidelity.”⁴⁰⁹⁶

20th century, in traditional nondenominational Protestant churches, the rite varies, but also includes cases in which the couple join each others’ right hands to make their wedding vows.⁴⁰⁹⁷

In Iceland, a ring, large enough for hand to pass through, was used to solemnize the betrothal. In placing his hand through the ring, “he received the hand of his bride.” In the old form of marriage in the Orkneys, they would join their hands through a perforation, or ring, in a stone pillar.⁴⁰⁹⁸

Coptic Christians wedding rite has the couple sit on the ground. A napkin or white veil, that covers the bride, is placed on the couple. The priest anoints each of them on the forehead and above the wrist. He reads over them and has them join hands. Another description of this Coptic type marriage mentions the “divan” on which the couple sit, and an embroidered veil or mantle that is placed on the shoulders of the two, the couple give each other rings, and “the hands joined under the bride’s veil.”⁴⁰⁹⁹

The Catholic mass emerged around the altar, which was the focal place of worship in the center of the circular architectural settings in many churches and Cathedrals, often under the circular domes. In some ways, it was likened, in a literal way, to the ark of the covenant where covenants and vows were made to God. “Prominent among these are the marriage promises, “ratified by the ring, the kiss, and the handclasp of the couple” as they “laid their joined hands on the gospel book.”⁴¹⁰⁰

In Ireland, as also in old Roman customs, “the wedding-ring was in the form of two hands clasped (called a “fede” in token of union and fidelity.”⁴¹⁰¹

PART 9: THE FATHERHOOD OF GOD, JESUS CHRIST AS THE LITERAL SON OF OUR HEAVENLY FATHER. OUR DIVINE PARENTS IN HEAVEN & THE LATER LEGENDIZATION OF THE GODHEAD IN HISTORIC CHRISTIANS’ CHRISTOLOGICAL CONTROVERSY

For us to attempt to unravel the snarled-up mess, that has been caused by different eras of apostasies, & how they affected different ones’ understandings about what God & the Godhead was believed to be like. This might be like how a soldier, under fire, might try to get through the entangled barbed wires, on the battle field, as he attempts to make it back through to safer grounds. The polemics & exchanges between rival sects, & contentious writers, have left us with countless pages of materials to sort through & make sense of. Moreover, because the controversies over the Godhead, Trinity, & what God the Father, God the Son & God the Holy Ghost, were all said to be like; also had effects on other doctrines, such as what the early Christians believed that the faithful males & females of Christendom would become like, in being deified. This part of our studies proceeds that of the study on deification, so that we can see the diversity of beliefs involved, that also created diversity & controversies about what the deified would become like in also becoming, or not, the type(s) of god(s), or goddesses), that they would become, in the afterlife.

Earlier in this study, we considered how the Old Testament scriptures were tampered with, from about 6th c., B.C., if not earlier, to 4th c., B.C., by Yahwists priests, & post-exile, post Babylonian captivity apostate scribes & editors, Deuteronomistic historians (“D”). How they stripped out, as much as possible, all references to a polytheistic anthropomorphic Deity, or Elohim (or attributing human form or feelings to a god or goddess, or gods & goddesses, having human characteristics as to bodily parts). How that different copies of those tampered with scriptures, were passed down & tampered with even more, before & during Christ’s era. Then, even more during the Christological controversy, of the 2nd & 3rd centuries A.D., with scriptures that would eventually become different canons of different versions of the New Testament. Then, much later, during the 4th century & beyond, how that they were tampered with even more, during the Trinitarian controversy of the 4th century & later. Then again, later during the preexistence, Origen controversy.

One of the earliest controversies in earliest Christianity was, concerning if God the Father, fathered a Son with an actual physical body! If so, then that would mean that not only did Christ have a body, in order to be the Father’s literal Son! But that also there would have to be a 2nd separate god! If so, that also meant, that if the Son had a body, God the Father must have a physical body too!

Celsus, (writing against early Christians, about 170-80 AD), noted the controversy, & used the earliest anti-Christian arguments of the Jews, to point this out, in mocking the human aspects of God the Father, that was being taught by the earliest Christians, & rejected by many of the Jews. Also,

Celsus mocked Christ's pre-existence themes, of Christ's coming down from heaven to earth to be born of such a low ranked manner, into a human body. A human male body, that was produced by God the Father, whom Celsus hints must have had male human type passions & other bodily private parts, in order for God the Father to want to have sex with the beautiful Mary.⁴¹⁰² He was aware of this controversy going around amongst the earliest anti-Christian Jews, about Christ being the literal "Son of God," which testimonials, many of the Jews rejected. Thus, Celsus used the controversy against the early Christians. For this was another reason why many of the Jews wanted to put Christ to death. They had spread rumors & gossiped about what they'd heard, & thus questioned: How could he be a literal "Son of God," when he was said to have human kin, & was born like other men, but in Christ's case, born of "fornication," (John 8:14-20, 41)? Later, because of their rejection of the concept that God could have a Son that would come down into a human body, different ones amongst the Jews must have reasoned amongst themselves & even mocked Christ with questions about: How could the "Son of God," allow his face to be smacked, spit upon, his back whipped, bloodied & his human body murdered in the most humiliating manner? As it was, while Christ suffered all kinds of physical abuse, from his critics, as many of the Jews mocked him, & questioned him about why he, if the 'Son of God,' would allow himself to be mistreated in such ways. Even some of his disciples, after seeing all the torturous physical abuse, seeing Christ bloodied, had their doubts, especially concerning later reports of his physical resurrection. Christ himself, after his resurrection, made it a point to prove to many of them, that his resurrected body was real, not just a spirit, but a real physical body that could eat food, & could be felt. (Luke 24:13-49; Mark 16:5-14, Matt.27:57-66, 28:1-18, John 20:3-29, 21:4-14),⁴¹⁰³ Consequently, after Christ's crucifixion & bodily resurrection, as his apostles went about preaching about Christ fulfilling the prophecies about his physical suffering, physical death & physical resurrection. Some of the leaders amongst the Jews plotted against the Apostles to get them to stop their testifying, & forbade them from preaching about Christ.⁴¹⁰⁴

John warned that: "For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an antichrist." (2 John 7). So did these anti-body beliefs of earlier centuries, attribute to the earliest to later rejection of Christ? The rejecting of his physical birth, life, death & resurrection? Were such views later the cause for early to later Christian controversies over Christ's physical birth, or not, his physical life or not, his physical resurrection or not. Plus, if he was a separate God, in the image of man, as man is in the image of God, or not? (During the Christological & Trinitarian controversies).

The monotheistic views of many earlier Jews, during the 6th century B.C., or during the period of the exile in Babylon, the Jewish scribes & apostate leaders, did strip out from their scriptures, the polytheistic elements of there being more than one God. Altered the texts of their being the Most High God, amongst lesser deities, a God of gods. This monotheistic movements & dominating belief, with their scribes & copyists, reformed the scriptures to fit their monotheistic dogmas. Because of this, & other dominating influences, the 'one God,' only beliefs did later help to shape later Jewish & Christian beliefs too.⁴¹⁰⁵

The Deuteronomistic theologians, or historians, "D," as they came to be called, during, or after the post-exilic Babylonian captivity of Israel, (before, & post-6th century B.C.). By this time, Israel is in a state of apostasy, set out to expel the pre-exilic doctrine of God as being present "face to face," in their Temple. "The LORD bless thee, & keep thee: The LORD make his face shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee: The LORD lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace" (Num.6:24-26). The temple destroyed, during the Babylonian take over, & many temple items became spoils of war, & were taken, along with many Israelites who became captives. So it was the reconstruction & restoration was sought after. Thus, the post-exilic priests had to figure out their temple worship chronology, but mixed it up, & made changes. The Lord coming to his temple, was a face to face presence. (Face & presence is the same word in Hebrew⁴¹⁰⁶ Psalms 4:5-6, 17:15, 31:1643:3-5, 44:3, 80:3, 7, 19, etc). This was changed to become non-physical, while before this, the temple music was supposed to invoke the divine presence. However, by the post-exilic period, the Psalms of David, as temple music, were rearranged, changed & edited. It was as if they'd lost many of their earlier original temple themes. How long had they been in captivity without their temple? If very long, how much of it would the later generations of temple priest know? Did they know the chronology of how the ceremonies went? Had many things been forgotten with time? Or rearranged on purpose, to try to come up with some kind of temple ceremonies, which singing & the Psalms were part of, but in a certain order?⁴¹⁰⁷ These are questions, plus more that ought to be explored further. For what happened, as they were rebuilding the temple again, during the post-exilic reconstruction phases? But because they had also apostatized away from an anthropomorphic polytheistic Elohim (gods & goddesses). Who could be "present" in their Temple, "face to face." They then had to strip out as much references to such things as they could, as they revised their scriptures into a monotheistic anti-anthropomorphic "deity," (or one God without a body, or non-human shape & image). Examples of passages mentioned earlier: Genesis 1:26-27, speaks in plural language, "us" & "our" image, and after our likeness, in talking about how "God" or Elohim (the Gods), "created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." This implies that the image [Hebrew tselem] of God is both male and female. While the Hebrew, demuth "likeness," refers to a resemblance, similitude or pattern, just as mortal sons & daughters are in likeness of their mortal parents. Just as when Adam & Eve begat children, like a son, Seth after his (Adam's) image, who was after God's image, (Gen. 5:1-3). Thus, "...if humankind ['adam] was created, both male [zachar] and female [neqebah], in the image of God, then the image of God must be both male and female, (in much the same way that humankind, which was modeled after God, is male and female)."⁴¹⁰⁸ These are some examples of passages that went against the attempts to push a monotheistic anti-anthropomorphic God, rather than plain simple reading of the text. How that Elohim, (Gods & goddesses, males & females in images, likeness & shapes of a God-man & Goddess-woman), that created males in females with hands, feet, eyes, heads, & the private parts that they needed to fulfill the command to multiply & replenish the earth, (Gen.1:26-28). The fact that, Christ's image was after his Father's image, suggests that, as Christ was not shapeless, without form, & wasn't physically in a body so huge as to spread out across the universe! This also suggests that the Father, in Christ's image, also has hands, feet, arms, eyes, a head, mouth, & other male attributes. (John 8:14-19, 20:17-29, Heb.1:1-10, Eph.4:13, Phil.3:3:21, 1 John 3:1-2, 2 John 7).

But, what happened to the copies of scriptures that they, the Deuteronomistic theologians, or historians, "D," might have still had, while they were in captivity? Thus, in the changes, the Lord didn't 'suddenly come to his temple,' (Malachi 3:1, 1 Kings 8:10-13, Psalms 80:1), it was allegorized away. Their reasoning being was because 'God was without a body': Not heaven, nor even the heaven of heavens can contain God! How much less, any physical Temple? (1 Kings 8:16-20, 27, 29, 44, 48).

Under these circumstances, the temple "ceased to function," according to its original intent of being a place of face to face encounters, or the divine "presence." Changed instead, to the place of his name only. This name concept was done in an attempt to expel the pre-exilic doctrine of the Presence. It was argued by the Deuteronomistic historians, or “D” scribes, that the temple was no longer a place for God to come be in, because not even the heavens can contain God. Thus, these scribes worked on the name concept, that helped bring about an apostate transformation of the understanding of God that was in conflict with earlier views. For it was a “God” produced in apostate minds, as warned by the prophets would happen, if the people broke their covenants, & kept not the commandments. Consequently, these scribes produced a “god” that couldn’t be seen, & encounter in the glorious human form & image, face to face, in sode experiences, spoken of by the prophets.⁴¹⁰⁹ Instead, they apostatized away from such things & claimed a “god” that couldn’t be explained, or known to any words that could be found to try to explain “god.” As with later Christendom’s apostasy, when one doctrine goes out, it affects the going out of other doctrines, thus in both cases, (the Apostasy in ancient Israel & Christendom):⁴¹¹⁰ Once the doctrine of God was changed & distorted, preexistence themes had to go too. For how could God be confined to a council in heaven, if he filled the heavens? How can God be seen face to face, if he had no face? How can God have spirit sons & daughters, if God as “Father” is not to be understood literally, as ever having a first born, or being the Lord of Spirits?⁴¹¹¹ How can God sit on a throne, surrounded by angelic council members, if God is not to be thought of as having those back side body parts to sit on? God couldn’t or had no need to speak to prophets anymore, as of old, because he didn’t have a mouth to speak, being a “impersonal, incomprehensible, genderless, speechless god.”⁴¹¹²

5th-2nd c., B.C., God’s name was lost, forgotten, or changed, or given up to other uses. The Jews gave up using God’s personal name Yahweh (Jehovah) & began to make reference to Yahweh by various periphrases. (Or the use of indirect & roundabout language, not following a short direct route to get to the point, but instead, the use of wordy circumlocution, or the use of many words, where fewer would do). Some of the personal name replacements were to call Yahweh: God, the Lord, the Name, the Holy One, the Presence, even the Place. Yahweh was pronounced as Adonai. Moreover, with the fall of the temple, the rare liturgical occasions, when the name was used, this ceased, especially as the knowledge of the pronunciation of the name was forgotten.⁴¹¹³ These apostate-scripture-tamperers were motivated by the desires to seek a less attentive & more impersonal God. For by ceasing to speak & think of Deity as the personal being known to the prophets, this created the distancing of themselves & their conduct, their apostate choices, from His attention.⁴¹¹⁴

To illustrate what seems to have happened: It would be like how sons or daughters might ignore their Father or Mother, not think of them as personal loving beings in male & female human shaped forms, or images. (Or Divine Parents, who kept warning them of their sins, & loss of the spiritual gifts. Instead of repenting, these sons & daughters then killed off the prophets who had kept warning them. Who also kept producing a prophetic record, the scriptures, that showed & warned them of their apostasy. With the prophets gone, their scriptures, now in the hands of the apostates, rebellious sons & daughters, they would then be changed, tampered with, & rephrased, so as to de-humanize their Father and Mother into less-personal beings). Consequently, these sons & daughters wouldn’t described their Parents as persons, but instead as shapeless, formless far distant, far removed non-beings. This was done in an attempt to create descriptions of them, that would cause later generations to cause them to fade away even further. Plus, resulting in the blending of mythologies from earlier apostasies, & other neighbors’ cultural contaminations of beliefs, as the earlier memories that might still linger, of their Parents of old.

Especially of their Mother, (or Mother God of the Divine Parents), faded out even more into the blends of legends & myths. Consequently, the memories of their Mother, are thus caused to fades off into the nothingness of legendized memories.⁴¹¹⁵ Such things done, were products of earlier apostasies, & were purposely done by rooting-out of polytheistic beliefs, so that a monotheistic “Father” parentage could also be made to fade out, by incorporating phrases & changed in translations of scriptures to continue to make the “Father” even more less impersonal. By so doing this, the promises that the children had made to keep commandments, covenants & the sayings of the prophets’ moral codes, could also be changed, reinterpreted, & reworded into more acceptable phrases. These being done as another product of their apostasy, as they sought to justify their apostate conditions, & the loss of spiritual gifts, & loss of their long line of scripture producing prophets, & prophetesses). This example, is kind of like what seems to have happen in the case with ancient Israelites’ loss of their basic beliefs in polytheistic anthropomorphic God & Goddesses, the loss of their spiritual gifts, prophets & their scriptures, through tampering:

“It is natural that a people in a state of transgression would seek a less attentive and more impersonal God. Such was the desire of apostate Israel. By ceasing to speak and think of Deity as the personal being known to the prophets, they sought to distance themselves and their conduct from his attention. Consistently their efforts in preserving translating, and interpreting scriptural texts were directed to that end. By the time Bible manuscripts are passed to us they have witnessed considerable tampering... particularly in those texts dealing with the nature of God.”⁴¹¹⁶

But, for “D” (Deuteronomistic theologians, or historians) to strip every trace of the themes of the human shaped Lord, or of the entering of the Lord into his temple, this was almost a mission impossible progressive process for them to do, but they tried, but still couldn’t get rid of everything. As if knowing this sort of thing would happen, God & his prophets set up too many types, ritualistic symbolism, prophecies, & temple themes, that pointed to the entering of Deity into the Temple. As it was, when Deuteronomists historians dominated scriptural copying productions, & Yahwist priests ran the post-exilic Temple, they had to go up against how the whole temple, and the ceremonies there in, were set up earlier with many aspects that were prophetic body types of the Messiah. The temple was a type of body itself & what would happen to that body, the wounding, & blood letting of the animal sacrifices, as types of the Messiah’s atonement. (The body was also a temple, or tabernacle, as was the church a type of Christ’s body, with the hope of unity, & Christ like traits being developed amongst the “body of Christ,” or different church members, officers, & leaders, (1 Cor. 3:17, 6:17-20, chaps 12-13, Eph.2:12-22, 4:3-32, Matt.26:59-66, 27:40, Mark 14:58-64, John 2:18-22, Christ’s sayings, destroy this temple (his body), & in 3 days he’d ‘raise it up.’ This got distorted by his critics into Christ saying he was going to destroy the Jewish temple, when he was making reference to his body-temple. But the point is that the temple was a type of the Messiah’s body into which the pre-existing Spirit of the Lord would come into, by being born into the flesh). Of which also the sacramental bread was a type of that body, & the Lord’s pre-existing spirit’s descent from heaven, to be born into the flesh, (John 5:45-47, 6:33-57). So when the scriptures prophesied about how the ‘Lord would suddenly come to his temple,’ or “tabernacle,” it was like a prophetic type of how the pre-existing spirit of the Lord, would descend from the pre-existing council in heaven, from the gathering of the gods & goddesses, presided over by the Most High God the Father. Thus, the Messiah would pass through the veil & would enter his temple, or be born into the flesh, a physical body. All the temple imagery, ceremonies, washing away of soil, spots, shaking off the dust from garments, stripping off the old soiled, or old garments. Putting on new washed & whitened robes, vestments, garments, blotting out of sins, washing, anointing & purification themes.⁴¹¹⁷ Plus, the animal sacrifices, blood, blood sprinklings, were also types of these things too. The unspotted, or unblemished sacrificial lambs,⁴¹¹⁸ were types of unspotted, or undefiled-garments. (Or, the Messiah's spirit, clothed in a body of righteousness, without blemishes or spots, because spots were types of sins). "But with the precious blood of Christ, as the lamb without blemish and without spot." (1 Pet.1:19-25). This was a type of also how the repentant can also put on righteousness, in taking off the shameful negative traits, symbolized like old soiled garments, stained & spotted with former sins. Thus, if the repentant continue to improve, & cloth themselves in other positive Messiah type traits, love, kindness, etc., & endure to the end in keeping temple covenants, & the commandments. They were to "be clothed with humility: for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time." (1 Pet.5:5-6). Consequently, thus clothed, they were more ready for their face to face glorious encounters with the Lord, when the arm or hand of the Lord is revealed, to lift up the soul in the deification of both the spirit, & resurrected body. For in being cleansed & purified, they will become like him, ("As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied, when I wake, with thy likeness." Psalms 17:15, 1 John 3:1-11, "when he shall appear, we shall be like him" verse 2). For they are "changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." (The pre-existing Christ, is the Spirit of the Lord, that appeared face to face to Moses, 2 Cor.3:3-18, 4:1-6, Rom.8:1-34, 1 Cor.10:1-4, Ex.17:1-7, Num.6:22-27, 20:7-11). "For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ: Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body..." (Phil.3:20-21). In that both the females & males would be deified gods, & goddesses.

What type of garments, (types of resurrected bodies that shined with different types of glories, 1 Cor.15:34-58), the soul was clothed in, was part of the face to face encounters with God during judgment settings. Thus, all the prophetic warnings about being repentant, washed clean, remaining pure (white), so as to be found "spotless" before God's all searching eye, during judgment settings, were about these face to face life reviews in God's presence.⁴¹¹⁹ 4th to 5th century Coptic Christians wore the proper clothing that they felt would get them ready to meet God, & thus had on the proper burial clothing for that purpose.⁴¹²⁰

To be ready for the face to face encounters, the prophets of Old Testament times, & early Christianity both testify, that being clothed in the right traits was what was needed: Humility, Righteousness, Purity, etc. "That he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, That he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy and without blemish." (Eph.5:26-27, 2 Cor. chap. 5). These were all physical types of the Redeemer, the promised Messiah, & the whole points of the ancient Israelites' physical & spiritual temple ceremonies! Plus, the whole-point of many of the early to later Christian mysteries, many versions that testified of Christ's pre-existence, physical life, the manner of his death, his descent into the underworld, & his physical resurrection! Plus, his glorious post-resurrection physical-face-to-face manifestations, & victory-march throughout the world, as the messenger of the covenants of salvation & deification. Which face to face encounters added to the witnesses, as required by Jewish law, to establish the truth of any particular issue or matter, by having more than just 1 witness, but as many as could be gathered to testify the truth of an event. Which, in this case, was that Christ rose from the grave & still has his glorious resurrected body, (John 8:14-20, Heb. chap.1, 1 Cor.15:1-28, 2 Cor.13:1, Matt.18:16, Num.35:30).

Consequently, Christ's physical post-resurrection world-wide-trek, was when many became physical witnesses, by the ritualistic hand & wrist grasping symbolism, whereby they testified that Christ rose from the dead, with a physical glorified resurrected body. This was because of how he invited them to feel his wounds, with their hands, as he displayed them, during his post-resurrection world wide trek, which art works of this, often show the physical Christ, making the same types of gestures done in the mysteries. His arms & hands are thus positioned in different ways, as he appears, face to face to those he displays his physical wounds to. He showed them that such wounds were in fulfillment of the prophets, & such gestures were sacramental type gestures, not only done in ancient Israelite temples, but in the early to later Christian mysteries, masses, & liturgies.⁴¹²¹ Thus, the whole temple dramas, & mysteries were in the prophetic fulfillment in Christ's bodily actions, what happened to him, his pains, passions, sufferings, & crucifixion. But also, his ultimate victory over death, the devil & his fallen angels. (Luke 18:31, 24:13-32, Acts 2:25-36, 8:28-35, 10:43, 13:27, 32-37, 17:1-5, 26:22-24, 28:23, Matt.2:4-6, John 5:39-46, 8:52-59, 20:9, 2 Tim.3:14-17, Heb.5:5-9). Being properly clothed in righteousness, not clothed in shame, garments of vanity, but being stripped of pride, & all other negative traits of blackness, (Psalms 109:18-29, Shepherd of Hermas, Sim. 9, Apostolic Fathers, 2:217-97). But not being properly clothed upon, was also not good also, or found naked & shamed before God's face to face judgment. These ancient temple garment types were physical reminders of the types of activities done in the body, good or bad. They were to keep their garments, hands & feet unspotted from sins, unsoiled from walking down the left-hand path, or unbloodied from murders & other sins. Which types became part of the early Christian mysteries that centered on the prophesied Messiah having come to his temple, (or of Christ's physical birth, physical death & physical-resurrection. With Christ life as a good example for all to follow toward their own individual physical & spiritual deification in each, their own resurrected bodies that would shine as bright as the sun).⁴¹²² They were to not defile their garments (Rev.3:4-5), or desecrated their "temples" (spirits clothed in naked bodies at birth, Eccles.5:15, Job 1:20-22). For the spots (sins), would blacken their garments, bloody them, & their hands, through evil choices, covenant breaking, rebellion & by not keeping the commandments, (Isa.59:1-9, Psalms 24:3-4, 35:26, Jude 6-24, Rev.3:3-22). They were to thus put on the garments of righteousness, like their naked souls put on an innocent body, at birth. Or put on Christ, (in ritualistic early Christian temple types).⁴¹²³

Temple type themes that survived during the Middle Ages, & later Liturgical dramas, that retained Christ-body themes, & symbolism, include how burial clothes are likened unto Christ's body on the cross, & later on, because there is no body in the burial clothing, it symbolized the resurrection of Christ's body. Another body type was the Corpus Christi festivals, (body symbolism in the sacrament), & Whitesunday, (the traditional reminders of white baptismal robes & resurrection themes for Easter plays & festivals, & traditions). "On Good Friday a cross was often wrapped in burial clothes and placed in a symbolic tomb, from which it was raised on Easter Sunday." Then in a liturgical play: "Then he shall rise and raise the veil and show them the place, empty of the cross but with the linen in which the cross was wrapped; ...and shall take up the linen and hold it before the clergy and, as if showing the Lord had risen and was no longer wrapped in it, they shall sing, this antiphon; Surrexit Dominus de sepulcro, and shall then place the linen on the altar." ⁴¹²⁴ S. Cyril of Jerusalem, (318-386 AD), in his lectures on the mysteries, called it the garment of salvation, (Isa.61:10), and said that it was a type of the clothes that Christ's body was covered in while his body was in the tomb. St. Ambrose (340-397 AD), calls the garments of the mysteries the chaste veil of innocence.⁴¹²⁵ Christ's flesh is likened unto the Temple veil, (Heb.10:10-22, note verse 20, Psa.104:1-2). Clement of Alexandria, (153–193–217 AD), seems to suggest that the garment is a symbol of Christ. "And I will be" He [Christ] says, "their Shepherd," and will be near them, as the garment to their skin. He wishes to save my flesh by enveloping it in the robe of immortality, and He hath anointed my body."⁴¹²⁶ Also, their garments were veils of innocence, that they were to keep white (symbolic of purity & innocence) & spotless (spots symbolic of sins, thus spotless, pure & whitened garments before God's judgment, in face to face encounters with Deity).⁴¹²⁷

Another ancient Israelite body type, also used by early to later Christians, was the feet of the Messiah, that treads over a fallen devil, symbolic of his victory march, (which may be why many of the Jews thought their Messiah was going to free them from the Roman bondage they were under, during Christ's time. Plus, why some rejected Christ, he wasn't a militant Messiah during his earthly mission). The Messiah, in these prophetic types was therefore a militant Messiah, in early Christian types, the Militant Christ, mentioned earlier, that treads the wine press, (that theme is filled with garment & sacramental types too). Also, a Militant Christ, that treads over the fallen devil during Christ's militant descent into hell, & post-resurrection victory-march throughout the world.⁴¹²⁸

These are just some of the physical types that pointed to the coming Messiah's physical appearing, that the anti-anthropomorphic monotheistic Yahwists, & Deuteronomistic historians, called "D," had to somehow get around. The ways they did this was to change texts, de-literalize meanings, enforce dogmas, metaphoricalize & allegorize away the polytheistic anthropomorphic types, rituals, scriptures, prophecies & temple worship ceremonies, & symbolisms.⁴¹²⁹

Some of the temple symbolism were related to face to face divine presence encounters, during the cleansed & forgiven ones' ascensions, assumptions, or realm travels. As noted earlier, the frequent illustrations of these are human images of the revealing of the arm or hand of Deity. The often repeated in scriptures & art, extended hand or arm of the Lord being revealed. Humans being created in God's image, & God thus having the image of human shapes, for it's a regular looking-hand, with five fingers, as expected, that is seen extending out. The physical hand symbolism is also seen with covenant making, that is also done with hand & wrist grasping (Isa. 42:5-8), as noted earlier, in wedding ceremonies, rings, in some baptismal art, descent into lower realms, ascent out, or resurrections. Plus, on grave markers, ascensions, & assumptions into heaven, heavenly coronation ceremonies, paying homage, angelic guides taking souls into higher realms, Peter or angels at the gates or doors of paradise, etc. It has also been noted that face to face encounters with the risen Lord, Jesus Christ, during his post-resurrection world wide treks, also includes hand & wrist grasping encounters with Christ, who has, for example, St. Thomas feel his wounds, showing that he was not a spirit only, but was resurrected into his physical body. Thus, a number of art works show different ones greeting the wandering Christ by different types of hand & wrist grasping, which greetings were passed down to how later monks & clerics would greet each other, as if Christ, disguised as a fellow monk, or some other human shaped character, to test their charity, according to Matthew 25, & monastic traditions & rules. There was also the hand & wrist grasping of those who ascended the ladders to Christian moral perfection & deification. Thus, all these ancient types, temple symbolism, covenant making, face to face encounters, were reminders of the physical aspects of Deity. God the Son, became a man, so mankind could learn from God the Father's Son in human form, the form & express image of the Father in human form, after which form man was created in their image. (John 8:14-20, Phil.3:20-21, Heb.1:1-9, 10:8-22, 1 John 4:1-3, Gen.1:26). Plus, how that the human family could progress to becoming divine, gods, & goddesses in deification. These physical attributes & symbolism, were what bothered & challenges the ancient Jewish temple Yahwists priests & Deuteronomistic historians ("D"), that had fallen into apostasy, & become anti-anthropomorphic monotheists. Which, when their influences later continued to dominate beliefs in God, ended up causing Christ, the Son of God to be rejected & killed. Which, when blended with Greek philosophies anti-anthropomorphic monotheism, ended up influencing the later developments & contentious formulating of creedal statements of the Nicene Creed era.

The anti-body beliefs of different ones like Philo (ca. 13 B.C. - A.D. 45 to 50), though a Jew, had incorporated Greek philosophy into the Jewish faith in Alexandria. Thus, picked up by many of the early Christians about the 2nd century, because before this, the earliest Christians were defending that God had a body. So it was later, during the Christological controversy, that Philo's theology "became operative among Christian teachers from the beginning of the second century" and then became "a standard of Christian theology."⁴¹³⁰ Thus, Philo has it that: God, according to this blend of Jewish & Greek thought, was incorporeal & indescribable, & could be known by reason, but not all together, because he was incomprehensible: "He is not in space, but beyond it; for He contains it.... He is "without body, parts, or passions": without feet, for whither should He walk who fills all things: without hands, for from whom should He receive anything who possesses all things: without eyes, for how should He need eyes who made the light. He is invisible, for how can eyes that are too weak to gaze upon the sun be strong enough to gaze upon its Maker. He is incomprehensible: not even the whole universe, much less the human mind, can contain the conception of Him: we know that He is, we cannot know what He is, we cannot know what He is: we may see the manifestations of Him in His works, but it were monstrous folly to go behind His works and inquire into His essence. He is hence unnamed: for names are symbols of created things, whereas His only attribute is to be."⁴¹³¹ Thus, Philo attempts to describe God.

The muddling of the earlier beliefs that Christ was the literal Son of God, the first begotten in the spirit, & only begotten in the flesh. These concepts must have been later muddled by later Greek philosophical influences as some came through & were due to such influences upon some early Christian apologists, as Greek philosophically influenced Jewish theologian, Philo (ca. 13 B.C. - A.D. 45 to 50): God is beyond man's comprehension, but could be revealed through the "person" the Logos, that reveals the nature of God by reflecting that nature. God is Mind and Logos is the only begotten Son of Mind and thus reveals Eternal Reason to man.⁴¹³²

From earliest Christian times, Greek philosophy's anti-body ideology was blending in with Christological controversial issues & polemics over anti-body views against pro-body views. In Greek thought, the Supreme being is pure form and without matter, or is immaterial, without impressions, no sensations, no appetites, nor a will, or desire, no feelings or passions, for all these things depend on matter. Thus, God could not be a physical man, in the form or image of a man. God can't be made of matter because matter is evil. This is a summation of some of the Greek philosophical views held centuries before Christianity, such as that of Aristotle & different ones like Plato, Thales, Xenophenes, & Pythagoras, some who had protested against the theological anthropomorphism (the ascription of human attributes, feelings, and conduct to spiritual beings, like to God or any deity). Such views as these would later influence early to later Christianity, when this & other aspects of different themes in Greek philosophy corrupted the early to later Christian concepts of what God the Father, Jesus Christ & Holy Ghost, were polemically argued to be like, or not.⁴¹³³

CHRISTOLOGICAL HERETICS' BELIEFS

A short list of definitions to help in understanding the meaning of different names for different beliefs, & those who believed in them:

Adoptionists: Those who believed Christ was not divine, didn't pre-exist, was born a mere man to Joseph & Mary, (for most, born of a virgin). Then was adopted as God's Son, for his unique righteousness, during his baptism, or resurrection.

Anti-adoptionists: Those who argued that Christ pre-existed, was himself divine, was not just a mere man born of Joseph & Mary, but was the Son of God, born on the virgin Mary. Christ had a physical body.

Separationists: Jesus Christ has 2 natures: Christ, one of the deities of the Godhead, came down from the divine realm, entered Jesus, empowered him, the human nature part of him, but departed, or separated from Jesus to return to Pleroma, (the divine realm), leaving Jesus to suffer on the cross alone.

Anti-Separationists: Those who argued that Jesus Christ were not 2 natures, but that they were one & the same. That Jesus Christ suffered & rose again, there was no separation in Jesus as a God-man, or human-god. Jesus Christ was the Son of God, with real blood, real flesh, & was killed & raised in the flesh. Jesus Christ was not divided into distinct entities.

Docetism: Those who believed & argued that Christ only seemed, or appeared to be human & to be suffering. Although Jesus Christ was completely divine as one individual, because the divine can't suffer, Jesus Christ was not real flesh & blood, but was a phantom, human in appearance only. Thus, they denied Christ's fleshly reality, that he had real flesh, real blood, & a real body that was crucified.

Anti-Docetism: Those who argued that Christ had a real body, real birth, real blood, suffered for real, rose in a real body in the resurrection.

Patripassianists, ("modalism"): Those who argued that Christ was God the Father himself, come down to earth in human flesh. Came down into the Virgin, was Himself born of her, Himself suffered, was Himself Jesus Christ.

Subordinationists: Those who maintained that Jesus was not the equal of the Father.

Sabellianism: The belief that the Father, Son & Holy Ghost were only names for different manifestations of the one God.

Monophysitism: The belief that in Christ there was one nature only, the divine. The human nature had been absorbed by the divine nature, making the 2 only 1.

Dyophysitism: The belief that in Christ, there are 2 natures, 1 divine, the other human.

Monothelitism: The belief that the Savior had 2 natures, but only 1 will & the solution that was finally imposed as "orthodox," 2 natures, 2 wills in 1 Person.

The Controversies over if God could take on human flesh, or not Scriptures present Godhead as being separate individuals: The scriptures & early Christian history shows that from the earliest times, Christ was believed to have been one of the divine spirit Sons of God the Father in a family in heaven. (John 6:33, 38-40, 44, 51, 62-65, 7:28-33). A number of scriptures also present the Father and the Son as two separate beings. "It is also written in your law, that the testimony of two men is true. I am one that bear witness of myself, and the Father that sent me beareth witness of me." (John 8:14-18). The scriptures also present Christ as having gained a body too. (Matthew 2:11, 13:53-58, Luke 2:40-52, Hebrews 5:8-9, Isaiah 53, Mark 14:22). He had a body that was nailed to a cross, & a face that "they struck," (Luke 22:63-4; John 19:16-18, 34-37; Exodus 12:46; Num.9:12; Zechariah 12:10; Revelation 1:7). In fact, His shape, size, & image was in the form of a man. Thus, this became one of the reasons why many of the Jews rejected Him. (John 10:32-36, 18:28-32, Luke 13:34; Matthew 23:34-38). Jesus also never claimed to be God the Father, but the Son of God, (John 8:25-9, 10:7-36; Matthew 27:39-43; Philippians 2:5-11, Genesis 1:26-7, Hebrews 1:3; John 17, 14:6-12; Ephesians 4:13). And the Father never says that he was the Son but rather that he was pleased at what his son was doing, (Matthew 3:16-17, 17:5; Mark 9:7; Luke 9:35). Biblical passages are numerous about God as embodied, Genesis 1:26, God said, let us make man in our own image. Jacob & Moses saw God, spoke to him face to face, (Gen. 32:30, Exodus 33:11). The God of Israel was seen, he had feet, & a back, (Exodus 24:10, 33:23). Christ's post-resurrection appearances, he had a glorified body. Stephen saw the Son of God standing on the right hand of God, (Acts 7:56). Hebrews 1:3, Jesus is in the brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person. Christ appears to Saul, as a glorified resurrected person, (Acts 9:3-7), as later argued by Saul, named Paul in defense of a physical resurrection, that many witnessed that Christ had a physical resurrected body, (1 Cor. 15). John saw the resurrected Lord too, (Rev. 1:10-18).

During Christ's time, could his critics & defenders have used the Old Testament type passages for their defense, or to make critical claims? Could Isaiah 46:5-9, have been used to claim that Christ couldn't have been a 2nd 'god,' or the "Son of God," because "there is no other"? Could also 43:10-12, 45:21-2, 46:9? Or could the earliest Christians have pointed out how Isaiah was contrasting the Idol-gods of his time, as frauds, in contrast with the true Yahweh, who performs all kinds of mighty acts? This, in contrast to idols that have to be carried upon their worshipers' shoulders, can't move about on their own? While the true God, does move, does speak, does announce his purposes & plans & brings them to pass? As the anthropomorphic God themes, were defended by earliest Christians against, say, the early anti-Christians amongst the Jew, who rejected Christ's appearing too human? Plus, of which many Jews were also steeped in monotheistic anti-embodied god themes! Could the earliest Christians have also continued to point out how different types of idols were being worshiped that couldn't see, hear, speak, or smell, though the idol makers had carved or made their idols to appear to have ears, eyes, mouths, noses, & other human parts? (Psa. 115:5-6). How that such Idols can't even do the same things that their human makers can do? Thus, with idol worship being an issue in not only ancient Israel, but also amongst the pagan idol worshipers of the earliest Christian times. (Acts 17:22-30, 19:23-41, Idol makers felt their trade & source of income was being threatened by early missionary activities of Paul & the earliest Christians).⁴¹³⁴

Could the earliest Christians then have pointed out to their critics, that they shouldn't try to use Isaiah 43:10-12, 45:21-22, 46:9, to claim that Christ couldn't be another 'god'? Or use such passages to claim that Christ shouldn't try to make himself a "god," or claim to be "the Son of God," (John 19:7, Mark 14:61-62, Matt.26:63, John 19:7, Luke 22:70). Did the earliest Christians argue that any ancient critics amongst the Jews, (if they might have), shouldn't use Isaiah against Christ, by then claiming, that such passages declared, that 'there is no other god besides God'? If they used Isaiah, was it to claim that Christ, & the earliest Christians, shouldn't be doing any god-making? Did they know of the earliest Christians' teachings about deification? If so, did they use Isaiah to claim that Isaiah had condemned the earliest Christians' claims that Christ, & themselves, though being human, in human bodies, can become divine beings too? If so, how this, according to the Jewish law, was to be rejected, because ‘there can’t be any other god, besides the one true & only God?’ (John 6:41-60, 8:38-42, 10:29-39, Matt.5:48).⁴¹³⁵ “Without controversy great is the mystery of godliness: God was manifest in the flesh, justified in the Spirit, seen of angels, preached unto the Gentiles, believed on in the world, received up into glory.” (1 Tim.3:16, emphasis added here. 2 Tim.3:12-17, Eph.4:11-13, Phil.3:15-21, Heb.1:1-10, 5:5-9, 10:16-24, 2 Pet.1:2-10).

From the earliest Christians’ perspectives the Jews were going against so many of their own prophecies, & ritualistic types & symbols, that pointed to God the Father having a Son, the promised Messiah, another 2nd God, Jesus Christ, the Son of God! (John 8:13-19). However, things wouldn’t remain the same in early Christianity too. For, despite all these witnesses, symbols, ritualistic types, & ceremonial Old Testament reminders of Deities becoming flesh, the tide of anti-body dogmas kept flowing in. Was it then because such things were foreseen, fore-told & pre-warned against? That the Lord & his prophets set up a fortress of physical remembrances, & warned the people, & his disciples many times, that it was from the anti-Christ, for anyone to accept & follow the false teachers, that taught against the physical aspects of Deity? “For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an anti-christ.” (2 John 7). Note the possible pre-existence themes hinted to here, for it seems to suggest that John was warning how that the devil & his demons, all anti-Christ, had “entered into the world.” To do what? What might their post-war-in-heaven activities include this time? Answer: To make the “doctrine” of an immaterial God, as pirated from Greek intellectuals, the fashionable thing to believe in, by as many they could get to fall for such dogmas! Why? Because it would also help cause other doctrines to be affected, changed, lost, & corrupted, as noted earlier. The post-war in heaven activities of the devil & his demons were to start apostasies, for they were legendizers & fable makers too, in order to get the people to fall away from the truth unto fables, even cunningly devised fables, (2 Thess. 2:1-15, Acts 20:28-31, 2 Cor.2:8-17, 2 Pet.1:16-21, 2:1-4). Thus, John must have thought that different ones so inspired by the fallen angels, or anti-christ, were the Gnostic doceticism, (Docetism from Greek, means “to seem, or “to appear”). For, they believed & taught that Christ only appeared to men in a spirit body, and that since he had no actual body, he only “seemed to” suffer and die on the cross.

Justin Martyr, (110-165), spoke of heretics that maintained that Jesus appeared only as spiritual, and not in flesh, but only presented himself as the appearance of flesh. Thus, these persons seek to rob the flesh of the promise. Justin also spoke of certain heretics that say there is no resurrection of the dead. He then testified that he & other right-minded Christians, are assured that there will be a resurrection, (ANF, 1:239, 295).

Tertullian, (140-230), wrote of such heretics, one being Marcion (110-165), who believed that Christ was a phantom, denying to Christ “the reality of a perfect body,” and the Christ “was not what he appeared to be, and feigned himself to be what he was not—incarnate without being flesh, human without being man.” A similar teaching was going around by Saturnius, notes Tertullian, how that this heretic taught that Christ had not existed in bodily substance, & therefore, endured a quasi-passion in a phantasmal (non-real, but only appearing to be real), shape. So also with the resurrection, the flesh there will by no means be raised for real!⁴¹³⁷

Many of these heretics couldn’t accept the fact that a god, Christ, had become a real man clothed in flesh, & died a real death, & was resurrected in a real body, so they spiritualized, & de-bodied Christ in the whole stories. They must have also ignored any witness statement that might have been passed down to them in oral traditions. Plus, many copies of whatever versions of scriptures, that they might have come across, when they copied them for their own use, they altered, changed & manipulated them to fit their particular anti-body views. But so also were the texts changed in other copies, by anti-Docetics, those who sought to counter these views. Thus, passages altered for the purpose of emphasizing, by adding words here & there, the stories about Christ’s coming in the flesh, to make them more clarified as being real events, & that his resurrection was real!⁴¹³⁸

Aware of these Gnostic activities, the New Testament writers, over & over again, warned against anti-Christ, that confess not that Christ was flesh, & that there was no resurrection of his flesh, (1 John 4:3, 2 John 1:7, 1 Cor.15:12, 1 Tim. 3:16, 4:1-3, Titus 1:9-16, Heb. 1:1-10, 5:5-10).⁴¹³⁹ They also remind the church to not go after foolish fables, or become spoiled by philosophy & deceit. Or the cunning craftiness of men that lie in wait to deceive. For the apostles & prophets were given to unite them in the faith & knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, & were eye witnesses of Christ’s majesty, which included testifying that he had a glorious resurrected body, (Eph.4:11-14, Col. 2:8, 2 Pet.1:12-17, 1 Cor.15:3-22). And not some formless immaterial “god,” of the ascetic reformers, who preferred a bodiless God.⁴¹⁴⁰ Despite the many witnesses to the resurrection, it was a hard doctrine for many to accept, so many “mocked” it (Acts 17:18, 33). Others were warned of being in error, in telling fellow church members that the resurrection was past, thus overthrowing the faith of some, (2 Tim. 2:18).

Consequently, parts of the deceptions were to use different tactics, such as one that the Devil tried to use against Christ, & that is to cite the scriptures! (Matt.4:1-11). But also, to use scriptures that had been already tampered with earlier, as already noted. Plus, they were continually being tampered with: “For we are not as many, which corrupt the word of God: but as of sincerity, but as of God, in the sight of God speak we in Christ.” (2 Cor.2:17, 4:2-4).

Thus, as the Christological controversy raged on, such passages that showed the physical aspects of Christ were included in some copies, but not in others, such as when Luke wrote of Christ, how “his sweat was as it were great drops of blood falling down to the ground” (Luke 22:44). In future years these verses would slip in and out of the manuscript copies. They were an obvious annoyance to those attempting to develop the doctrine of a passionless God.⁴¹⁴¹

It was as though the New Testament writers were going out of their way to combat these anti-body doctrines of devils, that were handling the word of God deceitfully: “But have renounced the hidden things of dishonesty, not walking in craftiness, nor handling the word of God deceitfully; but by manifestation of the truth commending ourselves to every man’s conscience in the sight of God. But if our gospel be hid, it is hid to them that are lost: In whom the god of this world hath blinded the minds of them which believe not, lest the light of the glorious gospel of Christ, who is the image of God, should shine unto them.” (2 Cor.2-4).

As if knowing the tide of anti-body dogmas was turning into a tidal wave of controversy, the New Testament writers continued with many physical-Christ passages, such as Luke, who tells of Christ having his resurrected body felt by his disciples, so that they would know that he wasn’t just a spirit only, but had a body: “Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I myself: handle me, and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have” (Luke 24:39). As if influenced by the anti-body dogmas that help caused Christ to be put to death, when he claimed divinity, though looking like a man, some of Christ’s followers, who could have been so influenced & indoctrinated, doubted & couldn’t believe that Christ was actually resurrected, so Christ showed himself to give them proof & make them witnesses, for on several occasions, when he appeared, it was during, or near meal times, so he ate food to show he was physical, (Luke 24:41-43). Christ's ascension was also physical, & he promised that his return would be physical, the same Jesus as that had ascended, would be the same one, to some day return, (Luke 24:51). Thus, he would come back with his resurrected body, not one was gotten rid of, or an unidentifiable non-body immaterial 'god,' dispersed throughout the universe into a bodiless, shapeless, formless non human nothingness.

The different versions of the anti-body heretical dogmas, went up against all the Old Testament types, & the then current New Testament teachings being defended as fulfillment of those physical-god types all throughout the prophets of old. Thus, that "ascetic renunciation of the flesh and rejection of an anthropomorphic God developed concomitantly in Christianity; both represented a clear break with Old Testament religion and with the tenor of Christ's and the apostles' teachings on the Father and the Son, and on the body with its associated functions of marriage and reproduction. The higher the level of asceticism climbed, the greater rose the degree of the dematerialization of God."⁴¹⁴²

In addition to this, once Platonism took hold of Christianity, the bodily types in the Old Testament biblical passages, that refer to God's body, or bodily parts, were explicitly given figurative anti-body interpretations.⁴¹⁴³

Some scholars have noted the anti-body influences had some copyists of the early Christian scriptures thus making deliberate alterations into the texts so as to make deities fit into their incorporeal views of the times. Some were adding or deleted different aspects, thinking that they were 'correcting' beliefs. An example is 1 Timothy 3:16: "God was [made] manifest in the flesh." An 18th c., biblical scholar, Johann J. Wettstein, who studied the earliest texts, found that an original reading did not say God, but said Christ, "who was made manifest in the flesh." So which version is correct? The debate continues.⁴¹⁴⁴

In some cases, beliefs that God would descend down out of heaven, to become a 'god-man,' & even let himself suffer a physical death in a physical body. This was too much for many early Christians, many of the Jews, & even their critics, to believe that Deity would do. Especially, as many early Christians, some of the Jews, & others, were allowing themselves to be influenced by the anti-body philosophies of the Greeks. In the case with many of the early Christians, there were many who were in process of discarding the anthropomorphic (or physical aspects of Deity). Earlier, Christ & his apostles had established a more plain reading of the scriptural texts of the Old Testament writings available to them. Plus, as those meanings were also under going being restored by Christ & his apostles, to contain many prophecies about Christ's physical life, physical death & physical resurrection. Thus, the prophecies of the then Jewish collections, had many cases of a more literal language in their scriptures that they noted could be used by early Christians to point towards what Christ did in his physical body. These aspects that went against what had become their traditional methods of interpretations, & Christ's teachings about his & our 'Father in heaven,' as being the Father of our spirits, & in Christ case, his literal Father in the flesh, got them in trouble with the Jewish scribes & scholars, & early anti-Christians. For many of them had inherited traditional interpretational methods about the nature & descriptions of Deity. Ones that that made Deity into a non-physical or incorporeal, shapeless, formless being, that didn't have the physical forms of a man. To which interpretations they militantly held to & sought to enforce as much as possible, as being the true nature of Deity. These methods of traditional interpretations were militantly established over the centuries, & were hard to get rid of. Which might be why, when Christ & his apostles were no longer around, many early Christians fell back into, & began to re-interpret such scriptural descriptions as metaphorical (a figure of speech in which a word or phrase is applied to something to which it is not literally applicable). Plus, allegorical, (or words claimed that should be, or in some cases, can be interpreted to reveal a hidden meaning). Ones which they gave to the plain reading of scriptural texts, their own twists, that disembodied Deity from having physical human shapes, hands, feet, a mouth, head, eyes, arms, legs, etc. This may be also why scriptures were also tainted & reworded too. An example of many scriptures that prophesied of Christ, was Psalm 22:16, part which formerly read, "like a lion, my hand and my feet." The Dead Sea Scrolls words it, "they pierced my hands and my feet."⁴¹⁴⁵

Church historian, Adolph Harnack, writing about first century Christianity, admits that the earliest Christians believed God to be embodied: "God was naturally conceived and represented as corporeal by uncultured Christians, though not by these alone, as the later controversies prove (e.g., Orig. contra Melito, ass also Tertull. De anima). In the case of the cultured, the idea of a corporeality of God may be traced back to Stoic influences; in the case of the uncultured, popular ideas co-operated with the sayings of the Old Testament literally understood, and the impression of the Apocalyptic images." Further on Harnack concedes that in the second century, realistic eschatological, or the part of theology concerned with death, judgement, and destiny, these ideas continued to foster in wide circles "...the popular idea that God had a form and a kind of corporeal existence."⁴¹⁴⁶

Polycarp, (65–100–155), Apostolic Father, Bishop of Smyrna, (107– until martyred by a pagan mob, 155), he notes & wrote against the anti-body heresies that were infesting & developing in the early Church. In an Epistle to the Philippians: "For every one who shall not confess that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is antichrist; and whosoever shall not confess the testimony of the Cross is of the devil; and whosoever shall pervert the oracles of the Lord to his own lusts and say that there is neither resurrection nor judgment, that man is the firstborn of Satan. Wherefore let us forsake their vain doing and their false teaching and turn unto the word which was delivered unto us from the beginning."⁴¹⁴⁷

In later centuries of creedal debates & anti-body God themes, one of the reasons the later Christian church suppressed & withheld the scriptures from the general public was that the clergy must have known that the common folk, whom could read, would have found out these things: 1. Just how far away from the scriptures the non-scriptural pagan Emperor influenced creedal formulas about the Godhead, had gone away from the scriptures, to describe the nature of the Godhead. 2. How far away from no longer presenting Jesus Christ as having a physical body that he lived in when he was born & grew up to be a man, while also the literal Son of God. 3. How far from the scriptures & earliest Christian fathers, that testified of Christ's resurrected body, that his body was not just spirit only but was physical. How that he had a glorified perfected physical body, when he was resurrected & still has that body.⁴¹⁴⁸

During the Apostolic Fathers' times, there was no great amount of speculation, or large scale of arguments & polemics over what Christ was like, & what God the Father, in relation to the Son, was like. The polemical issues began to rise more & more during the early Christian apologetics' era, on down to the Trinitarian controversy, of pre & post Nicene Creed time, before & after 325 A.D. The issues over how to conceive God, either as a pure spirit, or in a manner more or less anthropomorphic (the ascription of human attributes), became one in many issues during the 2nd into the 4th century. Especially when & because the spiritual gifts were becoming less frequent, & with the loss of apostles, prophets, & their protective, doctrinal confirmations, clarifications, & decision making powers & authority to resolve issues, were taken away.⁴¹⁴⁹

About 2nd c., (before 185 C.E.), The Apocryphon of John, a Gnostic work, defined the highest Deity in abstract terms, which excluded anthropomorphism. It also maintained that evil powers had imprisoned spirits in material bodies, thus bodies were looked upon as worthless, as these anti-body doctrines infected other areas of Christendom.⁴¹⁵⁰

In early Christianity, the dominate views from the earliest time, up to about the mid 4th century, was pro-body. But then from about the mid to late 4th or 5th century, or so, onward, the anti-body views became more dominate in different areas, different Christians discouraged the beliefs in a physical resurrection & settled for a spiritual one. By the 1st on through the 3rd century, different early Christian sects doubted & outright rejected the physical human aspects of Christ's existence so much that they denied he was even real. They doubted his physical birth, physical body, physical death & suffering, physical resurrection & physical second coming. These types of controversial beliefs had become such a problem & issue in early Christianity that they were said to have caused those, who were pro-body, & who copied the scriptures, the scribes & copyists, who held the opposite views, to there after change, alter, omit, delete, corrupt, & incorporate different words into the texts of the different manuscript copies of the scriptures. Many passages of scriptures, that they thought, or that were being used by their anti-body rivals (to suggest Jesus wasn't real, didn't have a human body, didn't have real blood, or could suffer, etc.), were altered, changed, deleted, omitted, or reworded differently, some have argued, so that their rivals wouldn't have as many scriptural backing for their particular anti-body dogmas. While at the same time, many passages that they felt would enforce the physical aspects of Christ's manhood, but also his divinity, as the Son of God, or as a man-god, they added reinforcements, extra wording, & extra emphasis to support their pro-body dogmas. Such as that Christ was actually born through Mary, actually lived a human life, had a human body, real flesh, blood, bones, & yet was more than just a "mere man," but was the Son of God, a man-god.⁴¹⁵¹ If this thesis is correct, then this might be why the scriptures, (that were eventually decided upon, as to what went in different canons), contains so many physical aspects of Jesus Christ's life & body. At least, this seems to be the case amongst those who wrote against "heretics," & Gnostics, (who came up with their own "scriptures," & canon, questionable books or gospels, with an apostles' name on them).⁴¹⁵² For the anti-heretics, anti-Gnostics seem to have made there own collection of works that emphasizes Jesus Christ's physical man-godhood. Thus, as some argue, the making of the scriptures was influenced by the Christological controversy, during which the dominant anti-Heretics, to counter the Gnostics' & heretics' dogmas, came up with their own collection of works that testified & witnessed to the many different physical aspects of Christ's physical birth, physical life, physical suffering, real bleeding, & real fleshly death, & physical resurrection. Plus, all the physical ritualistic types: Sacrament, baptism, anointing, garments, hand clasping, etc. Plus, the later physical relics said to be physical reminders of Christ's physical suffering. Such as parts of the cross, a drop of milk from Mary's breast, an actual nail that was driven through Christ's physical hand or feet. The New Testament & the early to later Christian mysteries, liturgical rites, masses & symbols were, at first, constant reminders of the physical god-man, Jesus Christ, all collected together to combat the heretics, Gnostics, & different ones infesting Christianity with their anti-physical body dogma.⁴¹⁵³

A simple break down might go like this:

Anti-body believers: Jesus was born of Joseph, didn't preexist, was a mere man.

Pro-body believers: Jesus pre-existed, was born into the flesh through Mary, is the Son of God.

Anti-body: Christ wasn't real, only appeared to be, was a phantom.

Pro: Christ had real flesh, real blood, real sweat, tears, real body parts.

Anti: God couldn't have become a man because matter (the body) is evil.

Pro: Matter cannot be evil, since Jesus had a body.

Anti: Man couldn't have been created in God's image because God's image is not that of a man's.

Pro: Man was created in God's image, because God became a man, so that men & women can learn how to become gods or goddesses.

Anti: The resurrection was a spiritual one.

Pro: The resurrection was a physical one.

Anti: Christ's return will be spiritual, or the concept is metaphorical not literal.

Pro: Christ's return will be physical & real.

Anti: The rituals represent spiritual types.

Pro: The rituals, the sacrament (blood & flesh), baptism (buried with Christ, raised bodily in the resurrection, as a type of Christ's physical death & physical resurrection). The garment was a type of the spirit being clothed in a resurrected body, & a physical deification in that glorified body.

Anti: In deification, there will be no need of any physical bodies.

Pro: In deification, the spirit & body will remain together to live forever, for the physical body will be changed, glorified, & deified.⁴¹⁵⁴

EARLY ANTI-CHRISTIANS & NON-CHRISTIANS MADE FUN OF EARLY CHRISTIANS' CONTROVERSIES

As the Christological controversy went, a number of issues & questions arose amongst the different early Christian sects that became confusing, strange & caused more contentions & even heated debates & on going polemics. Even the early anti-Christians, like Celsus, writing against the early Christians about 170-80 A.D., noted the conflicts & disagreements & poked fun of them, saying that the early Christians couldn't make up their minds if there were 1 god, 3 gods, or many gods, & that they could become gods themselves.⁴¹⁵⁵ All along, the outsiders, or non-early Christians, pagans, Jews, Greeks, Romans, etc., upon hearing reports of schisms, polemics, & dogmatic contentions that were going on between different rival early Christian sects, often would turn such reports into points of discussions, jokes, theatrical comical themes for entertainment & vilification purposes.⁴¹⁵⁶ As during the time of Celsus, the different controversies continued to be points of polemics & early anti-Christian themes used to vilify the early to later Christians.

Arnobius, (260-330), wrote: "Do these [pagans], then, hear with offended ears, that Christ is worshiped, and that He is accepted by us and regarded as a divine person?" (ANF, 6:422). Critics, amongst the Pagans, continued on even down to the early 4th century, when the Trinitarian controversy divided different Christians communities that became aware of the issues. Early anti-Christians amongst the pagans, & other non-Christians, & the common folks, who'd heard rumors about the debates going on, were laughing at all the early Christians for their inner polemics. When reports of arguments between Alexander and Athanasius against Arius spread throughout Alexandria in Egypt, North Africa, during the 1st quarter of the 4th century, a lot of the common folks got caught up in the controversy. The workmen in the port, sailors, the idle common people in the streets, heard songs, written by Arius about what was going on. The "...pagan public, who, be it well understood, made use of the occasion to amuse themselves at the expense of the Christians and of their beliefs. The quarrels of Arius and of Alexander echoed in the theatres." ⁴¹⁵⁷ While Alexander and Arius, as they recruited bishops to support their rivalry against one another, "...the pagans were making fun of the "brethren," and "saints," and of the divided church." ⁴¹⁵⁸

But critics, pagans & the common folk weren't the only ones making fun of the controversy & the wording argued over for the Nicene Creed of 325: "With the exception of five bishops, Eusebius of Nicomedia, Theognis of Marmarica and Secundus of Ptolemais, who remained refractory to the end and openly made fun of the new term proposed, all the members of the council accepted the use of the word omoousios to express the fundamental relation of the Son to the Father..." ⁴¹⁵⁹

DIFFERENT EARLY CHRISTIAN BELIEF ABOUT GODHEAD

For some early Christian said the Father & Son, were only manifestations of one God, & the names given were for different roles assumed by the Father. Others, that Jesus only appeared human, but was divine, the one God. Others, that Jesus was not really the Son of God, but His (the Father's) Son by adoption only. Others, that the Father was God and Jesus was also divine, numerically distinct, for example: Dionysius of Alexandria (c. A.D. 264), acknowledged that Christ was the Son of God, & that this argued to the conclusion that Christ & his Father must be 2 separate persons: "Parents are absolutely distinguished from their children by the fact alone that they themselves are not their children." (ANF, 6:92). ⁴¹⁶⁰

For others, the "trinity" was not a trinity of persons, but only names. Father, Son, and Holy Ghost were only different names for the different manifestations of the one God, (this last part, such was the beliefs of Sabellius, Noetus, & Praxeas). About 200, Montanists call the Father, Son & Holy Ghost as God. ⁴¹⁶¹

CHRIST'S BODY GLORIFIED, IN THE RESURRECTION

Christ's body died, at which point his spirit went into the spirit world, (Mark 15:37, 44-7; Ephesians 4:7-10, 1 Peter 3:15-22, 4:5-6). Later, his spirit was reunited with his body that had been resurrected, (Matthew 12:39-40). When Mary went to touch Christ, Christ told her not to, for he had not gone to his, yours and my Father in heaven yet. Again this suggests that they were two separate divine beings. One on earth talking with Mary, the other in heaven. Christ's resurrected body was glorified too, (John 20:1-31; Luke 24:36-46; Acts 7:55-59; Acts 9:3-7, 22:9, & 26:13-15). Christ still has His glorified perfected body of spirit and resurrected flesh and bones. "Knowing that Christ being raised from the dead dieth no more; death hath no more dominion over him." (Romans 6:9; Luke 24:36-9). This "same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." (Acts 1:9-11). Christ ascended with a body, and if the same Jesus was to return some time in the future, he will still have a body. (Philippians 3:20-21). "Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection from the dead?" (1 Corinthians 15:12). Already, there were those who were preaching anti-body heresies that Christ's resurrection was not physical. Tertullian, 140-230, "He, therefore, will not be a Christian who shall deny this doctrine [of a bodily resurrection] which is confessed by Christians." (ANF, 3:547).

The meaning of one: If there is only one God, wouldn't all three have been born to Mary, and lived on this earth as they grew up in the body of a man called Jesus, and suffer in that body on the cross, and then eventually been resurrected in that body? (Zechariah 12:1, Job 32:8, John 4:24). If God is a spirit, and the Holy Ghost is a spirit, and Christ was a spirit before he was born on earth to Mary. How many spirits would we have been able to number if we would have been able to see them? Would there have been three spirits? Or just one only? If there is only one God in a literal way, would that mean that there would have been only one spirit? If three, would they have been separate spirits from each other? And if so would that mean that a separated spirit that gained a body, identified as Christ, was born to Mary, and not the other 2 spirits? If there was only one spirit, because there is only "one God," would that mean that all three in one were born in the body of Christ? Or all three in one where formed in Mary's womb? If not, how were they separated from each other? If so, in what ways were they separated? This, so that only Christ was in Mary's womb, & not God the Father, & not the Holy Ghost. Making it so that all 3 in 1 were not born into one human male body, that body that ended up being the baby Jesus!

Tertullian, 145-220, knew Christ had a physical body in heaven: "Jesus is still sitting there at the right hand of the Father,... flesh and blood, yet [his body is] purer than ours." (ANF, 3:584).

Origen, 184-254, though influenced by Greek anti-body philosophy, concedes that there is no incorporeal Deity passages in the Bible of his time, (the New Testament hadn't been compiled yet into any type of official canon). So what copies of New Testament type scriptures he had or knew about, he notes the controversy going on over John 4:24, ('God is spirit'). How that some understood & used it as suggesting that God is formless, while others argued that it was a passage against that proposition. How that spirit is translated to literally mean "air" or "breath," thus that implies, some argued, both a material & corporeal God, who has a pure body, but a body nonetheless. ⁴¹⁶²

During the earlier 3 centuries before the 4th century Trinitarian Controversy, the Christological Controversy raged on & continued on in later centuries along side & in some cases mixed in with the later Trinitarian Controversy. During those earlier centuries, different early Christian sects argued over if Christ had a real body, as they would later over if there was a physical-resurrection or a spiritual one only, such as during the 5th-6th centuries. In the earlier centuries, different Gnostic Christians argued that Christ didn't have a physical body, that God wouldn't take upon himself a human form. ⁴¹⁶³ Different ones like Ignatius (30-107 A.D.), to the Smyrnaeans: responded by testifying that Christ did have a real physical body: "For I know and believe that he was in the flesh even after the Resurrection. And when he came to those with Peter he said to them: "Take, handle me and see that I am not a phantom without a body." And they immediately touched him and believed, being mingled both with his flesh and spirit. Therefore, they despised even death, and were proved to be even above death. And after his resurrection, he ate and drank with them as a being of flesh, although he was united in spirit to the Father." ⁴¹⁶⁴

Ignatius to the Trallians, IX: "...Jesus Christ ... was of the family of David, and of Mary, who was truly born, both ate and drank, was truly persecuted under Pontius Pilate, was truly crucified and died in the sight of those in heaven and on earth and under the earth;... was also truly raised from the dead, when His Father raised Him up, as in the same manner His Father shall raise up in Jesus Christ us who believe in Him, without whom we have no future life." ⁴¹⁶⁵

Justin Martyr, (103–166), Dialogue with Trypho, (LXXX, LXXI, CXIII), testified that: “The Resurrection of the body is universally taught and defended against the pagans and Gnostics.” Also: “God, when he resuscitates our mortal bodies which preserved righteousness, will render them incorruptible and immortal.”⁴¹⁶⁶

THE INEVITABLE QUESTIONS, IF 3 IN 1: In much later centuries after the 325 AD Nicene Creed, the 3 in 1 god-makers that created the 3 in 1 concept of the Trinity-Godhead controversy, had also created other controversies, as the Christological Controversy also branched out from these earlier dogmas & issues amongst diverse early to later Christian sects. In these controversies, many questions were considered, as to how then, could this “one” God, have been born, if there is only one God in the 3 in 1 Trinity. These questions & controversies didn’t go away with the on going enforced dogmatic decrees, & canon laws argued out in church councils that all failed in their attempts to bring unity along dogmatic concepts throughout historic Christendom. Like during 15th century France & the Netherlands, when different ones brought up these types of logical reasoning about embryological speculations, & issues about the supernatural conception of Jesus. A controversy that attempted to deal with the beliefs of some, later put to art works, that somehow, not only was Christ in Mary’s womb, but all three members of the 3 in 1 Godhead were there too!

As it was, the Trinity 3 in 1 dogma had already been causing some strange, but interesting art works to be created by different post-Nicene Creed artists, after 325 A.D. They were faced with the challenges & difficulties of safely depicting a 3 in 1 Godhead, without getting in trouble with thought policing Trinity dogma death squads amongst heretic hunters.⁴¹⁶⁷ Thus, there are many depictions of the Trinity as three heads on one body, three faces on one head, but also of three separate males, some at different ages, others as three identical looking separate men, plus other symbolism that developed over the centuries.⁴¹⁶⁸

The Trinitarian controversy and the Christological controversy, & immaculate conception controversy, when mixed into superstitious minds of the later Great Apostasy, also caused some controversial depictions in other art works over how to depict the miraculous conception, if, that is, the Godhead was somehow 3 in 1, or only one God. For “...people used to keep statuettes of the Virgin, of which the body opened and showed the Trinity within. The inventory of the treasure of the dukes of Burgundy makes mention of one made of gold inlaid with gems, [Jean] Gerson [who wrote the treatise, Contra vanam curiositatem] saw one in the Carmelite monastery at Paris; he blames the brethren for it, not, however, because such a coarse picture of the miracle shocked him as irreverent, but because of the heresy of representing the Trinity as the fruit of Mary.”⁴¹⁶⁹ Thus, as different ones of that day attempted to wrap their minds around how the Trinity, if three in one, had Christ being born. They also must have reasoned that it must have been that the other members of the Godhead were also inside Mary’s womb! Such types of things are the products often made during times of apostasy!

When Christ says that he is the Son of God, is that symbolic or literal? If symbolic, why would he have a literal mother, but not a literal Father? The ancient prophets and apostles were given in the early church to helped the early saints to obtain a knowledge God and Christ. (According to the King James Version = KJV, Christ was a “perfect man” (Ephesians 4:10-14). When the spiritual gifts faded out of the church, apostate doctrines concerning the nature of God flooded in even more than before.

“In the most trying moment of his life we find him [Christ] praying: “Abba, Father, all things are possible unto thee; take this cup from me: nevertheless not what I will, but what thou wilt.” (Mark 14:36). We are left to ask, Does one address a bodiless and formless essence, an essence that transcends one’s understanding and experience, as “Abba, Father”? Does one plead with an essence, of which one is an inseparable part, to be excused from drinking the bitter cup? And how is it that the Son surrenders his will to the Father if there never was a difference between the will of the two?”⁴¹⁷⁰

These types of questions, obviously asked in earlier centuries too, spawn countless others, when we read the scriptures. But how much of the scriptures, if any, were available to the common folk? Was Christ praying to himself? Could the Father have forsaken Christ, so that he alone, not the 3 in 1 Godhead, have suffered on the cross? Where was the Holy Ghost too, when Christ seems to indicate the abandonment of the Father, (if they were all 3 in 1 in Christ’s body, then suffering? For to whom was Christ speaking to, if not his 3 in 1 self, when he said: “My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?” (Matthew 27:46).⁴¹⁷¹

Like in the case with the statuettes of the Virgin, of which the body opened and showed the Trinity within, that suggested all 3 in 1 members of the Godhead, were in Mary’s womb to be born. Were their similar statuettes that showed all 3 members of the 3 in 1 Godhead being crucified too? Was this how the Medieval Christian minds, in many areas, understood what happened during the birth, & later Crucifixion? Would that also mean that all 3 in 1 were also baptized by John? All 3 in 1 descended into hell, during Christ’s post-crucifixion descent? As it was, there were art works that show all 3 in 1 were involved as a 3 faced 1 body Godhead, during the creation of Adam & Eve! To what extend did the medieval mind allow for some separations in the Godhead, so that such questions could be answered logically? Was this why the scriptures were also suppressed in many areas? For upon reading the plain simple texts, many people would have had these types of questions.

Mark 13:32, indicates that the angels, & not even Jesus, knows the hour when Christ is to return, but only the Father knows. Thus, if they are the same essence, their knowledge must also be the same, for Christ couldn’t be unknowing of things his Father knows! Are there 2 separate wills, or just 1? If Christ’s will was not separated, he wouldn’t have had to have prayed to his Father, that His will, not his own, would be done. “I seek not my own will, but the will of the Father which hath sent me.” (Mark 14:36, John 5:30, 6:38). Sounds like Christ could have chosen differently, if he wanted to, having his “own will,” & so he asked others to also choose to follow the will of the Father too, (John 7:17, 8:28). As all of us are separate individuals with separate wills to freely choose, so also Christ is separate from his Father, & could have chosen to disobey, but didn’t. Thus, their “oneness” is how that they are one in purpose, one in their game plan, in that they work towards the same goals, the same desires to better the human family. (John 8:29). If the Godhead was the same essence, 3 in 1, or 1 in 3, wouldn’t their greatness also be the same? Where is the separation in them, so that Christ could say: “For my Father is greater than I” (John 14:28).

THE MEANING OF BECOMING “ONE”

The meaning of “one” presented in some passages might help us to understand what type of unity and one in purpose, that the God head enjoys. For some examples, the scriptures speak of a group of many members becoming “one” so that they all could work together as one team, rather than against each other because of contentions and disunity. Consequently, to illustrate this desired unity, oneness, & agreements, Christ & his prophets & apostles used ancient temple types, as seen in many scriptures & early Christian writings, where they prophetically warned of the challenges they would face, & were then facing about disunity! These temple types include such terms & phrases as: To keep the church together, as much as possible, for there were already problems of schisms, contentions, individual apostasies, wolves "scattering," the flock, (dividing up the church members). Plus, some were going off course through immoralities, sins & other issues that were causing members to fall away, or causing their house to fall, because they were no longer keeping Christ's sayings, (Matt. 7:24-29).

These types are how Christ & his prophets & apostles sought to hold-together the church. To have them hold-on, to not slip, or fall, but stay fitly joined together, with no divisions amongst them. They were thus not to be divided, but were to be knit together. Settled down, grounded, unmoveable, rooted, to cleave to that which is good. To reach out to clasp the saving hand of God, for he would help them to understand the mysteries, the doctrines, & give them wisdom, keep them safe from the false teachers, (wolves that sought to tear the flock to pieces, or scatter them).⁴¹⁷² Consequently these, unity or oneness, phrases about holding, sealing, cleaving, knitting, joining, fitly joint together, were reminders of their temple covenants that they were to keep & not stray away from. They were illustrated in building types that constructed the temple, or that made their holy temple garments. Other temple types used for illustrating the need for unity in the church were hands & feet. With the hands, they were to cleave, hold together, be joined together, & knit-together. With the feet, they need to stand in holy places & be not moved, walk the right-hand path, the right way, & not be moved, or taken out of the way, (the 2 ways, Matt. 7:12-14).

They were to be firm, steadfast & immovable, like the foundation stones, in a temple, that needed to be fitly joined together, to support the rest of the building-temple-church. This may be why we see hand symbols on pillars, hand clasping around pillars, for pillars held up, gave support, & helped hold together the buildings. Also, arms reaching out to bridge the gaps, to bring together, symbolizing the hope of peace & unity between families, as in weddings, (sometimes arranged families between two separate Christian kingdoms, as in later centuries. Plus, long arms over walls, or rivers to have hand clasps bridges passage ways, making it safer to cross over. These were temple types symbols for unity sought after, of bringing souls unto harmony, to agree in one.

Other temple types are in how, for example, Paul speaks symbolically of the "body" or church being made up of different members who have different gifts of the spirit, and different functions or tasks to perform in "the body" or Church. He then says that one part of the body shouldn't say to the other part that they are not needed. For they were all to work together as if one body or one Church instead of against each other. (Eph. 4:3-6, 11-16, 5:23-32. Acts 4:32; Rom. 15:5-7, 1 Cor. 12:12-31; 2 Cor. 3:17-18; Phil. 1:27, 3:20-1, John 17).

Symbols of unity, oneness, bringing two, or many separate things together to become symbolically one, were illustrated, by the Apostles & earliest Christian writers by physical examples. Building stones, representing different individual members, holding different positions in the church, were fitly joined together to become one building, or the church, sometimes also called an holy Temple in the Lord. These Temple types were called the mystery (Eph. 3:9, 5:32, 6:19, Col. 1:26, 2:2, 1 Cor. 14:2, 15:51, 1 Tim. 3:16), to counter the disunity of those who get unsettled, for they were to be grounded, settled, rooted & built upon Christ, stablished, fitly joined together, (all building terminology, Col. 1:23, 2:7, Eph. 2:21, 4:16). They were to not be taken out of the way (the 2-ways terminology), or torn away but were to be "knit together," (Col. 2:2, 19). For one of the things that was causing disunity was how that some were bringing in elements from the mystery religions, or were blending them in with the early Christian mysteries, for the mystery of iniquity already at work, during Christ's & the apostles' days, & Paul's & these mysteries were causing many not to be one with the body of the church, not one with Christ & Temple mysteries, (2 Thess. Chap. 2, note verse 7). This was one in many challenges that were causing disunity, there were false teachers blending the pagan mysteries of iniquity in, because some converts had come from these mystery religions, philosophical schools, & had pagan back grounds.⁴¹⁷³

Of interest here, for the early Christian mysteries have many examples of the types of "oneness" or unity sought after in the early church. Each member was expected to do good works, remained washed & clean, not be contentious, not prideful, not lustful, or blacken themselves with all kinds of sins, because they were each likened unto stones that were washed white. Thus, in order for the Temple building to not have a weak structure, or have a section different from the others, the stones must have the same color, white, the symbol of purity, for the black stones were cast aside, symbolic of negative traits that would weaken the Temple, if allowed in. However, if the black stones (members of the church), were to repent & be washed white, & remained clean, strong, & not out of line, but fitly joined together. The Temple "building fitly framed together growth unto an holy temple in the Lord: In whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit." (Eph. 2:22-23, Shepherd of Hermas, Sim. 9. Col. 1:18-23, 2:2, 7, 19, 3:8-15).⁴¹⁷⁴

Paul also sought to get the different converts from different backgrounds to become "one" in unity, & not let their differences split them apart into contending factions, within the early church, which had become an on going challenge. Thus, Paul's hope was to help the different types of converts to center their faith on Christ, & not so much good works and the performance of all the 613 precepts of the Jewish Law, that the Jewish-Christians had tried to maintain. There was a controversy over if the Jewish laws still needed to be practiced in the church, such as circumcision. This, & other issues were causing disunity, was upsetting their oneness. So Paul pointed out how: "The death of Christ had ended the epoch of the Law; now there should no more be Jews and Greek, slave and freeman, male and female, for "in union with Christ Jesus you are all one."⁴¹⁷⁵

This type of "oneness" was also to be carried over into marriage. Obviously a couple will not stay united for long, if always contending in endless arguments over different issues. Nor will a couple probably enter into the covenant of marriage, if they can't get along. So Paul uses this symbolism to liken marriage unto the unity, or the oneness that the church should also be like, rather than always contending over different issues, (Eph. 5:22-33, Phil. 1:27, 2:2). One of the many symbols of "oneness," or 2 becoming "one flesh," but not literally crammed into 1 body, is 2 hands becoming 1 hand clasp in marriage. Although I wonder, if this may have later taken on symbolism of the trinity, in post-Nicene Christendom, after 325? Such as when the Priests also clasps the joined right hands of the bride & groom. Is this to symbolize the trinity? Especially as later weddings were often done in the name of the trinity, like catechumens later were baptized, in some cases, by 3 immersions, in the name of the trinity, (Father, Son & Holy Spirit)? Whatever might be the case. Before this, the symbolism of 2 separate individuals, a male & female, with separate individual bodies, becoming "one-flesh," united in the mystery of the marriage covenant & vows, (some times depicted in art as right hands joined, while the left is raised to make an oath, or vow, the wedding vow). So it might have started out at first as being a symbol of 2 persons becoming symbolically 1, united in marriage, but not literally becoming 1 being! But then later, (& I'm not certain of this, & will have to do more research). It might have later morphed into adding symbols for the 3 in 1 trinity. Again, whatever might be the later cases. As it was, another symbol of the "oneness," for earlier marriages, is 2 separate rings, with a right hand on each one of them, that clasped together to become 1 hand clasping ring. Thus, Paul to the Ephesians: "For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall be joined unto his wife, and they two shall be one-flesh." Their unity, "oneness," was also symbolized later, on hundreds of Christian grave stones & funeral monuments, that show a suited right hand, (husband), & lacy right hand, (wife) clasping together. These symbolize them being reunited, or greeting each other in the after life, tokens, or symbols of their wedding vows & covenant of marriage. Thus, like the rings, the circle that has no end, symbols of enduring & eternal love, (Eph.5:31, Matt.19:6, Mark 10:7-9).⁴¹⁷⁶

The Old Testament shema: "Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord" (Deuteronomy 6:4), is used by some to support their claim that their Trinity is one being. With the correct translation the Elohim as plural, and one as meaning united, the shema could actually read: "Hear, O Israel, the Gods are united." "...The Hebrew one in Deuteronomy 6:4 is echad meaning united... In the same way 'man is become as one of us' (Genesis 3:22) does not make Adam one within the essence of God himself... One as used in the shema is not yahid which corresponds with the Latin unicus. Where the Bible uses the word one in reference to God and Christ, the oneness is nothing more than a compound unity. For example, one cluster of grapes (Numbers 13:23) does not make all grapes in a cluster one comprehensive grape- no more than one committee of persons make up one comprehensive person. Similarly, the Godhead, is composed of three separate beings who are united in purpose and glory."⁴¹⁷⁷ The Hebrew word Elohim, El is Hebrew for "God," while the addition of im makes it plural. Thus, in the words, "In the beginning God created" Could be understood as meaning "In the beginning, Gods created..."⁴¹⁷⁸

The Christian idea of universalism was not a new or even a biblical concept. The search for an ultimate "One" was present among the pre-Socratic Greek philosophers. Xenophanes [530 B.C.], for example, postulated that 'There is one god, among gods and men the greatest, not at all like mortals in body or in mind.' This early Greek philosopher went on to define divine nature, and thus became the first philosopher to point the way toward a universalism that would fully flourish later in Christianity. He was also one of the earliest anti-body writers, with his "attacks on anthropomorphism," dating back to the latter half of the 6th c., B.C. How that mankind had considered no shape better than human shapes, & this was then why "we think the gods are similar to men."⁴¹⁷⁹

Early Controversy over God Became a Man in Human Form, & God had a Son!: Before the anti-body, anti-physical dogmas, influences & later enforced "doctrines" turned the later Christians' versions of God the Father & his Son, Jesus Christ into an immaterial, unphysical, not in man's image 3 in 1 being, as the apostasy later would do, during the first four centuries, onwards. Before later Christian councils, without prophets & apostles, argued out unscriptural formulas, creeds, & decrees, that haggled back & forth as to the different "natures" of Christ, God the Father & the Holy Ghost, as to what type of a body, if any, or substance, they had or didn't have. Before later Christian artists depicted the Godhead as three heads on one body, or three faces on one head.⁴¹⁸⁰ Before the Christian churches, in many areas, gave into the polemical dogmas & schisms about the resurrection being a spiritual one, not a physical one.⁴¹⁸¹ The real physical aspects of Christ having a real physical body, & God the Father having also a body, (though glorified & perfected, according to some, while to others, like with Origen, God the Father was incorporeal, a spirit only, without a physical body).⁴¹⁸²

170-236, Hippolytus, interprets John 10:30: "Understand that He [Jesus] did not say 'I and the Father am one, but are one. For the word are is not said of one person, but it refers to two persons, and one power. He has Himself made this clear, when He spake to His Father concerning the disciples, 'The glory which Thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one.' . . . Are all one body in respect of substance, or is it that we become one in the power and disposition of unity of mind?" (ANF, 5:226, emphasis added).⁴¹⁸³

185-255, Origen, though Platonized & mixed up with other anti-body God issues, still explained: "We worship, therefore, the [incorporeal] Father of truth, and the Son, who is the truth; and these, while they are two, considered as persons or subsistences, are one in unity of thought in harmony and in identity of will." (ANF, 4:643-44).

GOD HAD SEX WITH MARY: To vilify Christ's birth, the critics would also charge that God had sex with Mary, because she must have been so beautiful. Second century critic, Celsus, wrote that Mary must have been a beautiful woman, for the Most High to want to have "intercourse" with her.⁴¹⁸⁴ Celsus, writing about 170-80 AD, must have noted the Christological controversy going on amongst the early Christians of his time, to then make jokes of their indecisions about how many gods there were, 1, 3, or many. Plus, to note Greek influences in other beliefs, but how that there were still many that had materialized one of their gods, such as the Father, into a god becoming man, that had, like other men, that male private part needed, in order for God the Father to literally father the body of Christ by having sex with Mary. For many early Christians getting away from earliest beliefs a physical deity, to an immaterial bodiless deity. Such charges must have been difficult to deal with, such as in the case with Origen, 185-254, who much later, had inherited a Hellenistic form of early Christianity that had him defending how that God the Father was incorporeal, without a physical body.⁴¹⁸⁵

"Was therefore the mother of Jesus beautiful, & was God connected with her on account of her beauty, though he is not adapted to be in love with a corruptible body? Or is it not absurd to suppose that God would be enamoured of a woman who was neither fortunate nor of royal extraction, nor even scarcely known to her neighbours; & who was also hated and ejected by the carpenter her husband, so as neither to be saved by her own credulity nor by divine power? These things, therefore, do not at all pertain to the kingdom of God."⁴¹⁸⁶

Thus, under this setting, Christ's humanity was challenged, rejected, argued over, metaphorically dismissed, phantomized as only appearing to be human. Plus, argued as not pre-existing, not being divine, only being a mere man, having 2 natures one divine, the other mere man, the divine separating from the human to let him suffer alone. Or that he was mere man & adopted as God's Son for exceptional good living. Or spiritually resurrected, not literally physical. And so forth to summarize a number of Christological views, & other controversies that effected the Godhead issues.⁴¹⁸⁷

JESUS CHRIST AS LITERAL SON OF GOD!: If God the Father, fathered Jesus, then that would make him the literal "Son of God." If so, then there were plenty of scriptural statements that challenged the encroachments of Philo's & other anti-anthropomorphic formulas. Such as: 'only begotten son,' & announcements, from the Father: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased" (Matt. 3:17). Plus, when Christ prayed: "Abba [literally, 'Daddy'], Father" (Mark 14:36). About 120 textual instances, Jesus uses no other name to address Deity but "Father." At the same time, the Father addresses Christ by not other appellation than "Son."⁴¹⁸⁸ Such passages challenged those who couldn't accept who Christ is, as Son of God. While they re-enforced the beliefs of those, who testified for Christ, as not being a mere man, but as the divine Son of God. "Christ declares himself to be the "Son of man," we are told, to emphasize his humanity, and calls himself the "Son of God" to emphasize his divinity."⁴¹⁸⁹

One of the main reasons why many of the Jews wanted Christ killed was because of how he claimed to be the Son of God! This was their accusation against Christ before Pilate, (Luke 23:1-5, John 19:12). They were expecting their Messiah, but not one claiming to be the Son of God, so they rejected Christ, who was both their Messiah, & the Son of God. They couldn't accept the repeated witnesses & testimonials, so they used them to accuse Christ of speaking blasphemy, who being a mere man, (so they thought), kept claiming divinity, kept doing things as if he was divinity. He further aggravated them by claiming godly aspects, telling them how that they would see him in glory, how that he did his miracles by divine powers, & that his Father was God the Father in heaven. Moreover, that he pre-existed with the Father, & that he could forgive sins, like a god. Plus, how that in being "a man" he was also a "godmaker," making others gods & goddesses, with physical bodies in the resurrection! To what extent did the Jewish leaders of Christ's time, spy out his teachings, know & understand them, kept track of his sayings, to then used them to reject Christ with? As it is, in the scriptures & early anti-Christian writings, we only have fragments of this going on, but enough to know these were some of the reasons, but there had to have been more that got have been lost over time.⁴¹⁹⁰

Thus, along with the polemical challenges to the physical human shaped aspects of Deity, there was another controversy over the identity of Christ's parentage. One that raged during the earliest days of Christianity, as many rejected Christ, for being so close to God as to testify that he was His Son. Thus, controversial theories arose, as to the birth of Christ. Who was his father, who was not? How was he born? Was he even born, or did he come down from heaven full grown? These were the types of issues, questions, plus more, that were parts of the Christological controversies of the earliest times, that grew during 2nd through the 5th centuries.⁴¹⁹¹ "For it is reported, that you [Jesus] cause the blind to see, the lame to walk.... All which when I heard, I was persuaded of one of these two, viz: either that you are God himself descended from heaven, who do these things, or the son of God". The Epistles of Jesus Christ and Abgarus King of Edessa 1:3-4.⁴¹⁹²

As Greek philosophy, splinter groups, Gnostics, & anti-Gnostics, early Christian Apologists, (also influenced by Greek philosophy), had all spoiled earliest Christian doctrines, taught by Christ & his apostles & prophets, concerning Jesus Christ's identity.⁴¹⁹³ Plus, spoiled the earliest Christian beliefs about what Christ, & the Father were like, the early to later Christians inherited the results of this & other controversies.⁴¹⁹⁴ (Christological issues like: Did he have a real body, real flesh, real blood? Was he a real man-god, or just a phantom, & only appeared to be a man? Having preexisted as a divine spirit, was he physically born the Son of God, or only adopted later, having been born a mere man to Joseph & Mary? Did he physically suffer, or only appeared to have? Did the divine part of him, Christ, separate from Jesus, so only the physical Jesus suffered, while the divine Christ didn't? Was he physically resurrected, or not?)⁴¹⁹⁵

As these Christological controversies had confused & distorted many things about what Jesus Christ & God the Father were like, & their relationships to each other. So also did the Trinitarian controversy add to the confusion, making a polemical mess for not only the clerics, the common early to later Christian members to try to sort through, but also the non-Christians, & early anti-Christians to try to sort through too. Even if such critics did try to make sense of the whole dogmatic messes created, to which they responded to, vilified, & made fun of. These combined controversies, when their aftermaths & effects later blended together, they confused many things about what Christ & the Father was believed to be like. Questions about: Did, or didn't they have any physical aspects? Or did they just consist of spiritual aspects only. Their physical or non-physical aspects were sometimes blended into one being, by different ones attempting to make either one physical God out of Christ & God the Father; or just one spiritual God out of the Father & Son. Or a combination of all three as one spiritual essence, Father, Son & Holy Ghost, one God only, in some kind of essence, or undivided substance. Not 3 Gods, but only 1 God. Thus, these types of dogmatic polemics over Christ & the Father became so distorted & confused, during & after the time Celsus wrote against the early Christians, about 170-80 A.D., that it was no wonder that Celsus, & non-Christians were laughing at the early Christians & the predicaments they had created for themselves. They made fun & noted the conflicting confusion of that time, & later, with the Christological controversy raging on. For earlier, as also during his time, or from the 2nd century into the 4th, the Christological controversy blended in with the Trinitarian controversy.⁴¹⁹⁶

One of the identifying marks of the Great Apostasy, was these declines from original teachings about Christ having a body, & the rituals that testified he did. How the ritualistic reminders were affected too, by the later anti-body dogmas: "Mosheim described this as the loss of the simplicity and beauty of true Christianity. These, he said, were "gradually effaced by the laborious efforts of human learning, and the dark subtleties of imaginary science.... [with] philosophy were imprudently incorporated into the Christian system." [Brought about by] "The eagerness of certain learned men to bring about a union between the doctrines of Christianity and the opinions of the philosophers.... [Consequently] genuine Christianity almost disappeared".⁴¹⁹⁷ Edwin Hatch, notes "it was impossible for Greeks, educated as they were with an education which penetrated their whole nature, to receive or retain Christianity in its primitive simplicity." Hatch also notes that Christianity was thus profoundly modified, & its doctrines changed into Greek theories, & usages, it no longer had retained its primitive form.⁴¹⁹⁸

WHO OR WHAT WAS IN MARY'S WOMB? CONTROVERSY

About 350 A.D., after the Nicene Creed of 325, the problems created by the Creed that confusingly made the 3 members of the Godhead into only 1 Godhead, or "one God." This had different ones like Athanasius only adding more conflicting elements to an already incomprehensible mess. As admitted by Athanasius, "these incomprehensible mysteries."⁴¹⁹⁹ Athanasius attempts to show in Orationis contra Arianos, "how the Father and the Son are one—not morally, but physically."⁴²⁰⁰ One physical God? Would that mean that God the Father had come down into the body Christ? This was the sort of thing suggested in Patrippassianism. (Patrippassianists, is the label for "one who believes the Father suffered." They are a form of "modalism," but some say "rarely are modalistic monarchians accused of saying that the Father actually suffered...")⁴²⁰¹ Thus, the claim of Patrippassianists, that: "The Father Himself came down into the Virgin, was Himself born of her, Himself suffered, indeed was Himself Jesus Christ."⁴²⁰² Thus, was Athanasius influenced by this Christological issue? Whatever might be the case, it's interesting to note how that these issues over who was born to Mary, how it happened. (Was it by miraculous conception? Or the normal method, sex? Sex between Mary & Joseph, as some early Christians Adoptionists believed, how that Christ was believed by them to have been born a “mere man,” not the Son of God, for he was only adopted later as such).⁴²⁰³ Or was Christ the actual Son of God in a literal way? These were still questions & issues that were being asked & their answers argued over as “resolutions” to them weren’t always agreed upon, as Christological issues came & went, if they even ever did go away. For we seem to see them still being blended in with these earlier controversies over preexistence, the incarnation of Christ, & other Christological issues, even during the times before, during & after the Trinitarian controversy.⁴²⁰⁴

The influence of these controversies, Greek Philosophy & the Council of Nicaea, to de-literalize the plain meaning of the scriptures, continued down through the centuries, to our day in time, thus we are now told: “The word Father as it refers to the God of heaven and the word Son as it refers to Christ are never, scholarly sources tell us, used in the New Testament so as to suggest that one is actually a father and the other actually a son.” And how is the reader to know this? Simply because it is the decision of Nicaea. But what of those who lived before Nicaea? What of Peter and the other disciples of Christ, what was their understanding? Christ never said that he begot himself, but consistently declared himself to be the Son of the Father, & that the Father was a man. He used the law of witnesses to show this in John 8:12-13, 16-18. “Your law requires the testimony of two men. I am one man and my Father is the other man, and thus my testimony is binding.”⁴²⁰⁵

One issue that got blended in with others, concerned how Mary could be the “mother of God.” If so, then how might this be if the Trinity issues were thrown into the mix? Would Mary be the mother of the 3 in 1 God, or one Godhead? If not, where is the separation in the Godhead so this wouldn’t happen? Different ones like Theodore of Mopsuestia, (died 328), got caught up in opposing a controversy that could have later been mixed up in the 3 in 1 God—Trinity issues, (if, that is the Trinitarian issues made their way into his area of Christendom). The issue: Was Mary the “mother of God,” or not? If God was to be understood as being only 1 God that had “Three Persons,” how would that translate into art works? If God was to be understood as being 3 manifestations (Father, Son, Holy Spirit), of the 1 God, how would that translate into depictions of that 1 God in art? If God was 3 persons, but each 1 was not the other, in the 3 in 1 Godhead Trinity, how would that look? Moreover, how did each of these versions of “God” come into existence when Christ was born to Mary? Especially if Mary was the “mother of God.” Was she the Mother of Jesus only, but not the other members of the Godhead? Or were they, as later controversies suggest, all born in her, to make her the mother of the 1 God? During the 4th century, as pagans were converting to the church in great numbers, many in name only, still holding on to their paganism, & for many only seemed interested in taking advantage of the benefits given to Christianity, only after it had become the State Religion, after the Edict of Milan, (313), by Constantine & Licinius.⁴²⁰⁶ Thus, as half-converted pagans joined, they still kept their pagan beliefs & blended them in with 4th century Christian dogmas. The devotion they paid to Diana of the Ephesians was transferred to Mary. Mary was to them, the theotokos—the mother of God. In the Christological controversy, this unscriptural term had theological consequences that might have been some of the factors that influenced later art works concerning Mary & the trinity, in which the trinity is depicted in Mary’s womb. Theodore argued that Mary was the mother of Christ, not the mother of God. Theodore was born at Antioch & led an ascetic monastic life, & a disciple of Diodorus. He served as a priest in the church at Antioch until he became bishop of Mopsuestia in Cilicia. His doctrines were not condemned until after his death in 328. He argued that Mary gave birth to Jesus, but not to the Logos (Word). (Hinting to possible preexistence themes, or not?) He argued that the Logos had always been, he is without beginning, although he had dwelt in a particular manner in Jesus. (Separationist concept? The divine Christ came down into the human Jesus?) Mary is the Mother of Christ, but not God. Because God was in Christ, figuratively one might thus call her the mother of God. (Blending in some Separationist concepts?) She gave birth to a man, to whom the Logos had begun to unite himself, but it was such an incomplete union that he can’t be called the Son of God, at least until his baptism (sounds like Adoptionistic concepts were thrown into the mix). In another passage, it’s nonsensical to say that God was born of a virgin, for it wasn’t God, but indeed the temple in which God lived, who was born of Mary. Temple meaning body? (The divine Christ came into the temple, or human body of Jesus?)⁴²⁰⁷

428, Nestorius, priest of the cathedral of Antioch, studied under Theodore of Mopsuestia, & was made bishop of Constantinople. He insisted on the distinction of 2 complete natures, human & divine, in Jesus Christ, & objected to the term “mother of God.” His confidential secretary, a priest, Anastasius, suggested that the faithful should cease calling Mary mother of God, for she was creature, and God can’t be born of a creature. Nestorius agreed.⁴²⁰⁸

Before, & during the middle ages, with some aspects of the pre-existence themes in trouble, so also were the Family in heaven themes that went along with them. Questioning the plain meaning of scriptures, which might not have been widely available yet. (What did the hand-written copies also contain? Or left out?) Weren’t there were many references as to the Fatherhood of God? If many knew of them, how did they react to them? As we trace these theological thoughts & developments of other controversies that blurred many basic concepts, the Fatherhood of God theme gradually vanished, in many areas, because pre-existence themes of His loving Divine Parenting also were vanishing away, in many areas too. God the Father was used by many ecclesiastical teachers as a sort of boogie man, the object of abject dread. ‘Better be good, do what your religious leaders tell you, for He sees all you do, & will punish you in the fires of hell, if you don’t accept what we teach.’ Must have been the types of fear tactics some clergy & teachers could have used. Thus, because many were apprehensive about God’s Fatherhood, & substituted other conceptions for it. As they did, they must have questioned many basic scriptural themes: God being a literal Father? Father of what? Father of whom? Why was he called Father? Was He a real He? Can God actually have a Son? These must have been the types of questions that were being asked as the understanding of the pre-existence, family in heaven & on earth, these types of themes, began to fade under the pressures of other controversies about the Godhead. Along with pre-existence themes being challenged, by the Godhead controversy, so also were challenged right along side, were deification themes being challenged too: Christ’s Son-ship was not only challenged by the Jews, but also because, as part of that pre-existent theme, he also included a deification theme, by, according to the Jews, “being a man,” was making himself “God.” Christ defends both these concepts when he cited Psa.82:6, (in John 10:34, see also 8:14-19, 29-42, 52-59, 10:15-39): “The Savior was merely reaffirming a gospel teaching that all men [& women] were children of God and thus might become like him. Paul understood this principle, for when speaking to the men of Athens, he said, “Certainly also of your own poets have said, For we are also his offspring” (Acts 17:28).”⁴²⁰⁹ Paul to the Romans: “The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God: and if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ.” (Romans 8:16-17). John also blends the 2 themes, for those that overcome the temptations of the world, & remain clean, or repent & are washed clean, shall “inherit all things,” and God will be our God, & we shall be his sons, & daughters, (Rev. 1:5, 3:3-5, 21, 21:1-7).

As the gospel was being spread, many rejected & mocked these themes, because they went up against & got in the way of the Godhead controversy that was becoming more popular, with anti-Body Greek though influenced early Christians. Thus, from the earliest times in the church, the Fatherhood of God was being challenged, as were references that suggested a real close Father & Son relationship between Christ & the Father. Moreover: "God, who is the hope of men in the Old Testament and their Father in the New, was removed by the thought of men, in the darker times and moods of the Middle Ages, to an infinite distance, while the saints and the officers of the Church filled the foreground of His court, and discharged, by delegation, His functions for Him...." ⁴²¹⁰

These controversy over Mary, where some claimed her to be the "mother of God," seems to also show up in much later centuries, like during the 15th century, in France. But the spin offs from these earlier dogmas & controversies produced stranger controversies. One that concerned attempting to illustrate the beliefs that if the trinity is only one God, then all "Three Persons" must have been in Mary's womb to be born, like in the case with art works statuettes of the Virgin, of which her body opens and shows the Trinity within, thus the later "heresy of representing the Trinity as the fruit of Mary." ⁴²¹¹ Logically, as earlier, if Mary was "the mother of God," & there was only "one God," though somehow also 3 in 1, then this may be how artists & clergy might have tried to illustrate this in art, as strange as it may seem. Thus, if that were true, it would make Mary not only the mother of Jesus, but also of the Father & Holy Ghost! How then could Jesus be the "Son" of God, if he was one amongst triplets, that included the Father as one of them? We might see how the reasoning could have caused further problems at that time, as others could have asked: How could the Father & Holy Ghost not have also become a man in Christ, if there was only "one God" formed into the baby Jesus in Mary's womb, when there were reports of only one child born, not triplets?! During the Middle Ages, as Mary is deified in thought, concepts, & art, Joseph, her earthly husband gets characterized as more and more as a conical caricature, drudging away at hard, menial dull work, reducing him to lesser status, by far, than Mary. The ancient anti-Christian rumors from Jewish sources about the alleged infidelity of Mary, must have also been passed down to bother later Christians, in that different ones questioned how Joseph could have entered wedlock with Mary, when she was pregnant. "The union of Joseph and Mary always remained the object of a deplorable curiosity, in which profane speculation mingled with sincere piety. The Chevalier de la Tour Landry, a man of prosaic mind, explains it to himself in the following manner: 'God wished that she should marry that saintly man Joseph, who was old and upright, for God wished to be born in wedlock, to comply with the current legal requirements, to avoid gossip.'" ⁴²¹²

As it was anciently, however, these primitive antagonists didn't have to use all these rumors about the manner of Christ's birth to vilify him, for they only needed to mock Christ's physical body. This, in talking to, or writing to those non-Christians, many of whom had been steeped in anti-body indoctrinations, in their thinking, because of the Greek Philosophies & other anti-body world views that prevailed in many areas where Christianity was spreading to. ⁴²¹³ Remember, Paul had to gather all kinds of logic, witness statements, & ritualistic baptismal types of the resurrection, to testify that Christ's resurrection was real & a physical one. Apparently, there were those in the church at Corinth, who were saying that the resurrection wasn't real & physical, so he wrote them, & testified that it was real! (1 Corinthians, chapter 15).

Also, in the world views & thinking of many to whom the antagonists wrote &, spoke to, the physical body was worthless, less than dung, & the spirit was trapped in the flesh. Which may be why Celsus vilified the resurrection by making it sound like rotten dead bodies would rise from the dead, & why he called the doctrine, the hope of worms. ⁴²¹⁴ Another aspect that was vilified & which appealed to the intentions of the critics' use of these anti-body views of the non-Christians, ⁴²¹⁵ (& perhaps, heretical Gnostic Christian sects), was the use of the earliest doctrine that Christ was the literal Son of a literal Father in heaven. That would mean what some thought was the unthinkable & impossible! For God the Father to be Christ's literal Father, so that Christ could be born into a physical body, & grew in Mary's womb, that meant some kind of actual physical-relation, that went on between Mary & God the Father!

Before pre-existence themes faded off into legends in later Christendom, one aspect of it was that the human family's spirits within our physical bodies, are actual spirit children of God, children from heavenly Divine Parents. However, as the literal Fatherhood of God the Father got philosophized & interpreted figuratively, & changed over the centuries, so also did pre-existence themes about the family in heaven get legendized, lost in later Christian mythologies. ⁴²¹⁶

We might also wonder if the ancient critics of primitive Christianity suspected that early Christians, motivated by whatever reasons, some, perhaps embarrassed, (as critics said they were with other doctrines), ⁴²¹⁷ by such humanity in the divines, in describing what happened in the case with how Christ was born, thus sought to take the sexuality out of the whole situation by claiming & promoting the miraculous virgin birth story! Thus, Christ's birth was brought about through other miraculous means, rather than through sex. But, because virgin-births of gods were common elements of the ancient mythologies, throughout pre-Christian history, critics would charge that the whole story was thus borrowed from pre-Christian time myths & virgin birth stories of ancient heroes & gods. ⁴²¹⁸ But the early Christians had an answer for that one too. Justin Martyr, second century, responded by saying the reason why there were parallel stories was because the demons had counterfeited what they heard the true prophets in other nations had foretold of Christ's birth.

Justin Martyr, A.D. 110-165: "And these things were said both among the Greeks & among all nations where they [the demons] heard the prophets foretelling that Christ would specially be believed in; but that in hearing what was said by the prophets they did not accurately understand it, but imitated what was said of our Christ, like men who are in error, we will make plain." Justin then gives some examples of the things that were counterfeited by the demons, such as some of the predictions of the virgin birth, the scriptures, baptism, the sacrament or "Eucharist," the mysteries or ordinances, etc. ⁴²¹⁹

But as to the literalness of Christ being the "Son of God," wasn't this belief supported by the scriptures? After all, didn't Christ & his followers testify that Christ was the Son of God? ⁴²²⁰ To counter these claims were many Jews who couldn't accept that Christ, who grew up in their midst, & whose family, they knew, could be divine. For to them he was just "a man," looked like "a man," & even died like other men. Thus, there was just no way that he could then be the literal Son of God, & it had troubled them that Christ himself called God the Father, his Abba-Father, (John 10:15-20, 29-39, 17:5-26, 20:17). ⁴²²¹ Thus, to counter the stories about Christ being the literal Son of God, some of the anti-Christians amongst the Jews claimed to have found a document that challenged the story about Christ's birth. Of this, Celsus cites this claim, that a Roman soldier named Panthera, was Christ's father. Now even if such claims were considered fabrications, ⁴²²² that didn't matter to the critics, for they'd use the story, false gossip or not, anyway, as with anything else they could come up with, in order to vilify Christ, & the early Christians. Thus, the gossip spread about how the family was ashamed by this adulterous & or immoral act, & they tried to suppress the story.⁴²²³ So this even made those anti-body vilification views, even worse! For the early Christians' claims that their god was born into a body, was bad enough, but to have been born through adulterous & immoral physical sex acts, these were charges that only fueled & added to all the other gossip & rumors that were used to justify discriminating, rejecting, & the persecutions against the early Christians, that also caused many to suffer all kinds of different torturous martyrdoms.⁴²²⁴ For didn't they also call each other brothers & sisters? Didn't they also meet in secret to take part in orgies, eating babies, drink blood as part of their secret ritualistic cannibalistic meals, as they swore secret conspiratorial oaths?⁴²²⁵ Wild stories & vilification rumors spread against them.

As it was, different antagonists like Celsus, asked: Why would Christ need to come down from heaven, after making the heavens, to work with wood? To live out a miserable life in the body of an ordinary looking man? To have to walk about as men do? Was it to see what was happening amongst the people here? Celsus, mocked Christ's eating habits, the fact that Christ would even need nourishments. Why would the body of "a god" need such things? He asked.⁴²²⁶ Every human aspect of Christ's humanity came into question, by those who couldn't or wouldn't accept the fact that Christ, the Son of God, was a god, who took on human form. A god who got tired & needed to sleep, as in the case when he was on a boat & a storm arose, which he calmed, after being awakened. The fact that he thirsts, like when he was on the cross. The fact that he had a body that bled & had hands and feet that could be have nails driven through them. The fact that he had been born, grew up as a child, became a young boy, to grow up on through the teenage years to manhood. His appearance was that of a normal looking man without the glory & light that would shine forth brighter than the sun after his resurrected body arose from the grave. Before these glorious manifestations, while he was in that mortal body as the Son of God, this was one of the reasons why he was rejected by many of the Jews & others who looked upon Christ as just a man, whom they charged made himself into God, (John 10:27-39). The anti-body, non-physical resurrection controversy continued, after Christ's resurrection, as such things were argued over between early Christians, & Gnostic Christian sects. Many questions arose in those early times about if the resurrection, were just ghost stories. Or just visions, manifestations, symbolical metaphorical lessons to be learned by those claiming to "see" the risen-Christ. Was he a spirit only? A glorious bright being? A phantom appearing in different guises, or as a glorified resurrected personage in the form of his physical body, recognizable.⁴²²⁷

Christ's physical resurrection was even hard for many of his apostles to accept, until Christ appeared & showed them his body & had them feel his hands, side & feet. Thus, hand clasping symbols developed as part of Christ's post-resurrection world wide treks. For, these symbols were parts of the mysteries, later to become ritualized in baptism, liturgical & mass ceremonies. In that real hand & wrist grasping thus done, made those who took part in this type of Christ's resurrection to become witnesses for Christ's death, descent into the spirit prison, hell, hades, limbo, purgatory, & his resurrection, or the Anastasis, the lifting up, by hand & wrist grasp, out of the grave.⁴²²⁸ The critics also used fragments of sayings & beliefs taken out of context, & thus they could have added to these anti-body dogmas, "the claims that the sacred marriage between Christ the bridegroom and the Virgin..."⁴²²⁹ What? Not only did the Christ have a body, but he wed a woman for her body?

They might have asked. However, the part that was left out, and that you wouldn't know under the critics' tactics, unless you checked their sources, is how this is all symbolic, for the Virgin represents the Church. Many depictions of Christian marriages often symbolically depicted a pregnant Virgin, with a large round belly, going through the hand⁴²³⁰ and wrist gripping⁴²³¹ matrimonial ceremonies, to a man who some might say, in some cases, looks like Christ, but who perhaps may be Joseph.⁴²³² Christ is likened in types, as to a lamb, & the marriage of the Lamb,⁴²³³ symbolic of Christ, inasmuch as he is the "sacrificial Lamb of God," the prophesied Messiah.⁴²³⁴ The physical body of God the Father, & Christ's own body, is also seen in the different hand & wrist grasp. The fact that God the Father would even be depicted with a hand to grasp, or that Christ would have a hand to grasp also. Was to anti-body thinkers, un-thinkable!⁴²³⁵ But, that is what we see in the different depictions of John's Apocalypse, which include the war in heaven, and the marriage of the Lamb (Revelation 7:9, 13—15; 12:5; 13:8; 18:23; 21:9).⁴²³⁶ In later centuries, the physical aspects of Christ & the Godhead, continued to become one of the main controversies that continued to cause problems in Christendom.

ANTI-BODY DOCTRINE OF THE GREEKS & THE CHURCH DOCTORS

How did later traditional Christianity come to the idea that somehow Jesus' bodily identity was dissolved into spirit essence? And accept the idea that though three personages comprise the Godhead, they are one immaterial spirit? Or that God the Father was not a physical being, but spirit only? Or that Christ was first a pre-mortal spirit before his incarnation, but then, in some later views, he wasn't, for there is "no pre-existence"? But to make it more confusing, some would suggest that it was the Son who appeared to the prophets of old in human form? While others, who accepted the pre-existence of Christ, said it was the spirit of the Lord Jesus that appeared? But then, God the Father does not have a human form? Nevertheless, the body of man was created in the physical image of God? But then, later, these types of passages are to be understood as "figurative," not literal! With these types of conflicting views going around in those early centuries, it was no wonder that the non-Christians were often said to be laughing at the early to later Christians who didn't seem to be able to make up their minds about what to believe about God, & about how many there was! Or if there was just one, or three in the one god, they also said were some how separated, so that the Father & Holy Ghost would not be also incarnated with the Son at his birth to Mary! For as much later Christians would illustrate in symbolism: For the Father is not the Son, the Son is not the Father, & the Holy Ghost is not the Father & Son, & the Son is not the Holy Ghost, or is not the Father, but they are somehow one God, or somehow three in one? Or if there were three, separate beings in the one God, but who were spiritual, rather than physical? But the one God, in three persons, was somehow consisting of two spiritual beings, with one third, the Son, the only one to be incarnated? But to later go through a spiritual-resurrection, rather than a physical one, because, as some argued, bodies would no longer be of use in eternity? So, although there are three, they are somehow one, because you can't have three gods? But then, there are two Gods, no mention of the Holy Ghost yet? But then again, there are three separate Gods? These were the types of confusions & dogmas that the non-Christians had to try to sift through, as Christendom aged & battled it out amongst the different sects, each calling the other "heretical," "apostate," & "weak." Or that their rivals were "ignorant," and, or "unlearned," because they were not trained in the schools of the time, & thus didn't know any better than the learned doctors who were thus more equipped to come up with better interpretations of scriptures, allegorically, now that the prophets & apostles were no longer heard of. Thus, the conflicting bewildering controversies raged on & continued to splinter Christians into different sects, as early to later Christians were being tossed to & fro by every wind of doctrine, over what God the Father was said to be like, in relation to Jesus, his Son, & what the Holy Ghost was believed to be like, in relation to being part of the “Godhead,” (Eph. 4:10–14).⁴²³⁷ 205–270, a man named Plotinus, went to Alexandria & studied philosophy under Ammonius Saccas, together they forged Neo-Platonism, derived from Greek philosopher, Plato’s ideologies. At Rome, Plotinus attracted a number of students, & of these, Porphyry edited & collected his teachings in Enneads, (or “nines” the book’s groupings in nines), which became an important text disseminated to the rising generations of followers throughout the Western European, Byzantine, & Islamic civilizations.⁴²³⁸ What were the influences that Neo-Platonism, like Platonism, or also Hellenization, or Greek philosophy have on Christendom during the first five or so centuries, then later during the Renaissance? To what extent did those influences reach? What is certain is that this is one example in many that shows us what happens when cultural contaminations start to mold & change pure doctrines into fables. Also, here we see what happened to later Christian doctrines, when Prophets & Apostles weren’t alive to continue countering the predicted contaminations, & the spoiling of pure doctrines that they all predicted would come about, when false teachers from within & cultural influences from without, plus civil political pressures & persecutions challenge the growth & spread of early to later Christianity. How many out side influences were introduced to taint, corrupt, change, cause some beliefs to be abandoned, & in other cases, slightly alter the pure & true doctrines in to counterfeit versions of “truths.” When also many uninspired man-made philosophies, were mingled with the teachings of Christ, & his prophets, & apostles, during & after their lives. The blends so tainted their pure doctrines with inadequate language & incomprehensible nonsense, that it became real confusing, for new converts, & outsiders to know what to think about what Christ was like, & what God the Father was like. A case in point of the garbled nonsense that uninspired men come up with is a description of all existence is to be rooted in the One, as philosophized by Plotinus: “We see here an anticipation of the later, creedal attempts to describe God through an always inadequate language. As Plotinus writes, “the One is all things and not a single one of them: it is the principle of all things, not all things.... It is because there is nothing in it that all things come from it: in order that being may exist, the One is not being, but the generator of being.... The One, perfect because it seeks nothing, has nothing, and needs nothing, overflows, as it were, and its superabundance makes something other than itself.”⁴²³⁹ Yeah, um, that totally makes sense!? Not! However, what it does sound like is the types of incomprehensible explanations that have come out of attempting to describe the “one God” in post 325, Nicene Creed eras.

When the early Apostles took the gospel into a Greco-Roman world some converts were still being influenced by Neoplatonism—a philosophy derived from Plato’s teachings, one of which held the idea that matter is essentially evil. As Neo-Platonism also influenced different Gnostic Christian sects’ versions of the pre-existence, for there arose such garbled versions, as noted earlier, that their rivals, the Church Fathers who wrote against them, started distancing themselves from their own versions of the pre-existence. In later centuries, pre-existence themes of the church continued to suffer abandonments, as the Christological controversy over the nature of Christ, & the Godhead raged on. Plus, when different formulas were argued over, when some tried to take the polytheistic sounding themes, (that of the beliefs in three Gods), out of Christians’ versions of a Godhead that consisted of three separate Gods that were somehow only One God. Thus, when they tried to make their beliefs to sound more monotheistic, the belief in only One God, it may be that also certain aspects in their pre-existence themes had to be dropped too. Such as ones held earlier, about a pre-existent council of Gods, of other divine beings in existence besides God the Father. For if he, before the creation of the earth, was in a pre-existent council, with other gods, he being the Most High God. How could that belief be allowed to continue on in the church in light of the new dogmatic & polemical debates, that claimed there was only “One God”? It was reasoned then, that those gods weren’t gods at all, but only his angels.⁴²⁴⁰ Thus, some aspects of the pre-existence, the council in heaven, could still be retained & believed in. Plus, depicted in art works, & later bible illustrations. But in time, such beliefs, & the Gnostic versions of them, & the neo-platonic blends in them, that had been argued against, helped to cause the rejection & later abandonment of almost all pre-existence themes in the church. Or change them so that they didn’t conflict with the later creedal formulas that developed. The pre-existence theme about a pre-existing council of gods amongst the Most High God, wasn’t the only doctrine that suffered from Neo-Platonism & other cultural contaminations, to thus become unpopular. For it seems that other doctrines, besides the pre-existence, also suffered alterations, merges, contaminations, abandonments and got philosophized into confusing & man-made dogmas.

Even down to the time of the official objection of the Pre-existence by Emperor Justinian’s Anathema Against Origen, at the Council of Constantinople, 553. Preexistence themes still remained visible in different areas of Christendom, for there was just too many art works, manuscripts, copies of scriptures and other evidences by that time. However, as noted elsewhere, the pre-existence wasn’t on its own, for as with other doctrines, they all had connections with each other: “Such knowledge [Pre-existence] is inseparable with the understanding that God is a personal being. [While in contrast] A God who is a spirit essence can hardly be the Father of spirit children in any but the most mystical of senses. Thus when the one doctrine is lost, the other will be lost also. In its place came the notion that each individual spirit was created from nothing at or about the time of the creation of the physical body of the infant in its mothers’ womb.”⁴²⁴¹

For if the church was to settle the issues about if there were many gods, three gods, or only One God, other doctrines themes, besides a council of gods, had to be changed, & that was Christ’s descent from the pre-existence into an actual physical body, or not. Would the one God actually need a physical body, or only need to appear to take up one? Thus, the Christological controversy influenced many other beliefs, such as the doctrine of a physical birth for Jesus & a physical resurrection, & a physical deification, as to if Christ’s body was actually resurrected, & if bodies would be dispensed with, not needed in the eternities to come, after the physical resurrection. Or if there was even a physical resurrection at all, because it was spiritual only?

“As Christianity spread, the incarnation became increasingly difficult, for the claim that God is incarnate made no sense to any of those out-side Christianity. For most Greeks, what was most real was what was intelligible. They believed that they body got in the way of intellecting the intelligible; for Greeks, however one was to understand salvation, it was a matter of turning from the sensible world to the intelligible, and the body, being part of the sensible world, made that turn more difficult, if not impossible.” The Jewish intellectuals were influenced by the Greeks, & for them to note the central tenet of early Christianity, that God had come to earth in a human body, one that could suffer, died, & was resurrected. Such things were considered by them as sheer foolishness. Those early Christians who were called heretics by other sects, & also broadly Gnostics, tried to weaken the belief in Christ's embodiment. Some argued that he did not really have a body but only seemed to have one.⁴²⁴² But so were the basic concepts with early critics too.

"By the second century, 'Christian' writers had begun a restatement of their faith, drawing largely upon Greek thought. This was declared to be orthodoxy.... They sought to defend the faith on philosophical grounds so they could prove it worthy of the attention of pagan intellectuals. Thus philosophy became the disinfectant used to rid Christianity of the anthropomorphic notion that God resembled man and to disallow a literal reading of the many passages of scripture that described personal encounters with Him.... Thus reason supplanted revelation, scholars replaced prophets, a formless and incomprehensible God deposed the God who created Adam and Eve in his image and likeness, and loyalty to creeds became the measure of faith in preference to holiness."⁴²⁴³

When Greek philosophy clouded the minds of second century Christians' versions of what God the Father was said to be like, & when the Father became "the One," or the one Supreme Being of the philosophers,⁴²⁴⁴ it became unacceptable to ascribe any physical characteristic to the Father. However, in the second century, when the God of the philosophers was first being adopted, this was not always the necessarily the case with all early Christians, for some accepted Biblical anthropomorphism, didn't interpret the biblical passages figuratively, but ascribed the physical aspects to the Son only. Thus, the on going anthropomorphism dogma became one in many schisms to be argued over. The physical aspects of God, or the non physical aspects, another on going issue.

Justin Martyr, 110-165, interprets the prophets of old, when they wrote about God appearing to them, such as to Abraham, to Moses, & to Noah, "...you must not imagine that the unbegotten God Himself came down or went up from any place. For the ineffable Father and Lord of all neither has come to any place, nor walks, nor sleeps, nor rises up, but remains in His own place, wherever that is, quick to behold and quick to hear, having neither eyes nor ears, but being of indescribable might; and He sees all things, and knows all things, and none of us escapes His observation; and He is not moved or confined to a spot in the whole world, for He existed before the world was made."⁴²⁴⁵

Another paradox in ancient Christian history is how some of the Jews must have believed that God the Father had a body. While others, who saw Christ, looking like a man, talking, walking, & even smelling like a man, with perhaps even bad breath, & body sweat, (Luke 22:44). In thus being eye witnesses to having seen, up close, the Son of God amongst them in the flesh, they couldn't believe it! Even after all the miracles he did right in front of them, they couldn't believe him, being a "man," could also be "god" or "the Son of God." For many were upset with Christ to the point of wanting to stone him, because he, "being a man," made himself "God," & said, "I am the Son of God?" (John 10:29-38). While others, perhaps not of this particular group, believed God-the-Father had human form. At least, this is what later, Justin Martyr, suggests. For, ironically he disagreed with those different group of Jews, who might have disagreed, & might have not wanted Jesus stoned, because, after all, God the Father had human form, so what was the fuss all about if Christ had a human form too. At least, this is what Justin to Trypho the Jew, notes: "And again, when He says, 'I shall behold the heavens, the works of Thy fingers,' unless I understand His method of using words, I shall not understand intelligently, but just as your teachers suppose, fancying that the Father of all, the unbegotten God, has hands and feet, and fingers, and a soul, like a composite being, and they for this reason teach that it was the Father Himself who appeared to Abraham and to Jacob."⁴²⁴⁶ Thus, did Justin disagree with that group of Jews, & earlier Christians that looked upon the Father as having human form of which man's image was created in? Now, while we're trying to unravel that paradox, keep in mind that Justin did acknowledge that the part in Genesis 1:26, about "Let Us make man in our image, and after our likeness" was that man was made in the image of God, that was of flesh. (On the Resurrection, 7, (ANF 1:297). But then, in Dialogue with Trypho, 113, (ANF 1:255), to clarify, he qualified who that God-man image was, that man was created in. For it wasn't the Father, but rather it was Jesus. For Jesus had appeared to Moses, Abraham and all the other patriarchs, ministering the will of the Father. Moreover, that it was this same Jesus that was also born-man, by the Virgin Mary.⁴²⁴⁷

Justin also acknowledged that Jesus was the begotten Son of God, and "that which is begotten [Christ] is numerically distinct from that [the Father] which begets." (ANF, 1:264). So, the Father is without form, unbegotten, but begets a physical Son? Justin notes Christ's pre-existence, & that he appeared to the prophets of old, such as Moses, Abraham & Jacob, & was called different titles, & is called such names as an Angel because "...He came to men (for by Him the commands of the Father have been proclaimed to men); is called Glory, because He appears in a vision sometimes that cannot be borne; is called a Man, and a human being, because He appears arrayed in such forms as the Father pleases; and they call Him the Word, because He carries tidings from the Father to men: but maintain that this power is indivisible and inseparable from the Father, just as they say that the light of the sun on earth is indivisible and inseparable from the sun in the heavens..." Justin seems to struggle with how an unbegotten, begetter, the formless, bodiless Father-God, is yet, "...numerically distinct, I have discussed briefly in what has gone before; when I asserted that this power was begotten from the Father, by His power and will, but not by abscission, as if the essence of the Father were divided; as all other things partitioned and divided are not the same after as before they were divided: and, for the sake of example, I took the case of fires kindled from a fire, which we see to be distinct from it..." Yet, Justin continued with examples of their distinctions, numerically separate to make 2, one in heaven, the Father, & another on earth, who descended from the Father. He used as an example the creation story, the "Us" in Genesis 3:22, to indicate more than just one there, but numerically a distinction of there being at least 2. He notes that the "sophists" try to make it metaphorical, but the words don't admit a figurative meaning. Proverbs 8:22, is used to point out Christ's [as Wisdom] pre-existed before the world was created. "You perceive, my hearers, if you bestow attention, that the Scripture has declared that this Offspring was begotten by the Father before all things created; and that that which is begotten is numerically distinct from that which begets, any one will admit." (ANF, 1:264, Dialogue With Trypho, chaps. cxxviii-cxxix). It is as if Justin's schooling in Greek philosophy, seems to leak through into his defense & answers to the Jews.

Athenagoras, a 2nd c., Apologist, defended early Christianity against the early anti-Christian charge of atheism: "I have sufficiently demonstrated that they are not atheists who believe in One who is unbegotten, eternal, unseen, impassible, incomprehensible and uncontained: comprehended by mind and reason only, invested with ineffable light and beauty and spirit and power, by whom the universe is brought into being and set in order and held firm, through the agency of his own Logos."⁴²⁴⁸ Tainted by anti-body Greek influences, Athenagoras was alone in this type of defense against early critics.

Theophilus, 2nd century bishop of Antioch, when challenged to describe the form of the Christian God, used the typical Greek philosophical terms, to claim that God is incomprehensible, inconceivable, and incomparable. He goes on further, that if he speaks of God as light, (he mentions His handiwork). Reason, (government), spirit, (breath), wisdom,

(offspring), strength, (might), providence (goodness), & kingdom (glory).⁴²⁴⁹

These types of responses by Theophilus & Athenagoras, & others, are examples, in many, of how such anti-body Christological controversial issues were tainting & fading out the earlier descriptions of God as having a human shape image. Such contaminations from Greek philosophy also affected other beliefs, such as Christ's world wide trek themes. For as the physical aspects of God faded out, the questions as to how Christ manifested himself to others, also were tainted & legendized. Thus, the answer as to how God manifests himself to the human family, became this: Any way he chooses, anyway he deems appropriate, for in having all power, Jesus became the temporary mode of the one God. His manifesting himself in a corporeal, or physical body, is not to be taken as evidence that he has form or substance, for he is also Fire, Wind, & Mind. We might see from this type of ill-reasoning, how that other legendized guises could have developed in Christ's world wide trek themes. How that later traditions said how Christ was disguised or manifested himself, during his world wide wanderings, as a leper, man of sorrows, pilgrim, male or female child. Plus, as a beggar, hermit, or in other later traditional temporary guises, such as in the shape of an old woman. Or as a young female blond Christkindl, & as a blond angelic winged female fairy type traveler, & gift giver of much later German, & American Christmas lore & art works.⁴²⁵⁰

In the Clementine Homilies, said to be based on a 2nd century source, a Jewish Christian document, the early anthropomorphic belief is considered: "And Simon said: 'I should like to know, Peter, if you really believe that the shape of man has been moulded after the shape of God.'" And Peter said: "I am really quite certain, Simon, that this is the case... It is the shape of the just God."⁴²⁵¹ Obviously, the ancient records show the concerns many had about what God was said to be like. Was he in spirit form, spiritual energy, spiritual light of some kind, did he have a human type body shape, was his spirit clothed in flesh like in appearance of a man, if in bodily form, was he then limited in being able to see, be in other places, or just confined to one place & a time? How can man, if even possible, see or know God? Was it through the 5 senses, or some other way? Or was most of the human family confined to only knowing about what God was like through "witness" statements only? Could the truth about God only be figured out through philosophy? These must have been the types of questions being asked by the ancients, as they still are today, & the Clementine Homilies, if accurate, is a good example of such questions going around in the blend of non-Christian, Jewish, Greek, Roman, & Pagan societies, during the early centuries of Christendom. Thus, one answer in many was: "For He has shape, and He has every limb primarily and solely for beauty's sake, and not for use. For He has not eyes that He may see with them; for He sees on every side, since He is incomparably more brilliant in His body than the visual spirit which is in us, and He is more splendid than everything so that in comparison with Him the light of the sun may be reckoned as darkness. Nor has He ears that He may hear; for He hears, perceives, moves, energizes, acts on every side. But He has the most beautiful shape on account of man, that the pure in heart, may be able to see Him, that they may rejoice because they suffered. For He moulded man in His own shape as in the grandest steal, in order that he may be the ruler and lord of all, and that all may be subject to him." In answer to problems raised anciently by John 1:18: "No man hath seen God at any time..."⁴²⁵² Peter, in the Clementine Homilies, answers: "For I maintain that the eyes of mortals cannot see the incorporeal from of the Father or Son, because it is illuminated by exceeding great light. . . . For he who sees God cannot live. For the excess of light dissolves the flesh of him who sees; unless by the secret power of God the flesh he changed into the nature of light, so that it can see light...." Clementine Homilies, 17:16, (ANF 8:322-23). Is there a contradiction in Peter answers in having spoken of God having the shape of a man, but then of "the incorporeal form of the Father or Son..."? How accurate are the Homilies in reflecting what Peter is reported to have said, who can say for sure? We know from other writings, that some of the early Christian fathers, like Origen, Ignatius, & others, read differently from translations in Greek & Latin, depending on who translated them, & their political-dogmatic motives for adding, altering, or taking out phrases from not only scriptures, but from the writings of the Fathers, to try to get the writings to fit with the dogmas of the times.⁴²⁵³

The theory & dogma that God is incorporeal, without a material body, or human emotions, immovable, indivisible, immaterial, & not confined to a human body. This view began to be adopted into early Christian thought about the late 2nd century. Irenaeus, 130-200, Clement of Alexandria, 150-215, (time frames given by some), & Novatian, (250 ca.). They were amongst the early fathers who believed in a God who is simple and not compounded, uniform & wholly alike in himself. Being wholly mind & spirit, with hearing, sight, & light, the source of all good things. This concept is said to be derived from, or influenced by the Greek philosopher, Xenophanes of Colophon, 570-475, B.C., but are contrary to the doctrines and teachings presented in the scriptures of the times. Clement of Alexandria, wrote of what he understood God to be like, how that no parts are to be predicated of Him. For the One is indivisible, infinite, without dimensions, not limited, & without form. Irenaeus, in response to heretics, understood God as an uncompounded Being, without diverse members, wholly understanding, wholly spirit, thought, intelligence, reason, hearing, seeing, light, & the source of all good, etc.⁴²⁵⁴

The early anti-Christian Celsus, (writing about 170-80), also used the platonic doctrine in his attacks against early Christianity, claiming that matter is evil. Celsus mocked the doctrine of the resurrection, with the help of some of the views of his time, which is that the body is full of "corruption" & is like "dung." And so he asked why the early Christians' god could have ever wanted to have obtained a body? Why would he want to return to it again after death, and rise in it again? For this was contrary to all reason, says Celsus. He also knew that during his time the controversy over the nature of the Godhead, was visible amongst the different conflicting sects of Christianity. During his time and during the time of Origen's work against, & in response to Celsus, the controversy had not reached its peak, as it would during the 4th century A.D., or about (325 A.D.), during the Nicene Creed era.⁴²⁵⁵

The elements of the controversy were on the rise in Origen's day, & even earlier. Celsus noted the early Christians' beliefs in a trinity of gods, and asked is not even this central doctrine of theirs' a gross misinterpretation of certain things Plato says in his letters? 'All things,' writes the philosopher, 'are centered on the King of All; and the All is for his sake, and he is the cause of all that is good. The secondary things are centered in the Second, & the third things are centered in the Third.' Celsus also mocked the early Christians' beliefs that Jesus had a body. And yet as different early fathers and defenders of the faith had pointed out, such beliefs, were not uncommon amongst the Greeks, & the other pagan nations. So why should the Christians be charged with believing in strange or untrue doctrines, just because they believed that the "man" Jesus was a God? Celsus noted that the early Christians say that God has hands, a mouth, & a voice; they are always proclaiming that "God said this" or "God spoke." "The heavens declare the work of his hands," they say. (Psalms 18.2; Isaiah 4.20). Origen argues that Christians are not anthropomorphic in their understanding of the Old Testament, but rather interpret such passages allegorically, (Celsus 6. 62).

Celsus argued that such a God is no god at all, for God has neither hands, mouth, nor voice, nor any characteristics of which we know. And they say that God made man in his own image, failing to realize that God is not at all like a man, nor vice versa; God resembles no form known to us but is without shape or color. Celsus also rejected the idea that God took shape and form in the flesh of Christ, and to think that God had a body in which he walk around in while in the garden of Eden was absurd to Celsus. Also, how they speak of him being angry, jealous, moved to repentance, sorry, sleepy, in short, as being in every respect more a man than a God.⁴²⁵⁶ From this we might suppose that Celsus, & other early critics, might have even made fun & blasphemously laughed amongst themselves about Christ growing up like other human babies. Having to have his cloth diaper changed, & having to learn basic skills, like other human babies have to: Learning to move their arms & legs, to learn to get them to help them roll over, then crawl, stand up, walk, & later run. Then to also develop different hand motor-skills, such as grasping things, holding on to things. Thus, critics must have poked fun how Christ had to learn the same types of basic baby skills, like other human babies, (Luke 2:52).

Anselm, Prior of Bec (1063–78), responded to later anti-Christian polemics of his time, ones that seemed to be old criticisms, like those of Celsus, but still in use during those later centuries by Jewish writers: “The unbelievers [wrote Anselm] deride our simplicity, saying that we injure and insult God in asserting that He entered a mother’s womb, was born of a woman, nourished with her milk and other human food, and—not to mention many other things which seem inconsistent with God’s nature—suffered weariness, hunger, thirst, blows, crucifixion and death among robbers.”⁴²⁵⁷

Celsus could have also used “their own scriptures,” like he often boasts he does, when he vilified “their beliefs” by referencing their “own books.”⁴²⁵⁸ Thus, if he had an extensive collection to go by, or only portions, he could have also heard things from listening to the early Christians themselves, & asked them questions. If he, like the Jews, had copies of the Old Testament, he, like perhaps other critics, could have included in oral quotes from early Christians, such passages as Deut. 33:27, the arms of God. Gen. 6:8, the eyes of the Lord. Exod. 6:6, God’s outstretched arm. 2 Kings 19:16, the ear & eyes of the Lord. The early Christians, like Origen, who were falling for the immaterial version of God, & had a hard time defending a corporeal Jesus. Origen having been Platonized into accepting the incorporealism side of the controversy going on in Christendom of his time, contradicts himself at times, in his response to Celsus, who made fun of earlier Christian beliefs that the God of the universe would come down from heaven, to just one corner of the earth, to work with wood, in the human body of Jesus.⁴²⁵⁹

Celsus: “The [2nd century, if not earlier] Christians say that God has hands, a mouth, and a voice; they are always proclaiming that “God said this” or “God spoke.” “The heavens declare the work of his hands,” they say. I can only comment that such a God is no god at all, for God has neither hands, mouth, nor voice, nor any characteristics of which we know. And they say that God made man in his own image, failing to realize that God is not at all like a man, nor vice versa; God resembles no form known to us. They say that God has form, namely the form of the Logos, who became flesh in Jesus Christ. But we know that God is without shape, without color. They say that God moved above the waters he created—but we know that it is contrary to the nature of God to move. Their absurd doctrines even contain reference to God walking about in the garden he created for man; and they speak of him being angry, jealous, moved to repentance, sorry, sleepy—in short, as being in every aspect more man than a God. They have not read Plato, who teaches us in the Republic that God (the Good) does not even participate in being.”⁴²⁶⁰

Origen must have struggled within himself after he noted the conflicts & difficulties in dealing with the rejections of Celsus, about the earlier Christians’ beliefs, about “God” having a body, Celsus having written against the early Christians, about 170–180 A.D., & Origen responding much later, during the third century. “From the criticism of Celsus, we know that the Christians of his day still espoused a God who was both corporeal and personal. This may well have been the case with the ordinary Christians for at least the first three centuries of the current era.”⁴²⁶¹ But in addition to these views, Celsus, writing when he did, was in the middle of the Christological Controversy too, so he notes this view, plus how the Christians couldn’t make up their minds about God, if there were 1, 3, or many gods, plus perhaps, what types of gods were their gods.⁴²⁶² As for Origen, he was in his own dilemma, for should he, as an early Christian apologist & scholar, use the earliest Christian beliefs that disagreed with his later Platonized Christian incorporealism? Or should he agree with Celsus, that such beliefs in a corporeal Divine Being, as held by earlier Christians, were silly? As it turned out, some of the contradictions in his defense of his version of third century Christianity of his time, were to try to make it sound like such opinions, if Celsus heard them, must have been from those who are very simple and ignorant of the meaning of the Scriptures. (ANF 4:621, Against Celsus, 7:27).

Origen, while condemning as heretical, the old corporealism held by earlier to later Christians, he tried to discredit the earlier literal interpretative methods that made God sound like he did have human form, by calling such “opinions” as “those who are very simple and ignorant of the meaning of Scripture...” For Origen interpret such like passages listed earlier, as figurative, like many Christian do today. During those early centuries, this became the standard method of getting around scriptures that sounded too corporeal for deities, & that was to come up with allegorical interpretations. Thus, they reasoned that the scriptures about God having wings are figurative, so the ones about Him having body parts must also be figurative too, (wings: Ruth 2:12, Psalms 17:8, 36:7, 57:1, 63:7, 91:4, Malachi 4:2, etc). The earliest apologist, Aristides, rebuked the Greeks for allegorically interpreting their legends, reasoning that their gods must therefore be in names only, rather than for real. But what had been condemned earlier, became the standard methods later. For Paul had prophetically warned about: “Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of man, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ” (Colossians 2:8, Aristides, Apology 13, (ANF 10:275, see also Clement’s brother, Niceta in Clementine Recognitions, 10:35, ANF 8:201–202). Consequently, the allegorical methods became the standard method for later Christians trained in the Greek philosophical schools, in dealing with passages on God’s physical form.⁴²⁶³ However, how they got around Christ descending from heaven to live in human form, as the Son of God, was to try to suggest that it was only a temporary manifestation.⁴²⁶⁴ Despite this, Origen still at least defends Christ’s coming down from heaven to one corner of the earth, & his post-resurrection world wide trek, as physical events, in the case with Jesus.⁴²⁶⁵ But, certainly the learned Melito could not be classed amongst the simpletons Origen referred to in Against Celsus, for Gennadius classed Melito as having written a large number of theological books, such as On the Corporeality of God, & how Melito was even considered “a prophet by many of us.” Gennadius.⁴²⁶⁶ Origen’s attempts to figuratively reinterpret the passages about the corporeal deity to fit his later Platonized Christian version, was one of the things he continued to struggle with: “We shall inquire, however, whether the thing which Greek philosopher call asomaton, or “incorporeal,” is found in holy Scripture under another name. For it is also to be a subject of investigation how God himself is to be understood—whether as corporeal, and formed according to some shape, or of a different nature from bodies—a point which is not clearly indicated in our teaching, and the same inquiries have to be made regarding Christ and the Holy Spirit.”⁴²⁶⁷ But then, confusingly for us, Origen tried to suggest that John 1:18, 4:24, Col. 1:15, do argued for an incorporeal God, (ANF, 4:621, Against Celsus, book 7, chap. 17). So it seems to have been a mental struggle to have some passages say what he liked, because they seemed to fit in with his schooling, but then have to reinterpret figuratively passages that testified of God physical aspects. So why weren’t the scriptures he used in support of his incorporeal beliefs, to actually be interpreted as figurative, & the physical ones not? (Luke 24:39, 42, John 14:9, Heb. 1:3). Hadn’t these points been clearer in earliest Christianity? But by Origen’s day, had become obscure, & tainted because of how copies of the scriptures had been tainted, changed, altered, had words deleted, or were re-worded according to those seeking to manufacture scriptural support according to their polemical different sides of different issues of the earlier & on going Christological issues, thus make him contradict himself? attributed to why Origen could admit & complain, that in the teachings of the Church, it was not clear whether God had a corporeal body, or not?⁴²⁶⁸

Why does Origen, seemingly contradict himself? Or did those who translated him, & who even say why they were tampering with his writings, because of Christological issues, thus make him contradict himself?⁴²⁶⁹ Or did Origen, like others, change his mind from time to time? Whatever might be the case we see a conflict of interest going on, as Origen, perhaps because of his training in Greek thought, struggles attempting to deal with answering Celsus & his mocking earlier Christian body-God themes.

With Celsus having somehow gotten hold of earlier Christian books, scriptures, (perhaps confiscated ones?), or those shown him by church leaders, had he presented himself as an honest investigator. But what other sources might he have used, & from which early Christian sects? Origen suggests that he used, in part, some of the teachings of the heretic Marcion, who didn’t make his appearance at Rome before 142 A.D. So some time after that, Celsus somehow came across verbal or written doctrines of Marcion, to then make issues of, when he wrote against all early Christians as a whole. Plus, he used the writings of Marcellians (followers of the Carpocratian Marcellina, a sect founded after 155, under Bishop Anicetus). So the exact time for Celsus research & writing could be about 170-80 A.D., & he must have done his research about 168 or later, to then write Λόγος ἀληθῆς, or A True Discourse. Some suggest Celsus was writing it, during about the time of Roman Emperor, Marcus Aurelius, (161-180 A.D.) During which time, the beliefs of the earlier Christians & their rival heretical sects, were similar but different by the time of later earlier Christians, during Origen’s time, 185-255. There could have been some retrogressions further away from more of the original early Christian teachings over about 70-85 year period of time, depending on when Origen started responding to Celsus, over a period of time to complete 8 books in the latest period of his life. (ANF, 4:231). So to what sects’ beliefs did Celsus attack? To what beliefs did Origen defend, the beliefs of the earlier Christians before his time? Or the beliefs of his own, during his time? Or was it a mixture of both, so long as those earlier beliefs went along with his own? Whatever might be the case, as it was, Celsus is reported to have argued against earlier Christian beliefs, (before Origen’s time), that they believed that God possessed a body like a man. To this, Origen responded that such beliefs were not to be ascribed to Christians. However, weren’t they ascribed to earliest Christians? (ANF, 4:241, 261-2, 277, 284).

Origen: “After this Celsus relates at length opinions which he ascribes to us, but which we do not hold, regarding the Divine Being, to the effect that “he is corporeal in his nature, and possesses a body like a man.” As he undertakes to refute opinions which are none of ours, it would be needless to give either the opinions themselves or their refutation. Indeed, if we did hold those views of God which he ascribes to us, and which he opposes, we would be bound to quote his words, to adduce our own arguments, and to refute his. But if he brings forward opinions which he has either heard from no one, or if it be assumed that he has heard them, it must have been from those who are very simple and ignorant of the meaning of Scripture, then we need not undertake so superfluous a task as that of refuting them. For the Scriptures plainly speak of God as of a being without body. Hence it is said, “No man hath seen God at any time;” [John 1:18] “and the First-born of all creation is called “the image of the invisible God,” [Col. 1:15] which is the same as if it were said that He is incorporeal. However, we have already said something on the nature of God while examining into the meaning of the words, “God is a Spirit, and they who worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth.” [John 4:24], (ANF, 4:621, Origen Against Celsus, book 7, chap. 17). So was this the later Christian beliefs of Origen’s time? Beliefs, that were ignoring all of the physical aspects of God, as defended by earliest Christians, rejected by their critics, like Celsus, but also rejected by later Christians? Such as when they incorporated an anti-body God dogma, for the Father, & wrestled with how Christ had a body, one like that of a man!

For Origen also admits how stunned & amazed that they were that the Word (Jesus Christ) of the Father, should have become confined within that man! The sorrows & alarms of the Apostolic Fathers were the conflicting beliefs concerning the anti-body resurrection, & anti-body birth of Christ. How that these beliefs had crept into the early church. To where they, the Apostolic Fathers, then had to testify over & over again, that Christ had a real body, that the resurrection was physical. How that these dilemmas were followed by the perplexities of the doctors, most of which were ardent Hellenists or Neoplatonists. Moreover, how that there was no place in such schools of thought for a God who contaminates himself by contact with the physical, or limits himself by taking the form of a man in a fleshly body. “We are stunned with the greatest amazement,” wrote Origen,... “that this the most eminent of all natures, putting off its state of majesty, should become a man. . . . It is utterly beyond human comprehension that the Word of the Father... should be thought of as confined within that man who appeared in Judea. But that the Wisdom of God should have entered the womb of a woman, and been born a baby, and cried and wailed just like other crying babies, and then suffered death and said that his soul was sorrowful unto death, and been led off to the most undignified of all deaths ... seeing such things the human intellect is stopped in its tracks, so stunned with amazement that it knows not where to turn.... It is far beyond our powers to explain. I suppose it even goes beyond the capacity of the holy Apostles; nay, it is quite possible that the explanation fo this sacrament is beyond the powers of all the celestial beings.” Not only does Origen not know what to think about the Lord’s physical presence on earth; he does not even know what to believe about it, and in his explanations is careful to specify that he is presenting only his “suspicions rather than any manifest affirmations.” And so he speculates on the resurrection of the flesh: only the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost can live without bodies, he tells us, “because it is right and proper to think of the Trinity alone as existing incorporeally.” But then he considers that if one thing can live without a body, others can too, and if others, why not all? “That being the case, bodies will be dispensed with in eternity, there being no need for them.... To be subject to Christ is to be subject to God, and to be subject to God is to have no need of a body.”⁴²⁷⁰

The confinement that a body was suppose to be upon Christ, when he was in his body on earth, was said by Origen to be only a temporary situation: “He Himself [the Savior] is everywhere, and passes swiftly through all things; nor are we any longer to understand Him as existing in those narrow limits in which He was once confined for our sakes, meaning, not in that circumscribed body that He occupied on earth, when dwelling among men, according to which He might be considered as enclosed in some one place.” (ANF, 4:299).⁴²⁷¹ Would Origen have rejected, reworded, interpreted figuratively, Rom.6:9, James 2:26, for death is the spirit separated from the body, for “the body without the spirit is dead,” but Christ “dieth no more,” so why would he be separated again, or as Origen said, have no need of a body? For Christ showed himself alive after his passion by many infallible proofs, being seen of his apostles 40 days, (Acts 1:3).

When we read De Principiis, or 1st Principles, as translated from Greek into Latin, by Rufinus, after he returned to Italy in 397 A.D., & was asked by his friend Macarius to do so. We are reminded by different historians that we should note the time of this translation was post-Nicene Creed times, after 325 A.D. Plus, that even the translator from Greek, (which copies are said to no longer exist), but those into Latin, do. That Rufinus, the earliest translator, admits to letting the dogmas of the Trinity taint his translation: “...If, therefore, we have found anywhere in his writings, any statement opposed to that view, which elsewhere in his works he had himself piously laid down regarding the Trinity, we have either omitted it, as being corrupt, and not the composition of Origen, or we have brought it forward, agreeably to the rule which we frequently find affirmed by himself.... [He further admits] we have, in order that the passage might be clearer, added what we had read more fully stated on the same subject in his other works, keeping explanation in view, but adding nothing of our own, but simply restoring to him what was his, although occurring in other portions of his writings.” (ANF, 4:237-38). Other also note that, “...we see that Rufinus was justly chargeable with altering many of Origen's expressions, in order to bring his doctrine on certain points more into harmony with the orthodox views of the time.” (ANF, 4:231, Introductory Note, 4).⁴²⁷²

Keep this in mind as we consider more of what Origen is claimed to have written about his anti-body opinions, concerning “the Trinity,” how that “...the Greeks call such ἄσωματον, i.e., “incorporeal,” while holy Scripture declares it to be “invisible,” for Paul calls Christ the “image of the invisible God,” and says again, that by Christ were created all things visible and invisible.” And by this it is declared that there are, among created things, certain “substances” that are, according to their peculiar nature, invisible. But although these are not themselves “corporeal,” they nevertheless make use of bodies, while they are themselves better than any bodily substances. But that “substance” of the Trinity which is the beginning and cause of all things, “from which are all things, and through which are all things, and in which are all things,” cannot be believed to be either a body or in a body, but is altogether incorporeal.... [Further on] Seeing God the Father is invisible and inseparable from the Son, the Son is not generated from Him by “prolation,” as some suppose. For if the Son be a “prolation” of the Father (the term “prolation” being used to signify such a generation as that of animals or men usually is), then, of necessity, both He who “prolated” and He who was “prolated” are corporeal. For we do not say, as the heretics suppose, that some part of the substance of God was converted into the Son, or that the Son was procreated by the Father out of things non-existent, i.e., beyond His own substance, so that there once was a time when He did not exist ; but, putting away all corporeal conceptions, we say that the Word and Wisdom was begotten out of the invisible and incorporeal without any corporeal feeling, as if it were an act of the will proceeding from the understanding. Nor, seeing He is called the Son of (His) love, will it appear absurd if in this way He be called the Son of (His) will.... [Further on] For it is the Trinity alone which exceeds the comprehension not only of temporal but even of eternal intelligence; while other things which are not included in it are to be measured by times and ages. This Son of God, then, in respect of the Word being God, which was in the beginning with God, no one will logically suppose to be contained in any place; nor yet in respect of His being... [Wisdom, Truth, Life, Righteousness, Sanctification, or Redemption] for all these properties do not require space to be able to act or to operate... the Word and Wisdom itself appeared to be contained in a place,... [Or in Paul, John, Peter, Michael, Gabriel, & in each of the saints, in those in heaven & on earth?] ... And from this it is distinctly shown that the divinity of the Son of God was not shut up in some place; otherwise it would have been in it only, and not in another. But since, in conformity with the majesty of its incorporeal nature, it is confined to no place; so, again, it cannot be understood to be wanting in any.... Having, then, briefly restated these points regarding the nature of the Trinity... [Further on the reader is reminded of] the bodily advent and incarnation of the only-begotten Son of God, with respect to whom we are not to suppose that all the majesty of His divinity is confined within the limits of His slender body, so that all the “word” of God, and His “wisdom,” and “essential truth,” and “life,” was either rent asunder from the Father, or restrained and confined within the narrowness of His bodily person, and is not to be considered to have operated anywhere besides; but the cautious acknowledgment of a religious man ought to be between the two, so that it ought neither to be believed that anything of divinity was wanting in Christ, nor that any separation at all was made from the essence of the Father, which is everywhere.” (More examples of Christ's incarnation, but of the Trinity being incorporeal, & things that sound like Origen writings, when translated, was tainted with Nicene Creed type phrases, (ANF, 4:376-78).

Earlier in his life, before his response to Celsus, he wrote: “And if any one imagine that at the end material, i.e., bodily, nature will be entirely destroyed, he cannot in any respect meet my view, [his opinion & speculations] how beings so numerous and powerful are able to live and to exist without bodies, since it is an attribute of the divine nature alone— i.e., of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit—to exist without any material substance, and without partaking in any degree of a bodily adjunct. Another, perhaps, may say that in the end every bodily substance will be so pure and refined as to be like the aether, [which in ancient Physics, is a historical substance formerly thought to permeate all space] and of a celestial purity and clearness. How things will be, however, is known with certainty to God alone, and to those who are His friends through Christ and the Holy Spirits.” (ANF, 4:262, Origen DE PRINCIPIIS, book 1, chap. 6:4, see also foot note 3).

Origen's furthers his anti-body God views with this: “If He [God] be composed of matter, and matter is undoubtedly corruptible, then, according to them, God is liable to corruption!” (ANF, 4:277). But didn't Origen read Paul's letter to the Corinthians about the changes which will come about in the resurrected body? He did cite it, in defense of vilification tactics used by early anti-Christian, Celsus, who mocked the resurrection as being like wormy, rotten bodies rising, unchanged & still corruptible! Origen knew that Christ's body was glorified too? Plus: “How the dead shall be raised incorruptible.... For this corruptible [our physical bodies] must put on incorruption and this mortal must put on immortality." (1 Cor. 15:52-53, ANF 4:550, Against Celsus, book 5, chap. 17). He must have noted how Paul was writing in response to anti-body & physical resurrection denying Corinthians, (1 Cor. 15:12), & perhaps those tainted by Greek philosophy that considered the human body worth less than dung. Origen could have also noted how Paul tells the Philippians, how Christ will "change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body;" (Phil. 3:21), to add to his defense against Celsus. How did Origen deal with the early Christian mysteries, the resurrection types, the putting on of white garments, symbolic of the spirit putting on a pure changed, glorified resurrected physical body? Like Paul testified, they would "put on incorruption," & "put on immortality;" (1 Cor. 15:52-53). Didn't Origen already respond to Celsus vilification of the resurrection, where Celsus made it sound like the resurrection was like wormy, rotten zombies coming out of their graves?⁴²⁷³ Didn't Origen point out that the resurrected would be glorified, perfected & deified in their resurrected bodies? So Origen notes this & counters how that: "Our hope, then, is not "the hope of worms," nor does our soul long for a body that has seen corruption." (ANF, 4:550-51, Origen Against Celsus, Book 5, chaps. XVII-XIX). In other words, they didn't hope to go back into a body that was rotten, & decayed after years of being in the earth. For that body would be changed in the resurrection to a body that would be perfected, glorified & deified.

Didn't Origen's teacher, 3rd cent., Clement of Alexandria, also use garment themes to point out the change in resurrected & deified saints, who had passed through the early Christian mysteries? How, "...those that wait at the court of heaven around the King of all, are sanctified in the immortal vesture of the Spirit, that is, the flesh, and so put on incorruptibility." And: "Truly, then are we the children of God, who have put aside the old man, and stripped off the garment of wickedness, and put on the immortality of Christ; that we may become a new, holy people by regeneration, and may keep the man undefiled." ⁴²⁷⁴ Origen must have struggled with all the physical descriptions about God, that Celsus had attacked, & that earlier Christians had defended. Especially, with all the physical types: The sacrament, baptism, garments, ascensions with their physical hand & wrist grasping deification resurrection symbolism, & testimonial witnesses to a physical resurrection given by New Testament witnesses.

In his response to Celsus, his gross vilification of the resurrection, Origen used garment types, how that, "...the difference between the "earthly house," in which is the tabernacle of the building that is to be dissolved, and that in which the righteous do groan, being burdened, — not wishing to "put off" the tabernacle, but to be "clothed therewith," that by being clothed upon, mortality might be swallowed up of life. For, in virtue of the whole nature of the body being corruptible, the corruptible tabernacle must put on incorruption; and its other part, being mortal, and becoming liable to the death which follows sin, must put on immortality, in order that, when the corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and the mortal immortality, then shall come to pass what was predicted of old by the prophets,—the annihilation of the "victory" of death (because it had conquered and subjected us to his sway), and of its "sting," with which it stings the imperfectly defended soul, and inflicts upon it the wounds which result from sin." (ANF, 4:551, Against Celsus, Book 5, chap. 19).

Further on Origen used more garment changing types of themes to point out changes in the resurrected body: "...But what is more ridiculous still, is that Socrates will clothe himself with garments not at all different from those which he wore during the former cycle, and will live in the same unchanged state of poverty, and in the same unchanged city of Athens!..." (ANF, 4:552, Book 5, chap. 20).

Still further on, Origen used plant & seed types, how, "...we, who believe that that which is "sown" is not "quickened" unless it die, and that there is sown not that body that shall be (for God gives it a body as it pleases Him, raising it in incorruption after it is sown in corruption; and after it is sown in dishonour, raising it in glory; and after it is sown in weakness, raising it in power; and after it is sown a natural body, raising it a spiritual),..." [Is Origen suggesting here a "spiritual" resurrection?] (ANF, 4:552, Book 5, chap. 22). Further on, like grain, some that has rotted, like bodies, but in the resurrection, the body that has undergone corruption, doesn't resume its original nature, but that the body is raised in incorruption. After a discussion with how some the philosophers of Porch argue, he then goes back to Christian thought about nature. Such as how God, in raising man above the level of human nature, & causing him to pass into a better & more divine condition, & provides eternal life for the soul. The body thus raised by God is in incorruption. (ANF, 4:552-3, book 5, chaps. 22-24). Origen thus seems to hint to deification in the resurrection.

As time went by, the physical-resurrection-deification doctrines and themes of earlier Christianity, were becoming more and more unpopular with many hellenized Christians. Origen's version of deification must therefore be contrasted & understood through his version of Christology, his anti-body Greek influenced version of incorporeality issues and controversies of those early centuries, that always seem to get in the way of his defending earlier Christian doctrines attacked by 2nd century critic, Celsus.⁴²⁷⁵

As the Christological controversy raged on, Origen acknowledge that the issue of God's corporeality had not been settled in the church. He even went so far, at times, to show that a corporeal God was incompatible with Platonist conceptions of the divine nature. (However, Origen twists & turns in his dilemma, which was: Should he defend earlier Christian corporeal beliefs, as attacked by Celsus, late 2nd century? Or should he defend his own Hellenized Greek philosophy influenced anti-body beliefs, of his time, 3rd century?). So while acknowledging that Platonist concepts were incompatible with corporeal God themes, he argued that the scriptures, simply & properly viewed, (metaphorically of course), do not disprove divine incorporeality. So he had to metaphoricalize away the body-passages, because he admits that there is no place in the Bible of his time, that describes God, explicitly, as being incorporeal. Plus, he has to down play the literal interpretations, as being of "little use," in order to further try to justify incorporealism. In Origen's views, (and ironically the views of the late 2nd century critic, Celsus, that Origen wrote against, they both argued that), God didn't need a mouth to speak to his creations, he could inspire the heart with the sound of his voice, then communicate a feeling of anger to humanity, to tell us we've done wrong things. Thus, no body parts are needed for God to do such things.⁴²⁷⁶

As to many of the earlier Christians: "Their [corporeal, or physical human shaped] God was the God of the scriptures, and their trust was in the language of the prophets."⁴²⁷⁷ As we acknowledge the conflict within Origen over defending in some areas an incorporeal Father, & then defending a physical Christ, we have to explore further what might have brought on the confusion, or alleged contradictions. How that later Christians, who were so repugnant of Origen's opinions about a corporeal God, removed from a passage in De Principiis, Origen's hints to there being a corporeal God. Rufinus, who translated into Latin Origen's work, is said to have done it! "Since it seems to follow that God possesses a body, although of extreme tenuity..." Rufinus alters or suppressed the part of Origen's words that seem to favor the corporeal views. Consequently, with other writings where Origen argued for a corporeal Jesus, while in other areas, an incorporeal Father, the question is this: How much of Origen's writings might have been changed & altered to fit later Platonized Christians' views that were motivated by the incorporeal view point, during the later Christological Controversy & anti-Origen, or Origen Controversy movement of later centuries?⁴²⁷⁸ Whatever might be the case with the true & correct translation of Origen's De Principiis, he seems to, or is made to sound like he has to argue for the incorporeality of God, while defending his thesis against those who might use John 4:24 to support & have scriptural backing for the corporeality of God.⁴²⁷⁹ Another question is if copies of Origen's writings, that might have him citing & admitting earlier Christians' views that God had a body, as Celsus also cites: If such copies were then later suppressed, burned, rephrased, lost, or ignored the during anti-Origenism of the 5th-6th centuries, what might have happened to other earlier writings & scriptures tampered with too?⁴²⁸⁰

Would later Hellenized Christians, steeped in Greek philosophy, then have agreed with Celsus, the early anti-Christian of the late 2nd century? For Celsus, the problem with the earliest Christians, & those of his time, was that "These poor ignorant Christians" had been reading the words of their prophets instead of Plato, who said God is "underivable," "unnameable"; he "cannot be reached by reason," & he cannot be comprehended in terms of attributes or human experience. Contrary to what the Christians teach; he is outside any emotional experience, for he is without passions.⁴²⁸¹ With the Great Apostasy blending with earlier apostasies, which blended waves of controversies, that continued to crash down on later Christendom, such apostate belief of Celsus, also influenced by Greek philosophy & Plato, would not only be agreed upon by many later apostate Christians, but enforced into laws, with death penalties, banishments, forced tax-tithing to support later preachers enforcing this dogma. Plus, confiscations of property, tortures, fines, persecutions, & more, against those who refused to believe in their 'god' without body, parts & passions!⁴²⁸²

There are also passages that suggest physical presence appearance, called theophanies, that early critics could have used to, (Gen. 12:7, chapter 18). Ezekiel wrote that he saw God with "a form in human likeness" (Ezk. 1:26 NEB), & it's stated as a mater of fact, not as a poetic metaphor for some abstract principle. If there's only "one God," then there are passages that tell of that "one God," being born! How that Christ developed in his Mother's womb, (Luke 2:6-7). Was born of a woman, (Gal. 4:4-5). Then, after being born, sucked on Mary's breast for nourishment, as thousands of art works also show.⁴²⁸³ How Mary and Joseph needed to flee, with baby Jesus, to Egypt to protect Jesus from the bad guys, who sought to kill him, (when he was a "defenseless" child?) Such passages, if known, could have been used by early critics (Matthew 2:11-20). John 1:1-3, 14: The Word became flesh, (1 John 1:1-3, Matt. 1:18-23). Early critics like Celsus could have also mocked how Christ, as a child, wasn't all knowing, as "gods" were sometimes expected to be, . That he actually had to increase in wisdom, & stature, & in favor with God and man, because he didn't know everything his Father in Heaven knew, (Luke 2:52, Mark 13:32). At least he knew enough to impress the doctors & scribes in the Temple, when he was 12 year old, (Luke 2:41-52). Had Celsus & other ancient critics known of the questionable Infancy of Jesus Christ tales, they could have used them to vilify some of the strange things the young boy Jesus was apocryphally suppose to have done.⁴²⁸⁴ Down playing the miracles Christ did, the early critics could have poked fun of Christ human body limitations, something that they believed "a god" wouldn't do, that of limiting the divine into a body,⁴²⁸⁵ that had to travel about by walking, even though he walked on water, (John 4:6, Matt. 14:22). Now, even though the "divine" Emperors of Rome, walked about, had to be driven in chariots, from place to place, & looked human too. At least the "divine" Roman Emperors, weren't having their blood & bodies given over for cannibalistic meals, to be eaten, like Christ said his followers would have to do, (John 6:52-62). This passage could have been used, as some modern Atheists do, to vilify the sacrament, as a barbaric cannibalistic meal. "For in Him all the fullness of Deity dwells in bodily form," (Colossians 2:9, NASB, KJV: "For in him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily.").

While for many of the Jews, the fact that Christ was looked upon, by them, as "being a man," that makes himself God, was blasphemous enough for them to want to stone him, (John 10:29-39). For after all, he also sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on high, (Heb. 1:2-3). Christ was the man, the mediator between God and man, (1 Timothy 2:5-6). Christ often called himself, Son of Man, & was called man, so this must have also driven the critics crazy to hear, (Mark 15:39, John 9:35-37, 19:5). Stephen was stoned for saying he saw Jesus on the right hand of God, (Acts 7:55). The fact that Jesus had a man's body that wept (John 11:35), that slept (Matt. 8:24, Mark 4:38), got tired from walking on a long journey, (John 4:6), got hungry & thirsty, (John 4:6-7, 19:28, Matt. 21:18). Jewish critics could have turned to their scriptures to point out that God doesn't thirst, get tired, sleep, or get hungry, (Psalm 50:7-13, 121:3-4, Isaiah 40:28). Christ was accused of being a drunkard, hanging out with sinners, obviously he had a body that got thirsty for wine! (John 2:1-11, Matthew 11:19). Christ had emotions of fear & anxiety, (Matt. 26:38-39, 42). Did he lose his temper? Had a hand to hold a whip to drive the money changers out of his Father's temple? (Matt. 21:12-15). If he was also a male, with a male member below, as art works sometimes depict him with, & was tempted in all things, (Heb. 4:15, Matt. 4:1). Could he have also been tempted by women's beauty, but didn't give in to his sexual urges? (1 Pet. 2:22; Heb. 2:18, 4:14-15). Jesus was baptized, thus, could early critics have vilified Jesus by arguing that because baptism was to wash away sins, Jesus must have had some to wash away, while growing up in that male body of his, to have to then be baptized by John the Baptist? (Mark 1:4, Matt. 3:8, 11-12, John 3:13, though declared to be sinless, John 8:29, 46,; 14:30). Had his Father also done similar things, which Christ, the Son did in "like manner," as a human-god? (John 5:19, 30). The early critics amongst the Jews charged that "this man" Jesus was subverting our nation, forbidding tribute tax to Caesar, claiming himself to be a king, he incited & mis-led people. Also, he was a "criminal," or they wouldn't have handed him over to the Roman authorities. But the real big charge was that Jesus had claimed to be "the Son of God"! (Luke 23:2, 5, 14, John 18:30, 36, 19:7). Christ had a body that suffered great anguish, (Luke 22:44, 1 Pet. 3:15-22). Or has a body that could be put to death, this was something that the early critics did like to hear preached, so they tried to stop the spreading of the story of miracles performed in the name of Jesus, who was crucified, (1 Cor. 15:3-5, Hebrews 2:14-15; Acts 4:1-30, 5:15-42, 6:8-15). Christ's dead body was removed to another place by Joseph of Arimathea, (John 19:38, Mark 15:43). The Jews feared Christ's body would be taken from the sepulcher, so they had Pilate send guards to prevent Christ's followers from taking the body, (Matt. 27:62-66). God the Father had to raise Jesus up in the resurrection, (Acts 4:10). The "Toledoth Yeshu," a Jewish tale, tells of how the owner of the grave sold the body of Jesus which was then dragged through the city streets.⁴²⁸⁶ Though a false tale, it's worth noting that the Jewish critics believed Christ had a body in order for it to be dragged through the streets. Jesus, appearing in his resurrected body, wasn't ready to have his followers touch him yet, until after he had ascended to his Father, but later he did have them witness that the resurrection was physical, (John 20:17, Luke 24:39, John 20:27).

EARLIER CHRISTIAN RITUALS, SYMBOLS & ARTISTIC REMINDERS OF THE CORPOREAL DEITIES. OLD & NEW TESTAMENT TYPES OF THE EMBODIED MESSIAH-CHRIST

As we should have noted by earlier studies present thus far: From the beginnings of earliest Christianity, the Old Testament's body symbolisms, & ritualistic similitudes, & symbolisms of the Old Testament prophets' prophetic types. Plus, examples, the shadow of heavenly things, a shadow of good things to come. Even, the patterns of things in the heavens, figures for the time then present, in the Old Mosaic sacrificial body types, then in Christ. All these pointed to the promised pre-embodied Messiah, (or pre-existing Christ's spirit). The embodied Messiah (Christ's birth, life, sufferings, death, & atonement, his example of love). The disembodied Messiah, (or Christ's descent into the underworld to preach & rescue captive souls from the spirit prison). The re-embodied Messiah, (the physical resurrection of Christ).⁴²⁸⁷

Both Old, & New Testament Types, Similitudes, Symbols & Ritualistic Prophetic Remembrances: Stones or Rocks, Seeds, Water, Shepherd, Vines, Branches, Bread, Sun, Garments, Hand(s) &, or arm(s), & feet, Stars, etc.⁴²⁸⁸ These all include the journey of the soul of the promised Messiah from pre-existence themes, embodiment, disembodied, re-embodied types & symbolisms.

Stones or Rocks: Christ is likened unto a stone that rolls down from a mountain, (Christ descending as a spirit into his body?) He rolls forth throughout all nations (Christ's world wide treks, as a spirit & as a resurrected glorified Messiah). Christ is the foundational corner stone, the rock of revelation & head of the church, (a type of Christ's body).

Seeds: Christ is like the seed that is planted in the earth & sprouts up out of the underworld & spreads out his branches unto all the earth, (Christ's whole journey of his soul, pre-existence, earth life in his body, descent into hell, resurrection bodily, & his world wide trek).

Water: Christ is like the life giving water that flows down from heaven, like rain, that fills the water wells, to drink from & be cleansed by. Christ is also like the rivers & rains that cover the earth, or four rivers that flow from him into the four corner parts of the earth. (Christ's whole journey of his soul again).

Shepherd: Christ is like the good shepherd that goes down from heaven to watch over his sheep. He seeks out the lost sheep throughout the world they've been scattered to, & in different afterlife realms, such as in the underworld, to bring them back into his fold. (Whole journey).

Vines: Christ is like the keeper of the vineyard, Israelites that extended out their vines, branches & lineage throughout the world. Christ passes through his vineyards, & is like the grapes in the wine press. (Christ's world treks, atonement in his body, descent into the underworld). One of the guises Christ appears as, during his physical post-resurrection world wide trek, is Christ the Gardener. A 13th century for Easter liturgical type play, acted out the drama, for the crowds of Klosterneuburg in Germany: "Mary Magdalen meets Christ disguised as a gardener; Christ is led by two Angels to the gates of Hell, which he forces open to free the imprisoned souls; the Marys and apostles proclaim the resurrection of Christ."⁴²⁸⁹ The Messiah-Christ's resurrection prophetic types of old, that likens Christ as not being neglectful, but of doing his duty, to take care of his Father's vineyards, (scattered Israelites, planted like vineyards amongst the nations, & far away places of the world).⁴²⁹⁰ These physical-resurrection- world-wide-trek types, also have Christ as Gardener types.⁴²⁹¹ Plus, how he would then pass through his vineyards, or as some traditions, say, pass through 5000 Gardens all over the world,⁴²⁹² if not more. (Amos 5:14-20, reminding us also of the darkness that covered the earth during Christ's time of suffering & descent into hell, mentioned earlier).

Sun: Christ is like the sun that shines forth from above, giving light to the earth, lightening up the underworld & descending & rising again. (Christ's whole-journey).

Hand(s) &, or arm(s): Hands & arms are sometimes seen in art & mentioned in scriptures as giving the soul & receiving the soul, (symbolic of the whole journey, pre-existence themes, the soul descends from heaven from the hands of God to be clothed in flesh, or be born. The soul is raised from the spirit underworld by the hand of God. The hand of God extends to give the law, or receive those ascending up into heaven. Same with the arm of the Lord that shall be revealed. Hand & arm symbolism is often part of covenant making, symbolic of an embodied-God, covenants between God & the human family).

Feet: Christ's foot or feet are often depicted resting on the fallen devil, as the devil or demons are crushed, or the serpent's head is bruised under the foot. Symbolic of the underworld battle during the descent of Christ into hell, hades, limbo, purgatory. The resurrected re-embodied Messiah-Christ's world wide treks, & reign that extends over the whole world, are often seen with Christ's foot resting on a globe, or stepping onto a globe. The feet also go up the right hand path, or down the left hand path, either the soul's journey has thus taken the narrow path towards deification, or the left hand path towards demonification, the two ways, or two-extremes. Feet washing rituals are also part of the embodied-Messiah-Christ types.

Stars: (The whole journey): Stars are types of spirits on their journey through the different realms of existences. Christ, (pre-existing spirit), descends to earth. A star was a sign of Christ's incarnation, (or birth into a mortal body). A 5-pointed star sometimes represents Christ's physical body, the 5 wounds of Christ.

Physical & Spiritual prophetic types of Messiah-Christ:

Pre-embodied Messiah-Pre-existing Spirit of Christ:

Stone & Rock: Exod.17:1-7, Num.20:7-11, 1 Cor.10:4. Shepherd of Hermas, (see Councillor).

Star: Num.24:17, Mat.2:2.

Councillor: Isa.9:6, Shepherd of Hermas, Book 1, vision 2, chap.4, Book 3, Similitude 5, chap. 5-6. Similitude 9, chap. 12, John 1:1-3, 14, Col.1:15-16.⁴²⁹³

Embodied Messiah prophetic suffering types:

Birth prophesied: Isa.7:14-16, 9:6, Matt.1:22-23.

Bethlehem named: Micah 5:2, Matt.2:3-17.

Suddenly to come to his temple, or tabernacle, a type of Christ's pre-existing spirit being born into a body: Mal.3:1, Matt.1:21-25, Luke 2:21.

Betrayed for 30 pieces of silver: Zech.11:12, Matt.26:15.

Back smitten, cheeks hit, face spit upon: Isa.50:6, chap. 53, Matt.27:20-41, John 18:28-40, 19:1-37, Luke 22:63-71, chap. 23. Mark 14:21-65, chap. 15.

Pierced hands & feet: Psa.22:16, 34:20, Matt.27:35.

They shall look upon him who is wounded: Zech.12:10, 13:6, John 19:33-38.

Vinegar to drink: Psa.69:21, (Matt.27:34, Mark 15:36, Luke 23:36, John 19:28-29).

Stone & Rock: Christ's body likened unto the building of the church, the chief corner stone, & foundation's stone. But was also rejected by some, becoming their stumbling block, or "the stone of stumbling," "rock of offence;" one reason being was because he looked like & man, had a body, when God (to many of the Jews, didn't have a body). (Isa.28:16, Matt.21:42-46, Eph.2:12-22, 1 Cor. 12, 1 Pet.2:5-8, Luke 9:22).

Disembodied Messiah-Christ:

Descent into underworld: Psa.68:17-18, Isa.24:21-22, 42:5-7, Zech.9:11, Eph.4:7-10, Rom.10:5-8, 1 Pet.3:15-22, 4:5-6, Phil.2:9-10.

Tread under (feet) foot: Gen.3:15, Isa.14:9-27, compare Rom.16:20, 1 Cor.15:24-28, Heb.1:10-14, 2:8-16, Eph.1:1-23.

Stone(s), Rocks: Christ & apostles are likened unto stones that descended into the spirit prison to preach, baptize (give the water seal), & resurrected the captive spirits, (Exod.17:1-7, Num.20:7-11, 1 Cor.10:4, Christ the (stone), rock, gave the spiritual drink of the gospel to the spirits in prison, (Shepherd of Hermas, 9th Similitude).

Re-embodied Messiah-Christ:

Resurrection types: Psa.24, 30:3, 31:16-17, Isa.9:2, 42:5-7, Eph.1:1-23, 4:7-9, 1 Pet.3:15-22, 4:5-6, 1 Cor.15.

The Old Testament & other ancient documents are full of the prophetic types of the whole journey of Christ's soul through the different realms of existences, & his return to glory. It's an example of what the human family is undergoing too, each in their own choices along their own journey of the souls to whatever end, or way is chosen.

The whole journey was part of the divine plan set forth in the Council in heaven, (pre-existence themes). But because the pre-existence had many themes that fell under attack by those enforcing their anti-body dogmas, & cultural contaminated beliefs about God not having body parts. The pre-existence theme about the pre-existence plan, that maps out the whole journey of souls, including Christ's, such themes were rejected & dropped out of use & favor during different ages of apostasies in different areas of the world, including ancient Israel & later Christendom.

The types of Christ's divine spirit's descend into a real body of a man, his real blood shed, his real bodily sufferings for the sins of all people. His real descent of his spirit into the spirit underworld, his battles with the demonic forces there that attempted & failed to stop him. The crushing of the serpent's head under foot, or the devil under the gates of hades, hell, limbo, purgatory, (symbolic of his victory of Death & hell). Christ resting his foot on his fallen foe as symbolic of the victorious Christ, (for the demons, fallen angels, couldn't stop "the King of Glory," from entering into their gates, & they couldn't stop the preaching there. Nor the harrowing & resurrection, a real physical resurrection). Plus, the real resurrection bodily world-wide-trek, & later physical resurrected bodily ascension of Christ into the real presence of God the Father for us. All such prophetic types & foretold events, fulfilled in Christ, made it so that there was no longer a need for the yearly offering, as was made by the Old Testament time high Priest, (Heb. chaps. 8-10).

As noted, this is what concerned many of the Jews, as to how they had looked upon Christ's appearing as too physical. Many of them had inherited the products of earlier apostate anti-body monotheistic dogmas of scripture tampering Yawists. Plus, had added on to that further products of that earlier apostasy, & accepted the Philo type blends of Jewish & Greek philosophy's anti-body God dogmas. These added to other factors as to why they thus rejected, & hardened their hearts against many things about Christ, & his works & miracles. For his appearing to them seemed to be too physical, for here was a physical man claiming divinity, (which for the Romans was a common thing). Here was a physical man claiming to be the Son of God!

As noted earlier, by Christ's time, the Jews were in a state of apostasy, & had been for many years. By the time Christ came along in the body, to fulfill, & counter the anti-body beliefs, with his living witness of an embodied Messiah, doing so, by showing himself in fulfillment of prophecies. The Israelites' apostasy had blended with the Greek's & other pagan cultures' apostasies, they all were influencing each other to a certain extent.⁴²⁹⁴ Thus, this was what Christ & his prophets & apostles went up against, as they went about preaching the New Covenant, the New Testament higher laws, amongst a number of people that had inherited the products of these earlier apostasies that had contaminated the earlier embodied-God beliefs.⁴²⁹⁵

Consequently, Christ, & his prophets & apostles, as if knowing that the anti-embodied God beliefs would go on to contaminate early Christian beliefs, (1 John 4:1-3, 2 John 7, 1 Cor.15:12, Col.2:8-12, 1 Tim.3:16, 4:1-3, Titus 1:9-16, Heb.1:1-10, 5:5-10). Such as, during the earliest to later centuries, when Christendom would suffer its own apostasy, the Great Apostasy, where the earlier products of earlier apostasies would be thrown into the blender & zinged up in the mix. Christ & his prophets & apostles kept doubling up on the witnesses, & testimonial aspects of the embodied God doctrine. They did this, like the Jewish law required, that there should be at least 2 or 3 witnesses, if not more, in establishing the truth about the gospel, especially that Christ was the promised Messiah, an embodied God-man, (Deut.19:15, John 8:14-20, 2 Cor.13:1, Matt.18:16). Thus, the Lord kept doubling, even tripled up on the body-symbolism, in the hopes that the people would see the connections between the old & new testaments' prophetic & ritualistic types, & old & new covenants.⁴²⁹⁶

In keeping track of Christ's "sayings," as the critics were doing, they also set about taking out from as many copies of their Old Testament scriptures, as many prophecies & covenants as they could, that they thought could be used by the earliest Christians, who kept citing the prophecies, & covenants. These early critics amongst the Jews, noted how the earliest Christians were interpreting the Old Testament, as being the prophetic types to testify, & back up their own testimonies, that Christ was the fulfillment of the promised embodied Messiah.⁴²⁹⁷

As if foreseeing such things would happen, the pre-existing divine spirit of Christ & God the Father, in the pre-existing council in heaven, established so many embodied Messiah ritualistic types, so many prophecies to be given to the prophets throughout all coming nations, that it would be impossible for these anti-body anti-Christ's, (that would arise through the temptations of the fallen angels everywhere), to thus get rid of all the prophetic witnesses. Plus, to get rid of all the ancient types, ritualistic reminders, & symbolical remembrances of an embodied Messiah. For as part of adding on the witnesses, there would be additional separate nations with their own prophets, besides those of the Israelite nation. For the whole world was to look for a promised embodied-Messiah that would be in fulfillment of their own prophets' prophecies.⁴²⁹⁸

Christ also went about establishing another wall of defense, for Christ must have known & thus warned his disciples of the coming anti-body, anti-Christ's' apostasy produced, their doctrines of devils, that would later claim false doctrines about God not having a body, (2 John 7, 1 Cor.15:12, 1 Tim.3:16). Or as in the coming Christological controversy, that Christ only appeared to have a body, but didn't, as in "docetism."⁴²⁹⁹

Or as in the Christological controversy blended with the Trinitarian controversy, & products of earlier apostasies, again thrown into the blender. They produced dogmas, that claimed an incomprehensible 'god' somehow 3 in 1, 1 in 3, without body parts & passions, somehow claiming that such a concoction of unscriptural formulas of uninspired men, makes a monotheistic anti-body 'god,' that somehow consists of the embodied Christ, an incorporeal Father, & Holy Spirit that isn't described as being disembodied (all 3 in 1) in scriptures.⁴³⁰⁰

MORE BODILY TYPES

TEMPLE BUILDING PARTS: Christ's body is likened unto the temple, as the human body is also likened unto a temple, or tabernacle. Thus, the body should be cleansed, maintained, washed, clothed, & not be defiled or polluted by all types of sins. For no unclean thing was to enter into the Temple (or into heaven, or into the face to face presence of God, without first being cleansed of all sins. So also like the temple, in putting on the Temple of Christ, like the garment, symbolic of the body. (Or having put on Christ, like putting on clean & white robes & garments, symbolic of putting off sins, & all negative-traits. Plus, in putting on righteousness, humility, & other Christ like traits). The early Christians were taught to also not defiled their temple (or garments & robes), by having them soiled, spotted, bloodied (by murderous acts, etc.). Or blackened by sins too, like unto the demons that blackened themselves during their fall from heaven, for becoming defiled, unclean spirits, rebellious against God. Thus, if the early Christians should ever make mistakes, they were to repent & have their body & garments washed by the atonement of the unblemished, unspotted Lamb. (For the sacrificial unblemished lambs, sacrificed in the temple, were all prophetic types of Christ's suffering & atonement, when he was in his mortal body).⁴³⁰¹

ANOINTING: Christ is the anointed Messiah, & in the mysteries, the early Christians were anointed to become a type of Christ, during the descent into the font.

BAPTISMS: A type of washing away of the spots of sins, & being clothed in a body in the resurrection, baptism being a type of descent into the watery abyss & bodily resurrection, (Jonah 1:17, Matt.12:39-40, 1 Peter 3:17-22, 4:5-6, Eph.4:7-10, Rom.6:4-9, Col.2:12, John 5:25-29, Isa.24:22, 42:5-7, Acts 2:24-25, 13:27-39, 1 Cor.15).

GARMENTS: Garments: Christ is likened unto garments that are put on, taken off, & put back on. (Symbolic of the whole journey, & our journeys of our own souls through the different realms of existences: Pre-existence, mortal life (putting on a body), afterlife spirit world, (taking off the body), resurrection & deification, (putting back on the body changed, glorified & perfected). Garments are likened unto Christ's protective powers. The soul resurrected being clothed in the same type of glorious body as Christ was, a physical resurrection.⁴³⁰²

VEILS: Where types of Christ's body, garments & veils had similar symbols in them, for they were types of passing through the veil into the after life, entering with a resurrected body, (Heb.10:16-29). In veil lore & traditions, St. Veronica 's veil, is a reminder of Christ's body, & the imprint of his face on a cloth, in most cases, a single face! Not the 3-faced trinity types, (perhaps it's a single face because this might suggested to many later Christians, that all three of the trinity were crucified on the cross, Christ, the Father, & the Holy Spirit, because Christ was on his way to be crucified at this point in his mortal physical life). As the story goes, St. Veronica was a woman of Jerusalem, who, upon seeing Christ suffering, on his way to Calvary, struggling under the weight of the cross, he was made to carry. Upon feeling compassion for him she rushed forth with a cloth (veil) to wipe the sweat from his face. On the cloth, called a veil, was an imprint of Christ's face, thus, many art works show just his face on a cloth, often called as Veronica's veil, that also took on relic miracle powers in lore & traditions too.⁴³⁰³

The veil was thus another reminder of the physical suffering of Christ, when he was in his mortal body, all types of the temple, as Cyril of Jerusalem, Archbishop, 4th c., notes, while expounding on passages in Hebrews, (chaps. 9-10; N&PNF, 7:91, Lecture 13:32). How that the Jews had dishonored the temple veil, because they had dishonored their promised Messiah, & had torn the flesh of Christ. Thus, with his flesh torn by the wounds of the cross, the veil in the Temple was torn too. In so doing, Christ had entered into the face to face encounter with his Father, which the temple was a type of: "For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us:" (Heb.9:24, also whole chaps. 9-10; Matt. 27:51-53, 28:3-10). The breaking of the bread, might also be likened unto the tearing of Christ's flesh, in sacramental types too, (Matt.26:12, 26-30, Mark 14:22-26, Luke 22:7-20, John 6:26-69, Rom.9:3-5, 1 Cor.11:18-29).

PASSIONS

MARRIAGE OF THE LAMB

STIGMATA: These are based on the wounds in Christ's body. But if the Godhead are 3 in 1, or 1 in 3, 'without body parts or passions.' If so, where would be the separation between the other members in the Godhead, so that the Father wasn't wounded, or the Holy Spirit, when Christ was crucified in his body? These traditions, & symbolism must have crashed up against the anti-body dogmas, in other areas of Christianity, if not with the same ones holding to a Godhead without body parts, & passions.

Different saints are said to have received the stigmata in their own body, suggesting that this symbolism is a body-type reminder of Christ's wounded body. Thus, in Christian tradition, they are marks corresponding to those left on Christ's body by the Crucifixion. Thus, the stigmata is believed to have been impressed, by divine favor, on the bodies of St Francis of Assisi and others.⁴³⁰⁴

ANASTASIS = RESURRECTION

HAND CLASPS: All throughout historic Christianity, the hand clasping on the wrist, & other parts of the hands, are covenants, & reminders of the physical Deities. Especially in physical resurrection settings, for the resurrected hands of the resurrected, is often depicted being raised by the resurrected Christ, who reaches down to clasp their hands or wrists, in the very act of resurrecting them & bringing towards deification.⁴³⁰⁵ Hand clasping symbols are symbolic of God reaching out to help us, bless us, & lift us up in both the physical world, & spiritual realms, thus helping us to not fall, or slip away from His presence. Thus, the physical embodied Deity symbolism of the early Christian mysteries, the ancient Temple types. For His hand draws us in close, rescues us, & then guided us to safety. Or to brings us to God, as Christ did, by his saving right hand.⁴³⁰⁶

In the early Christian mysteries, and art works that kept these symbolisms alive in the memories of the initiated, the hand & wrist grasping covenants were the face to face encounters with embodied deities, or their representatives. This is what they were intended to also teach the initiates about the whole journey of the soul through different realms of existences. For example, hand & wrist graspings were sacred reminders about the resurrection & physical deification to come, with the disembodied souls' & physically resurrected' re-entering into God's presence, face to face.⁴³⁰⁷

With all these corporeal-Deities ritualistic types as reminders, & repeated ceremonies, with all their physical types to be brought in remembrance, which was their whole point in setting aside times to perform them. Such aspects of the old & new testaments' types must have been an annoyance for those who had fallen for anti-body Deity dogmas. But, how much could have been retained, & how much was taken out, when, where & how, by those that saw that the embodied-God symbolism, just wouldn't fit their Hellenistic-early Christian blends & beliefs in a "god," without a body? ⁴³⁰⁸ If some rejected the face to face encounters with Deity, probably thinking that they didn't have to enter into God's presence, because God was already everywhere present, & didn't even have hands to clasp, (in their thinking). How soon, if not slowly, did this symbolism fade out? Was it done more quickly in other areas by those who rejected Temple worship, or by others who changed their mysteries, in order to fit in their anti-body dogmas? ⁴³⁰⁹ These are questions that need to be explored further in order to understand the changes we see in the art works that depict the trinity, Deity, & how the creedal formulas influenced such art works.

Thus, under pressures to conform with these dogmas, the artists amongst them, or perhaps employed by them, could have been challenged to try to figure out what would be the acceptable ways in which to depict their bodiless 'Deity.' Doing so, perhaps by symbolism only, rather than with full human type bodies & shapes that would suggest human type forms. Many artists must have realized that to depict Deity as traditionally had been done, meant risking getting in trouble with powerful clerical & state backed religionists. For there were different ones in positions of the churches with enough power to make life miserable for their professions. Ones that could enforce the anti-body decrees, & creedal formulas. For in some cases, they took such things serious enough to, polemically & verbally, if not physically have fights over different controversial issues, & the Godhead issue was one of them. As it was, they must have known or heard rumors about those who were being killed, torture, banish, thought policed, having their properties confiscated, books burned, & excommunicated, for not going along with the status quo. For those not of the dominating sect, were being marked as being heretical! Which in time became a death sentence for many. ⁴³¹⁰

Consequently, some scholars have suggested that these dogmas, & controversies, with their power struggles amongst the rival sects, when they crashed into the embodied-God beliefs, were some of the reasons for just showing the hand symbolism for God the Father. It was safer for artists to depict just the hand of God extending down, than the whole body of the Father. While in other areas of Christendom, they had no problem depicting the Father, many times, as a full-grown man, often older looking than Christ, in some cases, while also looking like each other too, in other cases. ⁴³¹¹ After which it could then be symbolized away, or made allegorical, or metaphorical. But heaven forbid, not literal! These were the difficulties that the anti-body dogma caused for the many different branches of Christianity. Especially those that still continued to resist the tidal wave of anti-body monotheism, enforced at times by Emperor swords & armies. Or by laws established by religionists in power, running the State run sects, as in later centuries. Thus, many still held onto their earlier beliefs in the embodied deities. While others tried to blend to two with contradictory creeds, while still having body types in their sacraments, festivals, miracle plays, masses, liturgical rites, baptismal ceremonies, songs, poems, writings, & art works.

While others rejected the anti-body dogmas, & continued to still believe in a physical-resurrection, a physically-resurrected-Christ, & that Christ was made in the Father's image like unto a man's, as from the beginning, we being created in Their images. Because the early Christian mysteries also contained these physical reminders, & with these art works keeping those symbols in memorial monuments. The anti-body dogma was up against a lot of artistic reminders when they tried to enforce their dogmas that the Father was couldn't have a body, or a hand. Consequently, to depict him in such, with body parts, must have been illegal in some areas more fanatical about representations of deity, & thus made it a big no, no, to depict God's whole body. This may be another reason why many art works were destroyed, because others in power, didn't like how the represented different "gospel" themes, or what creedal formulas were coming down from different church synods & council meetings. Such as during the days of the Iconoclasts, when different ones destroyed images used in religious worship, during the Byzantine Church of the 8th and 9th c. In the case with Christ, that was a more difficult matter, for there were too many physical-aspects about him that couldn't be simply decreed away into the controversial oblivion of dogmatic formulas, in order to make him also into a god without body parts or passions of the 'one' godhead god. So Christ was often depicted in his human bodily form greeting by hand & wrist grasping, those being resurrected or ascending into heaven.

CROWNS

SACRAMENTS: BREAD: The feeding of the multitude, about 5000 people, with 2 fish & 5 loaves of bread was like a type of how Christ would later eat fish & bread in front of his apostles & disciples, after his resurrection, to show & prove that he had a physical resurrected body, (Luke 24:36-46, John 21:1-15). ⁴³¹² The fish symbols that developed as secret symbols, during days of persecutions, representing Jesus Christ, Son of God, Savior, could also be baptismal-descent into the watery abyss & resurrection types, as also sacramental types of an embodied-Messiah. ⁴³¹³ Even the early anti-Christians must have connected the bread symbolism of the sacrament, with flesh, by hearing rumors, or reading confiscated copies of early Christians' scriptures, & finding the passages about the sacrament. To then falsely charge many early Christians with cannibalism, eating the flesh & drinking the blood of their (the early Christians' 'god,'). If so, they must have known that the earliest Christians' had the beliefs in an embodied-God, which they must have mocked, like Celsus did, late 2nd century. Did such persecutions, pressures & mocking of earliest Christians' beliefs, get many later Christians to abandon the embodied God doctrine?

"Take, eat, this is my body." These words which instituted the Eucharist were misunderstood (perhaps maliciously) by the pagan enemies of the Church and led to wild accusations of cannibalism, just as the love feasts of the [early] Christians were used to bolster charges of sexual licence. In reality, as unprejudiced observers like Pliny knew, all that they did was 'to gather together for a communal and simple repast'. The meal shown here (above) [in the late 2nd century of The Breaking of Bread, wall painting] comes from the catacomb of Priscilla. [Rome] Such meals, represented in several places in the catacombs, had reference to several ideas: the Celestial Banquet; the funeral meal; the Eucharist; perhaps also the Wedding at Cana." ⁴³¹⁴

Even if critics' misinterpretations, ill-informed misunderstandings, or malicious vilification of the sacrament was done on purpose, to further vilify early Christians with. Or even if ancient critics had heard true or distorted truths, & or false rumors about early Christianity in general, because of what some apostate "Christian" groups were alleged or may have been actually doing, their immoralities in their "secret meetings," & "secret" mysteries. Because there were heretical groups, not distinguished by many early critics from good sects. But, were ones blending their perversions & versions of early Christianity in with pagan-cults' immoral mysteries. Even then, there still are fragments of the true sacrament that were needed to be added in order to make the extreme counterfeits, or the blends of similar rites, in with early Christians' rituals, such as the sacrament. ⁴³¹⁵ But even with such things, there still are aspects of early Christians' beliefs, that such outsiders' views become a witness for, even if that witness is somewhat misinformed or a vilification. For, like Celsus' late 2nd century attack on Christ's pre-existing spirit's descent from heaven into a mortal body. For such attacks on rituals still give us some hints about the early Christian rituals of the times, & that is that even the critics knew, that there still were some early Christians that believed & defended their basic concept that their “god,” had a human shaped image & body!

So in the earliest Christian cases on into even the times of the Christological controversy of the 2nd century onwards, there were many sacramental types & symbols developing that reminded early Christians that Christ had a real body: “Take, eat, this is my body.” Thus, it wasn’t, ‘here, some bread,’ or fish, this is my bodiless everywhere present non-human formlessness, or phantom (docetism) appearance of a man, but not really! Instead, it was here’s a sacramental meal, be it bread or fish & water or wine, that is to remind you that Christ had a real body that suffered & was resurrected. Oh, and remember that while you eat some fish, that it is also likened Christ’s descent into the watery abyss, which in baptism, we were a type of too, with baptism also being a type of Christ’s resurrection. But this raises the questions: How much of these anti-body dogma waves clashed & crashed into Christ’s re-embodied (resurrected), world-wide-trek themes? Clement of Alexandria and Origen, both influenced by Greek thought, & the anti-body themes there in, acknowledged that Jesus’ body could readily change appearance at will—a decidedly docetic notion, with Christ only appeared to be human, for he was suppose to be some kind of phantom type, not in a real human shape. But was there a conflict of interest in them attempting to deal with the contradictions & conflicting beliefs? For Clement claimed that Jesus ingested food not for nourishment sake, but simply to convince his followers that he actually did have a body.⁴³¹⁶

Obviously, fragments of Christ’s bodily post-resurrection world wide wanderings, & like themes, must have blended in with Christological controversy issues, or visa versa. Perhaps both notions influenced the legitimizations of each other. Could this be one of the reasons why Christ’s physical resurrection-world-wide-trek themes did fade off into later shape-shifting forms & guises that Christ was said to appear as? Why the early Christian beliefs of Christ going to other nations during his physical post-resurrection victory march, had to also be made to fade out of the acceptable dogmas? Because it conflicted with the later versions of the Godhead as being everywhere present, without body parts or passions? For why would Christ need to physically travel about, if he didn’t have a real body? Or was already everywhere? These questions must have been asked by those who abandoned the earlier anthropomorphic-God beliefs, for the Greek influenced anti-body ones. Whatever might be the case, even later Christmas traditions then, that have Christ appearing in different guises, are faded reminders that Christ did have a body, of sorts, though of the shape-shifting types & different guises! Thus, such later stories being a product of the apostasy, Christmas lore has Christ appearing in different forms to test our levels of charity or none charity, towards someone appearing to us as seeming to be, “one of the least of these his brethren,” (Matt.25). Or as a beggar, leper, man of sorrows, pilgrim, noble, stranger, small child, old woman, a blond female youth, & the many other forms he guises himself as, according to early through later legends, art works, & later Christmas lore.⁴³¹⁷ One guise, Christ the Gardener,

The connections between the Old and New Testaments’ prophetic types were a popular teaching tool for early to later Christians. Thus, “...the feeding of the 5,000 with five loaves and two fishes, with, in addition, [to the wedding feast at Cana miracle, of turning water into wine, were in art works, such as in the late 2nd century of The Breaking of Bread, wall painting in the catacomb of Priscilla, Rome, an agape or early Christian ‘love-feast,’ is also] an allusion to the Last Supper and its commemoration in the simplest form of the sacrament of the Eucharist and perhaps also the reunion or banquet of the faithful in heaven.... [Amongst other New & Old Testament prefigures of Christ, such art works as these, & the figures of prophets there in] To the initiated they were a reminder of how the New Testament fulfilled the Old.”⁴³¹⁸

It was often near meal times that Christ appeared, & turned the meal into a sacramental type reminder of the sacrament he had taught them earlier, before his death. Again, the feeding of the multitude was likened unto the manna from heaven, but also coming sacrament connecting to the two, old & new testament types. In the Dura Europos, Syria murals, dated about 250 A.D., “...the bread and wine of the Messianic meal, reminding us of the sacrament; we see the wandering of Israel in the desert with the waters of life flowing in twelve miraculous streams... to each tribal tents.”⁴³¹⁹ As it was also a sacramental type of Christ’s pre-existence, his descent from heaven into a real physical body, his bodily-sufferings & physical death, his spirit’s descent into the spirit world & being resurrected back into his physical body. But many of the people didn’t make the physical prophetic connections, except some, who used the manna story to tempt Christ to get more food, by showing them a sign that he was the Messiah, by bringing more manna type food or bread to them, as he had done earlier, when he fed the multitude. However, he told them, that they were only interested in him feeding their physical bodies, but interested in the spiritual food (truths, the gospel) from heaven that he offered too (John chap. 6). These sacramental types were to be likened unto the manna, the bread from heaven, which was likened unto Christ coming down from heaven to be clothed in a body.

Clement of Rome, (30-100), “Our one Lord Jesus Christ, who has saved us, being first a spirit, was made flesh” (2nd Clement, 4:2). Doubting Thomas, as he became known as, also had a body witness double symbolism to his scriptural, & post-resurrection Christ’s world-wide-trek-themes that includes Thomas becoming a witness to Christ’s physical resurrected body. The art works, traditions & lore that follows afterwards, still retains many of these symbolisms. Thomas witnesses what he had first doubted, that Christ had a real physical resurrected body, his own that Thomas would recognize was the Christ he had walked around with, while Christ was living. Thus, by feeling Christ’s wounds with his own hands, this became part of the double-witness-symbolism. For the feeling of Christ’s hands & side, with Thomas hands, was the whole point behind Christ appearing to Thomas. He knew Thomas doubted that he had a body, so he appeared & had Thomas go pass his doubts because that’s how a lot of people are. They have to see, touch, & experience things for themselves, because they won’t believe other peoples’ witness statements or testimonials, (John 20:17-30). So it was a body-witness double symbolism, if not more, to have hand & wrist clasping symbolism develop from the whole story about ‘Doubting Thomas.’ (As seen earlier). For this was a time when Christ went around the world to show different people, & groups of people that he had a resurrected body, & that in doing this he was in fulfillment of prophecies. So hand & wrist grasping covenants in the mysteries, were part of the earliest to later symbolism centered on an embodied-God, Jesus Christ, the Son of God. The symbolism behind God raising up Christ in the resurrection, & Christ raising up Adam, the first of the human family to be resurrected, then Christ being raised into heaven by hand & wrist grasping, all were parts of the witness symbolism, that were multiple witnesses that Christ had a physical body in the resurrection. (As noted earlier).

As the anti-body dogmas flooded in from Greek philosophy, & tainted Jewish thought, also contaminated with anti-body Greek thought, they crashed up against this defensive wall of all these protective embodied-God symbolism, types, ritualistic covenants, & in the blend, it became difficult for artists, & others to try to come up with compromises between the symbolism & ritualistic types that witnessed of an embodied-God, & the monotheistic “God” without body parts & passions, as influenced by the Greek philosophers, & other cultural contaminations.

Christ is like the bread that came down from heaven, & the flowing sacramental water, reminders of his flesh & blood. (John 6:33–62). CROSS, a reminder of that Christ, in his body, suffered. GARMENT, a reminder of Christ's spirit clothed in a body, then again, during the resurrection, so likewise for Christians too. (Garment type themes in: "For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." (1 Cor. 15:53–54). A lot of later relics that were said to be drops of Christ's blood preserved. Thorns from the crown that was thrust down on Christ's head. Wood from the cross that Christ's hands & feet were nailed to. Breast-milk from Mary that the Christ-child's baby body was nourished from. The nails that were driven into his hands & feet. Crumbs preserved from the Last Supper's table. The chalice or cup, in Holy Grail lore, the cup Christ drank from. Some of the straw that the Christ-child bedded on. Swaddling clothes, Christ's baby body was wrapped up in by his mother, Mary. A strand of Christ's beard. All these types of relics should have reminded later Christians about the physical reality of God the Father's Son, born to Mary. Especially when the Godhead, in much later centuries, a product of the Christology Controversy, was later argued to be without body, parts, passions, or form, & not confined or contained in any type of bodily shape.⁴³²⁰ Did Christ foresee that issues, schisms, polemics, & heretical dogmas would arise over him having a body or not, & that there was a physical resurrection? Was this why he gave his followers so many reminders about his physical image, body, blood, & the physical glorious resurrection, when, after his death, he rose again into his body that was glorified? Gave his followers physical types, symbols & rituals, like baptism & the sacrament to remind them of the physical aspects of his earthly mission? The dilemma that the Platonized Christians who promoted the incorporeal version of deity was that there were too many ritualistic reminders that made them sound like they were contradicting themselves. "...For while making overtures to philosophy, they could not, as Christians, abandon completely the anthropomorphic God of their own liturgies, hymns, and creeds. They were thus caught in a logical dilemma. For when they ascribed to the biblical God the attributes of "the divine" as conceived by philosophy, they tactically contradict themselves. Thought they aspired to rationality, they were trying to combine two ideas of God that are mutually exclusive, and were therefore bound to end in self-contradiction."⁴³²¹

The ancient critics, like Celsus, could have thus also used the sacrament, baptism, & other early Christian mysteries' symbolism about the physicalness of Jesus, to point them out as evidence, & to mock early Christians' beliefs in the physical bodily sufferings, death & "claims" to a physical resurrection of Jesus. Beliefs, backed by ritualistic types in their mysteries, which Celsus, like other ancient critics, vilified with claims that the early Christians' secret initiations & secret meetings, must mean that they are doing bad things in their mysteries. Adding to that, another vilification tactic as used against earlier Christians' beliefs of a physical-resurrection. For Celsus likened the resurrection unto a scary story that sounds like zombie like dead corpses, dirty, wormy, rotten, were being raised from their graves. Thus, he uses a negative description tactic to vilify the resurrection, rather than present, in that part of his attack, the positive beliefs he knew about. That of, the perfecting & deification of early Christians' bodies, how that they would be changed, glorified & perfected, as the early Christians' bodies rise from their graves, like their divine example, Jesus Christ, the Son of God.⁴³²²

One reason why later immaterialistic Platonized Christian heretics, (who called others "heretics," in later centuries), could have suppressed the scriptures from the common folks, was perhaps because they didn't want to be considered anti-Christ, for their denial of the reality of Christ's body, that he was really born, lived, died & was resurrected. That he, unlike some earlier Gnostic views, wasn't some phantom illusory person only appearing to do such human things, (1 John 4:2-3, 1 Cor. Chap.15, Rev. 5:6).⁴³²³

After his resurrection, Christ had to give many of his disbelieving apostles a chance to actually feel his wounds, his hands & feet, to convince them he had a resurrected body, (Luke 24:39). Thomas said he wouldn't believe until he did so, (John 20:27). All these types of passages, or at least some, could have been known to critics like Celsus, who may have obtained confiscated copies of the scriptures, or ones from Christians themselves. Moreover, in the early Christian doctrine of deification, the Christians' resurrected body would be transformed so that it would be like Christ's glorious resurrected body, Phil. 3:20–21.

Origen's teacher, Clement of Alexandria, 150–213, as some place his time as. He is one of the church fathers that must have been influenced by the immaterialism side of the controversy about God having a body or not. About the mid to late 2nd century, he refers to God as immaterial. The concept was opposed by other earlier to later Christians, & the controversy raged on for three centuries, with immaterialism becoming more dominant, than divine embodiment beliefs.⁴³²⁴

During the 2nd & 3rd centuries, the Platonists, those who followed Plato's immaterial-God themes, in & out of the church, they tried to persuade those who believed in divine embodiment to side with the anti-body God theme. While Origen was caught up & adopted Platonistic metaphysical themes of God being incorporeal, this only seems to apply to the Father & Holy Spirit, where as Christ did have a body, in Origen's thinking. He devoted a lot of time to the exegesis of biblical texts to construct and clarify early Christian doctrine to fit his incorporealistic concept of God. This required the use of philosophizing, allegorical interpretive methods imposed on certain scriptures, & trying to minimize some passages of scriptures traditionally interpreted in literal ways that strongly suggested God had a body in the image of a man. Thus, attempting to counter argue against this, Origen suggest such passages could be interpreted in metaphorical ways. He also tried to justify his blend of platonic anti-body themes by siding with the dogma taking hold in Christendom of his time that included, the incorporeal god themes. He reluctantly admits that his early Christian contemporaries generally believed in an embodied God, & that this was one of the earlier beliefs that troubled early anti-Christians like Celsus. About the mid third century, the issue of divine-embodiment had not been settled in the church: "How God himself is to be understood, – whether as corporeal, and formed according to some shape, or of a different nature from bodies, – [is] a point which is not clearly indicated in our teaching."⁴³²⁵

As Greek thought contaminated the Jewish & early Christian faiths, & as the other cultures intermingled in different areas of the Mediterranean old world area. Many of the Greeks also became, not only anti-Jewish, but anti-Christians, skilled in the dialectic arts of debates through reason & logic. What might have happened to their prophets & prophetesses, after their own times of apostasies? Left with what they must have thought was the next best thing, reason, & logic schools, they later eventually started to make many Jews & early Christians uncomfortable with their body-god concepts, consequently: "Christians and Jew alike were embarrassed by the simplicity of their faith when confronted by their more sophisticated Greek neighbors. They were told that their [body-god] concept of God was vulgar and crude."⁴³²⁶ Thus, to appease the Greeks, some of the early Jews & early Christians, going through the schools, & living amongst the Greeks & Romans, allowed themselves to become Hellenistic in their blends of dogmas, logically thinking through different issues. Doing so, rather than letting scriptures, though tampered with, be somewhat more of an anchor, to at least keep them from further drifting out into the deep oceans of apostasy, to be tossed to & fro with every wind of doctrine, & dashed about with every ever increasing wave of controversies, (Eph.4:11-14, 2 Tim.3:15-17).⁴³²⁷ But this is what we might expect to happen with different beliefs, including the body-god doctrine, after Christ & his prophets & apostles were no longer around.⁴³²⁸

Perhaps following in the footsteps of Clement of Alexandria, pupil Origen, though being Platonized in his views of God the Father being incorporeal, he doesn't try to escape the issue about God becoming like a man, & even suffering. For Jesus "...came down to earth in pity for human kind, he endured our passions and sufferings before he suffered the cross, and he deigned [or did something that one considers to be beneath one's dignity] to assume our flesh...."

Also, Origen seems to have believed that the Godhead consists of 3 separate beings, or at least that the Father & Son are two separate beings, & yet they are one in the sense that they are one in purpose. "Origen holds that the Son makes "the will in himself just what it was in the Father, so that ... the will of the Son is inseparable from the will of the Father, so that there are no longer two wills but one. And this unity of will is the reason for the saying of the Son 'I and my Father are one [John 10:30].'" Thus, "they are two separate persons, but one in unity and concord of mind and in identity."⁴³³⁰ The Father and Son differ from each other in hypostasis. Originally hypostasis and ousia were synonyms, the former Stoic and the latter Platonic, meaning real existence or essence. Although hypostasis has this original sense in Origen, it's often used in the sense of individual subsistence. Origen even wrote of the Word as being a second God from the Father to stress their distinction. (On Prayer 15.1. Celsus 5.39, 8.12. The Commentary on the Gospel of St. John 2.2.10).

Christ is one with the Father in agreement, and yet stands on a lower level in the hierarchy of the Gods as being ranked next in line under the Father who is the Most High God of all the gods. However, for Origen, God the Father does not have a body, but is a spirit. In the case with Jesus, he had a body, & still does, in & through birth & the resurrection. Origen's views about the Godhead must have fallen under the influence by Greek philosophy which rejected the idea that God could have a body. Origen seems to suggest that all Christians agreed that there is one God, that Jesus was the first-born of the Father, and the Holy Ghost was next in honor. However, Origen was not too sure about a number of things. They didn't know if the Holy Ghost was begotten or not.⁴³³¹

And yet, Origen, perhaps again because of the Hellenistic, Neo-platonic influences & anti-body doctrines which had made a lot of head way by that time, even he was perplexed at their own Christian doctrines that said that Jesus as God's Son, had gained a body. Earlier Ignatius, one of the Apostolic Fathers had testified that Christ had been truly born, ate food, drank, and had been actually sentenced under Pontius Pilate to be put to death. Later by the time of Origen, the anti-body doctrines of the Greeks had almost choked out that earlier belief. Origen was stunned by this doctrine, and yet was still forced to acknowledge Christ had put off his majesty to become a man, or should be thought of as having been confined within that man who appeared in Judea. Or that Christ should have even entered the womb of a woman, and have been born, and even cried as other babies, and then later to have suffered the most undignified death! Such things were hard for platonized & Hellenized Christians to swallow. In one breath, Origen seems to have defended the bodily resurrection, then in other places, as he doesn't seem to really know what to think about it. And so Origen speculates that only the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost can live without bodies because it is right and proper to think of the Trinity alone as existing incorporeally. Then Origen suggested, that if one thing can live without a body, others can too, and if others, why not all? And if that is the case, bodies were to be dispensed within eternity for there will be no need for them.⁴³³² Thus, the Greek anti-body doctrine clouded the minds of later Christian writers, and because of this, and other things, the early church struggled with the doctrine of the physical resurrection, and the nature of God for years. During the first & second centuries, there were earlier Christians & even Jews that generally believed that God was embodied, though different ones like Philo in the Jewish community of Alexandria, promoted anti-body Platonized Judaism. Later, Clement of Alexandria & his pupil, Origen promoted the idea of an incorporeal God to the early Christian communities of their times. By the fifth century, the embodied God theme was still around, for it was one of the things that Augustine explained was a revulsion he had towards Christianity, thinking an embodied deity was a "vulgar" view. However, his conversion to later Christianity of his time became possible when he learned from hellenized Christians of the emerging later Christian theology that was supporting the incorporeal deity dogma.⁴³³³ Thus, Origen and Augustine were two of the most uncompromising incorporealists that strongly opposed the doctrine of an embodied deity, & thus inadvertently provided evidences of earlier Christians beliefs in an embodied deity that their training in Greek Philosophy must have caused them to reject, during their times.⁴³³⁴

In Origen's views about "the Father, who he maintains is whole and indivisible, [or unable to be divided or separated] gives birth to the Son without any act of separation. For him to have embraced an act of separation, it is reasoned, would imply that God had a body and carry with it the onerous [or difficult, burdensome] system of reproduction known to animals. Thus the Son was not a part of God's substance, nor was he created out of nothing, for then there would have been a time when he was not. Rather the Son was created by an act of will from the mind of God, one independent of either body or feeling. And thus the stage was set for the grand Council of Nicaea. Here it was declared that Father and Son were one substance while yet being two divided persons."⁴³³⁵ Christian asceticism was Hellenistic in origin, & both it & doceticism, (Doceticism argued that the one (indivisible) Jesus Christ was completely and absolutely divine, and for that reason not a real flesh and blood human being, but was a phantom, human in appearance only).⁴³³⁶ Thus, with both their aversion (or dislike) of the body, as those similar views succeeded in transforming the teachings of the New Testament Church of the first two centuries, concerning the nature of the Father & Son, who at first were anthropomorphic, (or attributing human form or feelings to them as Gods). They later were then able to get many to adopt the views that the Father & Son, were incorporeal (or without a body), invisible, passionless, and ascetic. As deity got de-materialized, & de-passionized, so also the more other beliefs & behavioral issues went far away from divine restraint.⁴³³⁷ Origen's teachings shows that he was influenced by these anti-body views, and struggles to defend the earlier anthropomorphic views, that Celsus noted was what many earlier Christians also believed, when he wrote against them toward the end of the 2nd century. But in Origen's case it seems that the later anti-body views won out.⁴³³⁸

For from the 4th century to the 5th centuries, this dogma was then smothering over the older corporeal deity views, as the Christological Controversy continued to rage & splinter later Christianity. Plus, as different sects' bishops, & later leaders used the Emperors of the Roman Empire to militantly enforce the versions they talked them into accepting & making into creedal laws, sometimes switching back & forth between different versions & changes in the creedal formulas that were debated & argued out in the different theocracy church councils.⁴³³⁹

EARLY CRITICS TOOK ADVANTAGE CONTROVERSIES

The early anti-Christian Celsus, writing against the Christians about A.D. 170-80; used the controversies that were going on between the Jews & the Christians at that time. He knew that many Jewish sects believed in monotheism, (the one God concept). He also knew that the Christians used the Old Testament in order to support their doctrines of Christianity. But he knew that many of the Jews, & other outsiders, looked upon the Christians as being "apostates" from the Jewish religion. So he wrote that if the Christians are ready to pay homage to one son of God, then why not to those officially declared sons of God by legitimate authority? He argued that the Christians had long since sacrificed the monotheism of their spiritual fathers the Jews. Their offense, so it seems to the pagans, was in attempting to ensure (through an iconoclasm directed at the recognized gods) that Jesus would be preserved as god & lord of the cult, unrivaled by any other. In so doing, however, they inadvertently acknowledge the existence of other gods; & it follows for Celsus that if such gods exist, they must exist at the pleasure of the supreme God & are hence worthy of honor-even from the Christians.

Celsus wrote how some among the Christians, such as Marcion, & his disciple Appelles for example, think that the creator is an inferior god. On this point there is considerable disagreement, for while some of the Christians proclaim they have the same god as do the Jews, others insist that there is another god higher than the creator-god and opposed to him. Others teach that the Son came from this higher god. Others admit of a third god-- those, that is to say, who call themselves gnostics. While still others, though calling themselves Christians, want to live according to the laws of the Jews. Christians utterly detest and slander each other constantly with the vilest forms of abuse, for they don't agree with each others' teachings. The early anti-Christian Porphyry, [2nd half of the 3rd cent. A.D.], wrote many things against the early Christians too, for with the help of his studies in Greek philosophy, he took advantage of the controversies that were on the rise, or which were then dividing Christendom into different sects. About a century after the Apologists had responded to a number of early critics, some of the later Christians claimed that they worshiped the same God in principle, or at least they had the same basics concept of the One High God of gods, as He was honored by the Greeks and Romans. In some cases the early Christians adopted precisely the same language to describe God as did pagan intellectuals.

Towards the end of the 2nd century, Theophilus, includes the Father, Son & Holy Ghost in a new name, Trinity, or Triad.⁴³⁴⁰

Tertullian, 145-220, who later joined the Montanist movement some time after the year 200 A.D. He presented the "oneness" of the Godhead as in One Most High God, but who also did not exclude the co-existence of other divine beings in a sort monarchism, through which He did his divine works. Christ and the Father were not the same being as some heretics had claimed, but rather they were two beings. However, in Tertullian's writings, we see him attempting to explain the oneness and the individuality of the "trinity," thus, he was one of the first to introduced dogmatic wording for the trinity, in Latin: Trinitas. He was aware of some of the ideas which were on the rise, & which concerned the nature of the "trinity". One of those ideas was that God wasn't embodied. Rejecting this, he defended the corporealist side of the controversy, stoutly maintaining that God is embodied. But then, despite this, in other areas of his writings, he did not believe that God has a human form, for he nevertheless argued strenuously, that God must be material. "For who will deny that God is a body, although 'God is a Spirit?' For Spirit has a bodily substance of its own kind, in its own form."⁴³⁴¹ He resisted the attempts being made by other immaterialists to Platonize Christian doctrine. He claimed that the teaching of a embodied God was the teaching of the Christian churches of his time, & that they, in turn, derived it from the original apostolic churches. He articulated details of a unified corporealist understanding of their understanding of God. He polemically wrote theological treatises clarifying what he understood was early Christian doctrine on the physical incarnation & the trinity. Unlike Origen who argued that God the Father was incorporeal, Tertullian argued for a physical resurrection, against those led by philosophy to deny bodily resurrection. He presents the Father's corporeality as another reason to believe in the Son's corporeality, & that Christ's physical resurrection is a reason to believe in our physical resurrection. To defend this point further, he wrote, On the Flesh of Christ, how that Christ's flesh was very much human flesh, that human flesh is sacred and a glorious substance. This of course was against what the heretics were claiming about the body being degraded, that matter was evil, & that Christ's corporeality was illusory, rather than actual. Tertullian also used garment themes from the ritualistic evidence of beliefs in a physical resurrection, & the spirit clothed in a body, which was not shameful, but was glorious. Garment themes are thus used in words like clothed in flesh, how Christ cleanses it [the body] of the stain, & the spiritual body invested in a body, is eventually purified. Such gathering of evidence to support the early Christian churches' beliefs in divine-embodiment, would clearly be in contrast with later interpretations of the Resurrection that deny Christ's eternal embodiment, when the Platonic anti-body themes won out with later Christians' versions of a spiritual-resurrection, rather than a physical one.⁴³⁴²

Tertullian, on the use of Trinity as a term, is reported to have wrote: "The mystery of the dispensation is still guarded, which distributes the Unity into a Trinity, placing in their order the three Persons--the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost: three, however, not in condition, but in degree; not in substance, but in form; not in power, but in aspect; yet of one substance, and of one condition, and of one power, inasmuch as He is one God, from whom these degrees and forms and aspect are reckoned, under the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost ...; the Son and in the Holy Ghost, who have the second and third places assigned to them, and who are so closely jointed with the Father in His substance."⁴³⁴³

About 208, during Tertullian's time, he was witness to the Christological Controversy, & notes the diversity of conflicting dogmatic opinions as to how different ones believed about God, the Godhead, Christ & the Father. In responding to the errors of Praxeus, Tertullian gives an response that helps us note some of the conflicting issues to the times. The error of Praxeas, came from Asia (minor) into Rome, & appears to have originate in anxiety to maintain the unity of God; which, he thought could only be done by claiming that the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, were one and the same. That the Father himself descended into the Virgin, was born of her, suffered, and was in a word Jesus Christ. Praxeas' general theory was named by his opponents Patripassions, from another point in his teaching, they were called Monarchians. If Tertullian presents his rival's beliefs right, then Praxeus is reported to have believed that: "He says that the Father Himself came down into the Virgin, was Himself born of her, Himself suffered, indeed was Himself Jesus Christ." (ANF, 3:597, Tertullian, Against Praxeas, chap.1).

Tertullian goes on to respond by showing how Praxeas would to have had to ignores or gone against the Gospels, with his lie, for the scriptures countered Praxeas, when they testified that it was Christ, "the Son of God," that was tempted by Satan, (Matt.4:3, 6), not the Father coming down to be tempted. Moreover that the words of scripture, "Son of God," Tertullian notes is, "surely intimating that God had a Son, even on the testimony of the very Scriptures...” that Satan was forging his temptation from. The very temptation was about Satan challenging Christ to prove that he was “the Son of God,” for “if” so, then the Son of God would be able to command stones to turn into bread, & so forth. Thus, Tertullian uses these passages to show the separateness between God the Father, & God the Son, or Jesus Christ, “the Son of God.” Further on, Tertullian, who had accepted by this time, that the gift of prophecy was amongst the Montanists, complained: “...For after the Bishop of Rome had acknowledged the prophetic gifts of Montanus, Prisca, and Maximilla, and, in consequence of the acknowledgment, had bestowed his peace on the churches of Asia and Phrygia, he, [Praxeas] by importunately urging false accusations against the prophets themselves and their churches, and insisting on the authority of the bishop's predecessors in the see, compelled him to recall the pacific letter which he had issued, as well as to desist from his purpose of acknowledging the said gifts. By this Praxeas did a twofold service for the devil at Rome: he drove away prophecy, and he brought in heresy; he put to flight the Paraclete, and he crucified the Father.” (ANF, 3:597).

Tertullian goes on to explain the type of separation in the “oneness” that would make it so that the error of Praxeas wouldn’t make it so that: “...the Father forsooth was born, and the Father suffered, — God Himself, the Lord Almighty, whom in their preaching they declare to be Jesus Christ.” (ANF, 3:598, Against Praxeas, chap.2). Thus, in response to this, Tertullian tells how they’ve been taught the truth, how that there is one only God, but that this one only God, also has a Son, His Word, who proceeded from Himself. It was Him that was sent by the Father into the Virgin. In other words, Jesus Christ was sent by the Father to be born, to be both Man & God, the Son of Man, & the Son of God, & not the Father coming down to be born. Tertullian testified that this was the rule that had come down to them, from the beginning of the Gospel, before all the heretics! So Tertullian goes on to try to explain the heretical beliefs, & respond to what he thought was the true beliefs, how that “...this heresy, which supposes itself to possess the pure truth, in thinking that one cannot believe in One Only God in any other way than by saying that the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost are the very selfsame Person. As if in this way also one were not All, in that All are of One, by unity (that is) of substance; while the mystery of the dispensation is still guarded, which distributes the Unity into a Trinity, placing in their order the three Persons — the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost: three, however, not in condition, but in degree; not in substance, but in form; not in power, but in aspect; yet of one substance, and of one condition, and of one power, inasmuch as He is one God, from whom these degrees and forms and aspects are reckoned, under the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. How they are susceptible of number without division, will be shown as our treatise proceeds.” (ANF, 3:598, Against Praxeas, chap.2).

Tertullian then goes on to explain & note how believers of his time were wondering about the controversy going on, which different ones like Celsus, (writing against the early Christians about 170-80 A.D.), also noted, that the Christians couldn’t seem to make up their minds about if there was 1, 3, or many gods. If, by 208, these controversies & conflicting opinions were still going on, & they must have been, then it’s no wonder that Tertullian also notes how the majority of believers were startled at the 3 in 1 concept, that their rule of faith withdraws them from the world’s plurality of gods to the one only true God. That although He is the one only God, there was a numerical order to the Trinity, that they assume to be a division of the Unity out of its own self. How that they are constantly charging that they are preachers of 2 gods, & 3 gods, while the credit themselves as being worshippers of the One God. From this, we might note that the controversies about how many “gods” the early Christians worshiped & believed in, was still an on going issue! A polemical debate & controversy that early anti-Christians must have been still laughing about. Meanwhile, Tertullian suggest that the Unity of the Trinity, if rationally considered, constitutes the truth, rather than the heretical version, about their Monarchy, in contrast to how Latins & Greeks understand the pronunciation of the term. Tertullian explains his own views that the term has no other meaning that of single & individual rule, but of which does not preclude Him from having a son. Or precluding that the One government, couldn’t have a son-agent, or whatever agents he might will. So it’s a divine monarchy, or sole empire, held together by 2 who are inseparable, but also who have legions & hosts of angels ministers. Moreover, Tertullian argued, with all those involved, it couldn’t be a monarchy, so how then should God be thought to suffer division and severance in the Son and in the Holy Ghost, who have the 2nd & the 3rd places assigned to them, and who are so closely joined with the Father in His substance, when He suffers no such (division and severance) in the multitude of so many angels? Do you really suppose that Those, who are naturally members of the Father’s own substance, pledges of His love, instruments of His might, nay. His power itself and the entire system of His monarchy, are the overthrow and destruction thereof? You are not right in so thinking.” (ANF, 3:599, Against Praxeas, chap.3). How much of these “substance,” terms being talked about in early Christianity, before the Nicene Creed era?

Tertullian, further on, cites 1 Cor. 15:24-25, 27-28, to point out how: “...Now, from this one passage of the epistle of the inspired apostle, we have been already able to show that the Father and the Son are two separate Persons, not only by the mention of their separate names as Father and the Son, but also by the fact that He who delivered up the kingdom, and He to whom it is delivered up—and in like manner. He who subjected (all things), and He to whom they were subjected—must necessarily be two different Beings.” (ANF, 3:600, Against Praxeas, chap. 4).

Tertullian presents other passages that suggest that Christ pre-existed, & that because the scriptures speak in plural phrases, this shows that God the Father was not alone in creation, otherwise He would have said ‘Let me make man in my own image,’ rather than ‘Let us,’ in ‘our.’” (ANF, 3:600-6). After some more examples, scripture citing at length, & countering some of the heretics, he eventually wrote: “I confess that I call God and His Word — the Father and His Son — two.” He goes on with more analogies, though root & tree are distinctly 2 things, as are fountain & river, sun & ray, 2 forms, but coherent ones. Everything which proceeds from something else must needs be 2nd but without separated. “Where, however, there is a second, there must be two; and where there is a third, there must be three. Now the Spirit indeed is third from God and the Son;... In like manner the Trinity, flowing down from the Father through intertwined and connected steps, does not at all disturb the Monarchy, whilst it at the same time guards the state of the Economy, [note 14: Or dispensation of the divine tripersonality.] (ANF, 3:603, Against Praxeas, chap. 8). From Tertullian, it seems that we see in him an attempt to try to explain how God the Father & his Son Jesus Christ, with the Holy Ghost, could be 3 separated gods, distinct from each other, so that the Father, or the Holy Ghost weren’t born, didn’t suffer on the cross, etc. While they also were one in another sense, such as in the oneness of a divine empire, with the Father above the Son, & the Son above the Holy Ghost.

Tertullian: “Bear always in mind that this is the rule of faith which I profess; by it I testify that the Father, and the Son, and the Spirit are inseparable from each other, and so will you know in what sense this is said. Now, observe, my assertion is that the Father is one, and the Son one, and the Spirit one, and that They are distinct from Each Other. This statement is taken in a wrong sense by every uneducated as well as every perversely disposed person, as if it predicated a diversity, in such a sense as to imply a separation among the Father, and the Son, and the Spirit. I am, moreover, obliged to say this, when (extolling the Monarchy at the expense of the Economy) they contend for the identity of the Father and Son and Spirit, that it is not by way of diversity that the Son differs from the Father, but by distribution: it is not by division that He is different, but by distinction; because the Father is not the same as the Son, since they differ one from the other in the mode of their being. For the Father is the entire substance, but the Son is a derivation and portion of the whole, as He Himself acknowledges: "My Father is greater than I." ...Thus the Father is distinct from the Son, being greater than the Son, inasmuch as He who begets is one, and He is begotten is another; He, too, who sends is one, and He who is sent is another; and He, again, who makes is one, and He through whom the thing is made is another...." (ANF, 3:603-4, Against Praxeas, chaps. 8-9).

Tertullian continued with more scriptures & reasoning about how the Father & Son are distinct from each other, such as their names, Father and Son. "Besides, does not the very fact that they have the distinct names of Father and Son amount to a declaration that they are distinct in personality?" (ANF, 3:604, chap.9).

As the Christological Controversy continued to cloud the earlier Christian beliefs about what the Godhead was like, we see in Tertullian, beginnings of language that attempts to try to express the Godhead's oneness, but also their distinctness, for he argues against "Monarchians" dogma that tried to claim that the Father Himself, made Himself a Son to Himself. Tertullian reasons that both of them can't by themselves, become so related to themselves. For a father must needs have a son, in order to be a father, & so likewise a son, to be a son, must have a father. So, Tertullian continued to argue & reason out of scriptures, how they are distinct & not the same one being. For the Father is not the son, & the son is not the Father, for they are separate personalities, & not the same person. However, his expressions of their distinction & scriptural representation of their distinction, as noted here, shows Tertullian's efforts to deal with different issues brought up in the Christological controversy, which crashed into the church, but was followed by another wave, the Trinitarian controversy. So while that earlier wave was doing its damage, it would be mingled in with the following wave. For as Tertullian shows that there are 3 persons in the Trinity, in the scriptural ways that he did, this was to later be studiously avoided by the orthodox, during the Trinitarian Controversy. For when it raged on, many of the later church Fathers knew about these passages of scriptures, but insisted on the use of phrases not in the scriptures. So such representations of distinction, such as used by Tertullian, were avoided by those that used more technical unscriptural expressions that tried to explain what was later unexplainable, how the Trinity could be 3 in 1, or 1 in 3. Tertullian had separated the 3 in his responses to the earlier "heretics," but then was struggling to also bring in terms that shows he was headed, with others, towards what would later be hammered out during the Trinitarian controversy of 325 A.D., & after, during the Nicene Creed era. For in other areas of his writings, so we are told, Tertullian calls the Father the whole substance, the Son a derivation from or portion of the whole. He also taught the Son's consubstantiality with the Father—equal to Him and inseparable from him. But it wasn't time, yet, for such technical phrases to be employed by the majority of different church leaders, in attempting to explain what would become orthodox ideas & formulas about the Trinity. Consequently, that process of coming up with similar terms, & phrases, we see must have been in the process of being developed by different ones during Tertullian's time, & by him too, & in other areas of his writings.⁴³⁴⁴ The Trinitarian controversial wave, was seen to be on its way in. As it neared, the affect began to be felt, changes in the Christological controversies also seem to include pre-Nicene Creed, pre-Trinity indicators, that more of this type of controversy was there mixing up with Christological issues, & would peak, not too far in the future, at the Council of Nicea, 325. But before that, different ones like "Dionysius of Alexandria (c. A.D. 264) wrote, "If from the fact that there are three hypostases [essential parts], they say that they are divided, there are three whether they like it or no, or else, let them get rid of the divine Trinity altogether." [ANF, 6:94, cited later by Athanasius.] In other words, he [Dionysius] argued, there is either a trinity or there is not—but do not give me any nonsense that they are three separate, distinct persons yet somehow only one being or substance."⁴³⁴⁵ This was about 59 years before 325, so the controversy was already causing contentions in different areas of Christendom.

Novatian, 210-280, in referencing John 10:30, about "I and the Father are one" he interprets: "He [Christ] adds, and says, "We are," not "I am," so as to show, by the fact of His saying "I and the Father are," that they are two persons. Moreover, that He says one, has reference to the agreement, and to the identity of judgment, and to the loving association itself, as reasonably the Father and Son are one in agreement, in love, and in affection". Treatise Concerning the Trinity, 27.⁴³⁴⁶

The Christian apologist Theophilus of Antioch (Ad Autol. 1.3-4) described God in similar ways as the pagans by claiming that God was an immaterial, timeless, & impassible, divine being, who is known through the mind alone. In some cases this was to become a keystone of Christian apologetics, for it served to establish a decisive link to the Greek spiritual & intellectual tradition.

Melito, [died 197?], was a prominent second century Christian that taught that God is embodied, or corporeal. Origen identified Melito as teaching such things, but disagreed with his teachings that God has a humanlike body, for Origen sided with the incorporeal God side of the issue, during the third century.⁴³⁴⁷ 425, Gennadius, affirmed Melito was responsible for a sect of early Christians that followed Melito's beliefs that the body of man is made in the image of God. Thus, with the triumph of the incorporeal God dogma over embodiment, did these later Christians get rid of their rivals' writings? Thought policed & caused the disappearance of their books? Could they have purged & destroyed in the flames, works that argued for a corporeal God, just as later Christian works would end up being burned, during later days of the triumphing later Christian sects, hunting down those decreed as heretics?⁴³⁴⁸

The 3rd century early Christian apocryphal (widely circulated but unlikely to be true), Gospel of Bartholomew, describes what might be physical-aspects of God the Father, after he is said to have appeared to Mary, to tell her that she will have his son. Thus, God the Father was one in the likeness of an angel, but his face was incomprehensible, to the point where she was not able to endure the sight of him. He had a garment on, a right hand, ate some of a loaf of bread, handed over some to Mary for her to eat. He had a left hand, drank wine from a cup, handed it over to Mary to also drink.⁴³⁴⁹ Such a story about a vision of God-the-Father, being in the form of a man, though perhaps glorious to look at, must have not been popular with those who taught that God the Father was incorporeal.

The early critic Porphyry's strategy was to sever the link between Christianity and Hellenism by showing that Christians had abandoned the worship of this God in favor of the worship of Christ.

In Porphyry's "Philosophy from Oracles", he attacked the early Christians for believing in doctrines beyond that which Jesus had taught. He says that there is one God, and even Jesus knew this and worshiped this God, teaching others also to venerate this one God. His teachings directed others' attention to the one God. According to Porphyry, it was Christ's disciples who had fallen into error when they taught others to worship Jesus. Thus Hecate said that Jesus was a most devout man, and that his soul, like the souls of the other devout men, was endowed after death with the immortality it deserved; and that Christians in their ignorance worship this soul (Civ. Dei 19.23). The main elements of Porphyry's argument are preserved in St. Augustine's work: City of God. Porphyry also used the Old and New Testament writings of his time, what ever might have been available to him, the canon not yet established yet. He may have even used portions of scriptures like Mark 12:29, where Jesus quotes Moses (Duet.6:4-5). In so doing this, Porphyry may have attempted to show the early Christians that Christ taught that there was one God.

Julian "the apostate" [born 331 C.E.], turned away from Christianity to paganism. He became a bitter rival against the Christians of his time, & as Emperor of Rome, he had great power, which he abused against the Christians, (361-63 C.E.). Julian, used a selective method, for he selected passages of scriptures out of the Christians' own books of scriptures, & then used these passages to argue against the early Christians. He knew the writings of the ancient Christians, having been taught by a bishop named Eusebius, at Nicomedia, 60 miles from Constantinople in his early youth. And later, another Christian teacher named Hasecebolius. However, it was the philosopher Maximus of Ephesus who helped in bringing him out of Christianity into the religions of the Greek & Roman "gods". Julian knew that one of the reasons why Christ was rejected by many of the Jews, was because he had claimed divine honors for himself as a God, and also as the Son of God who was one with the Most High Father God. (John 10:30-39).

Had these early critics really known the scriptures, perhaps having studied copies of some that had been confiscated from early Christians, during days of persecutions, some of which were burned, others perhaps preserved so as to different critics find faults with them. If so, they must have known of the different confrontations which Christ had with the different Jews, who confronted Christ about his claims to being the Messiah, the "anointed one", the "Son of God" & even a God. And yet, some of these early anti-Christians, at times, may have ignored this in order to attack at different angles the other early Christians' claims. Thus, some of the early critics claimed that the apostles were the ones who had doctrinally exalted and deified Christ. While at the same time the early critics may have known that even Christ himself, had claimed to be divine, but that also, Christ taught that he was sent by another God, who was His Father, the Most High God. Julian and Porphyry had heard or read how that Jesus had claimed divine honors. However, to them, such a notion was a fabrication of his followers, not the teachings of Jesus, & with the help of selected passages of scripture they made their cases. Julian claimed that Moses had taught that there was only one God, & that the earliest followers of Christ had falsely claimed that Jesus was another God besides the Most High God. Julian attempted to show that Jesus was just a man like any other. Earlier, Celsus had attempted to do the same thing, & even mocked Christ, by claiming that he was a weak drunkard, & a beggar who was a leader of a robber band who had followers who betrayed him in the end.⁴³⁵⁰

340-397, St. Ambrose of Milan, like Origen & others earlier, claimed that the passages in the Bible of their times, that suggested the physical aspects of deity, or anthropomorphism, these were figurative. Augustine, upon hearing Ambrose, agreed & finally converted, because he rejected the Christians maintaining the old corporeal version of the Christians' deity. Augustine mentions hearing one or two parts of the Old Testament being explained, & often allegorically. "...But so soon as I understood, withal, that man made "after the image of Him that created him" was not so understood by Thy spiritual sons . . . as though they believed and imagined Thee to be bounded by human form..."⁴³⁵¹ Like Origen, earlier, Augustine complains & classes the Christians of his time as "weak of our faith, who ... picture God to themselves in human form."⁴³⁵²

Thus, it was because there were those who were also Platonized Christians of his time, that taught an incorporeal version of God, when taught by them, this was more acceptable to him, & thus, he later became a Christian, about 386. Becoming a teacher, he went to Italy, to Rome & then to Milan & fell under the influence of Bishop Ambrose & became acquainted with Latin translations of Platonist writings. From the Greek philosopher, he learned of a god that was more to his liking, a "purely spiritual being," totally immaterial, invisible, and incorporeal. Augustine's acceptance of the Platonized Christian version of an immaterial God, was becoming the prevailing belief amongst many Christians of his time, so he wasn't alone in accepting this later version of what God was said to be like. It was a non-scriptural belief, that would shape later Christians' beliefs, & influence later versions of deification. In some areas, it would be enforced through thought policing tactics, during Augustine's time. Plus, on down to later centuries to our present day. Other terms that is used by scholars on the physical & immaterial debates going on during the early centuries of Christianity, as to if God could take on a body, or not, is Anthropomorphism, & also Anthropomorphites, or those who ascribe to the Supreme Being the human qualities of form, organs, operations, human nature, physical image like unto human form.

399, John Cassian, monk, records that Theophilus, Bishop of Alexandria, sent a letter to the Egyptian churches, & one aspect of it was to condemned anthropomorphism. The letter was bitterly received by almost every sort of monk throughout all Egypt. Most of the older monks asserted that the bishop was to be condemned as someone corrupted by the most serious heresy. Plus, someone who opposed the ideas of scripture, who denied that God was of human shape. This, despite the clear scriptural evidence that Adam was created in God's image. The monks in Scete, & all the priests, except Paphnutius, an Origenist (Origen taught that God the Father was incorporeal), in charge of Cassian's church, all denounced the letter. Those in charge of the 3 other churches suppressed the letter, not allowing it to even be read publically to the assemblies. Monk Serapion struggled with accepting the view that God is not embodied. He had long lived a life of austerity, and the harsh desert discipline, & now an aged man, in the front ranks of the monks, he still held to the old beliefs that God is embodied. This, despite efforts of Paphnutis to dissuade him otherwise. The new concept was newfangled, or derogatory newly developed and unfamiliar to him or his predecessors who didn't teach it, as he didn't. Photinus, an anti-corporeal deacon, visited Cassian's community in Scete to support the promotion of the dogma & condemnation of the older view. Paphnutis & Photinus teamed up & in a gathering of the brethren asked Photinus how the Catholic churches of the East interpreted Genesis 1:26, about God saying: "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness." He answered that they were unanimous in their understanding that it was not in an earthly, literal sense, but was spiritually. Photinus attempted to show to Serapion the "truth" of this new dogma. Finally, Serapion gave in, but became confused, for he sensed that the human image of God, which he used to draw before him as he prayed was now gone from his heart. Tearfully he sobbed, threw himself on the ground and cried out: "Ah the misfortune! They've taken my God away from me. I have no one to hold on to, and I don't know whom to adore or to address."⁴³⁵³

393-458, Theodoret of Cyrus, an influential theologian of the School of Antioch, biblical commentator, bishop of Cyrrhus, 423–457. He wrote against “heresy” in chapter IX of his Ecclesiastical History, (Book IV), titled: “Of the heresy of the Audiani.” He condemned the literal interpretation of Genesis 1:26, by “Audaeus” (Audiani, sometimes Vadiani, or Audiud of Edessa), who is charged with heresy for having understood the passage to mean that “...the Divine Being to have a human form, and conjectured it to be enveloped in bodily parts; for Holy Scripture frequently describes the divine operations under the name of human parts, since by these means the providence of God is made more easily intelligible to minds incapable of perceiving any immaterial ideas....” 10th century, Anthropomorphism was revived in northern Italy, but was effectually suppressed by the bishops, notably by Ratherius, bishop of Verona.⁴³⁵⁴

EARLY CHRISTIANS BEFORE THE NICENE CREED ERA

Justin Martyr, 110–165, while at Rome during the reign of Emperor Antoninus Pius, [138–161 A.D.], Justin wrote his 1st Apology, attempting to explain to the Emperor the basic beliefs & positions of the early Christians of that time. Justin taught that the Son is numerically distinct from the Father and, for him, one of the three men in Genesis 18 and 19. Justin refutes the charge that the Christians are “atheists” because they refused to worship the gods of the Romans. Justin says that when it comes to the gods of pagans, & barbarians, etc., then they were atheists. However, they were not atheists when it comes to the most true God, the Father of righteousness, temperance & the other virtues, who is free from all impurity. But both Him, & the Son (who came forth from Him & taught us these things, & the host of the other good angels who follow & are made like to Him), & the prophetic Spirit, we worship & adore. Justin seems to speak of 3 beings, or Gods, plus other holy beings, or the “other good angels”. He also goes on to explain to the Emperor that idol worship, & the forms of images made by man’s hands are inspired by demons. It is insulting to God, who, having ineffable glory & form, thus gets His name attached to things that are corruptible, & require constant service, and need to be repaired by craftsmen.

Justin also taught that Christ was the first-born in heaven, he also came down & was born as man. He also wrote against the Jewish monotheism, which had helped cause the rejection of Christ. Christ was considered “another god” or 2nd God besides the Father. The Jews were of the opinion that it was the Father of the universe who spoke to Moses. Justin believed it was the Son of God who spoke to them. In his Dialogue With Trypho, Justin mentions “one God”, but then later goes on to speak of “another God” besides this “one God.” For the Jew Trypho asks if there is another God besides the Maker of all things, who was born through the Virgin, & thus became man? Justin used the Old Testament predictions in his response and eventually shows that there was another God besides the Maker of all things.⁴³⁵⁵ Trypho objected, and later on, He asked for more proof for this other God-Jesus Christ, who is said to have become a man through birth. Trypho had taken the position that many Jews of that time held, which was basically monotheistic, (the belief in one God). While Justin took the position that there was another God besides the Most High Maker of all things, and that this other God was Jesus Christ.

Irenaeus, 120–203, wrote against the “Heresies” of his time, [writing about 180–200 A.D.] Thus, some of his books might be considered as anti-heretical. Irenaeus seemed to have believed in a Godhead that was similar to Tertullian’s view, that of monarchism. There was one Most High God, but there was also the Son of God. In his book against the Heretics, Irenaeus, like Justin, presented the pre-Nicene creed concepts of One Most High God, the Father. But also, that of another God who does the pleasure of the Father, who performs the will of the Father, & who is a visible witness of & for the Father. But who is not God the Father, but His Son, Jesus the Christ. Again hinting to a sort of monarchism, in which there is only one most High God, but other gods who do the will & work of & for that Most High God of gods. Irenaeus warned against the Valentinian Gnostics, who he charges do not know what God is, but that they imagine that their version of God has him sitting after the fashion of a man, and is contained within bounds, but does not contain. In Valentinian dogma, the higher God, “the One,” was not alone, for there was a lower demiurge or creator god who was responsible for the evil of the material world. Now, it wasn’t like there was too much different between the different versions of anthropomorphism of Irenaeus & the Valentinian, for they both posited a high God as “the One” and a lower physical God in their versions. The issues he had with them, was to try to show that it was the Father who was the creator.⁴³⁵⁶ The human form was fashioned by the Creator after His own image, with His own hands, & power, he gave man’s frame “...the outline of His own form, that the visible appearance too should be godlike– for it was an image of God that man was fashioned and sent on earth....”⁴³⁵⁷ Irenaeus argued that the pre-Christian time prophets of old had known of & foretold of Christ. Abraham received the revelation from the Son Himself. The Jews had therefore departed from God, in not receiving His Word, imagining that they can know the Father apart from Himself, without Christ the Word, or without the Son. Thus, they were ignorant that it was that God who spake in human shape to Abraham & Moses.⁴³⁵⁸

The Shepherd of Hermas [written from A.D. 139 through A.D. 154], was a document that was included in the canon of official Biblical scriptures until near the end of the 5th century A.D., when it was deleted by the council of the Roman Catholic Church. The Shepherd of Hermas “alludes to the separate nature of the three beings of the Godhead.”⁴³⁵⁹

Earlier Celsus had mocked the Christians’ beliefs in general at times, by lumping them under one massive generalization. In so doing this, he attacked them as a whole by saying that “the Christians” have their Most High Father Gods who have the other sons of these fathers who fight their battles for them.

Novatian, Hippolytus & Tixeront (citing early writers) show how firmly they held to the true conception of the Father & the Son. Novatian knew that the scripture everywhere showed Christ to be born of the Father, by whom all things were made & without whom nothing was made, who always has obeyed, & obeys the Father. And that Christ always has power over all things, but only as it is delivered, & granted by the Father for him to have.

Jesus Christ distinction is acknowledge by many of these early Church Fathers. Hippolytus tells us that Noetus was an “anti-Christ” & a false teacher who attempted to pervert the right ways of the Church. He tried to introduce the pagan belief into the Christians’ beliefs of the trinity. (Hippolytus’s De Antichristo).

Some scholars shows that the classical trinity, as we have it in the Nicene Creed era, & later, is not found in the apostolic period, or in the early second century, either. In writing about the Apostolic Fathers they are not concerned with no trinitarian doctrine & are not aware of a trinitarian problem. Other scholars, tell us that in the writings of the 2nd century A.D., from the Apostolic Fathers we don’t see no doctrine of the Trinity. For the Trinity in the strict sense there is of course no sign, although the Church’s triadic formula left its mark everywhere. The Church had to wait for more than three hundred years for a final synthesis, for not until the Council of Constantinople (381) was the formula of one God existing in three coequal Persons formally ratified. Another suggests that the formulation ‘one God in 3 persons’ was not solidly established, certainly not fully assimilated into Christian life & its profession of faith, prior to the end of the 4th century. A.D. Among the Apostolic Fathers, there had been nothing even remotely approaching such mentality challenging formulas or perspective of conflicting dogmas.

Another writer says that the early Church was influenced by Platonism, and monotheistic Judaism. But also in addition, even before the canonization of the New Testament books, the apostolic traditions and popular faith of the church were indelibly marked by the notion of a plurality of divine persons. The early catechetical and liturgical formulas refer to the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ, or to the Father the Creator, his Son Jesus Christ, and the Holy Spirit. These twofold and threefold patterns are evident within the New Testament itself.⁴³⁶⁰ No doctrine of the Trinity in the Nicene sense is present in the New Testament. However, the threefold pattern is evident throughout, in spite of the fact that there is usually nothing in the context to demand it. The conclusion seems obvious: the idea of triadic manifestation of the Godhead was present from the earliest period as part of Christian piety and thinking. But no steps were taken to work through the implications of this idea and to arrive at a cohesive doctrine of God. The triadic patterns supplies the raw data from which the more developed descriptions of the Christian doctrine of God will come.

Thus, there is no doctrine of the Trinity in the strict sense in the Apostolic Fathers, but the Trinitarian formulas are apparent. The witness of this collection of writings to a Christian doctrine of God is slight and provides no advance in synthesis or theological construction beyond the biblical materials.

"The Trinity doctrine is not contained in the New Testament, all the passages which seem to involve it being spurious; but it forms an integral part of almost all Gnostic systems, where it either appears as three abstract principles, or as the family relation of Father, Mother, and Child, viewed as one.... The Trinity idea of God as a divine unity of Father, Mother, and Christ-child was retained among the Oriental Christians to the days of the rise of Mohammedanism."⁴³⁶¹

"The great attraction of Christianity for the men of the third and fourth centuries was, not its doctrines of Atonement and Redemption, but its Monotheism,... The Church teachers of the fourth century very frequently appeal to Philo, to Porphyry, to Plotinus, and other Neo-Platonists, in their belief... [that] had constructed a kind of doctrine of the Trinity."⁴³⁶² The point here being, that it was apostate influences from earlier apostasies, the apostasy amongst the Israelites, that Philo inherited. Plus, the apostasy amongst the Greeks, that the Greek philosophers inherited, that combined to produce the unscriptural, uninspired, confusing, & incomprehensible "doctrine" of the trinity, that tried to make 3 Gods into a monotheistic-oneness, without body, parts or passions. This was another consequence, of another apostasy that inherited the products of these earlier apostasies, during the Great Apostasy of later Christendom, when true prophets, & apostles, were no longer heard of.⁴³⁶³

Some pagans seemed to believe that the Christians' worship of Jesus seemed to compromised the belief in the oneness of God. This was a significant insight into the character of the Christian tradition. For though Christian thinking was a long way from the time when Christ would be declared 'of the same substance' (homouousios) as God, & eventually one with the Father. The seeds of that development were apparent to pagan observers in the middle of the second century, 150 years before the Council of Nicaea (325 C.E.), when the view that Jesus was equal to God the Father was proclaimed. Thus, in some ways, we can detect early warning signs of this departure away from the three Gods towards a gradual acceptance on the part of many later Christians who began to settle for the 3 in 1 concepts. Eventually these conflicting concepts were later enforced by religious--political decrees during the Nicene Creed era around 325 A.D., & after.

Before the Council of Nicaea, though some have tried to suggest otherwise, the church Fathers didn't all profess the doctrine stated in the Nicene Creed. Some had said that the Father, Son, & Holy Ghost were only different names for different manifestations of one Supreme Being. While others, that they were numerical distinction of the three Persons.⁴³⁶⁴

THE NICENE CREED ERA has been marked as being the time frame for when the true nature of the Godhead was lost and distorted, or when the Arian vrs. Athanasius controversy exploded on the scene & caused more disunity in the churches. When formulas & contentions over word meanings of words used to describe the nature of the Godhead was forced upon different bishops from different areas of the churches. When extra-biblical creeds were signed into law, under the pressures of different Emperors of this era. When different warring factions of later Christians argued who were heretical, who was "orthodoxy" & or of the true universal "Catholic" faith, or not.

Arius, (born in Lybia, 250 or 256–336), head of one of the Alexandrian churches, entrusted with explanation of scriptures, (& a disciple of the martyr Lucian, head of the theological school of Antioch). Because he was vilified as a heretic, most of the writings of Arius were burned, so his beliefs are reconstructed from his rivals, & might contain polemical twists in their presentation of him. Thus, a summation of the basics of what Arius taught: The Son of God, did not exist from all eternity, but was merely the first born of created men. If the Father begot the Son, then the Son would have a beginning & there would be a time when the Son was not. The Father is not begotten, but the Son is, hence there's a difference between them, for the Son had a beginning, while the Father not. He who has a beginning is not an infinite perfect being, & is not properly the Son of God. Thus, only the Father is God, while the Son is the first and the principal creature that the Father has produced as with all other creatures, & thus is called the first born of all creation because he surpasses all other creatures. If one wished to call the Son the name of God, it's because he excelled all other creatures & is adopted Son of God. But by this adoption, he was created out of nothing & not of divine substance, or that he has any real participation with divinity, and real resemblance with divinity. God is one--eternal--not born, and cannot have an equal.⁴³⁶⁵

The rival of Arius, & Arianism, was at that time a deacon to Bishop Alexander of Alexandria, Athanasius, (296, 298–373), who later became a Bishop of Alexandria. They held to the belief that Jesus was divine, was not subordinated to the Father, but a co-equal from all eternity with the Father.

312, Bishop Alexander, heard Arius & his rivals in a meeting of the clergy of Alexandria. Arius denied that the Son was co-eternal with the Father, & subordinated the Son to the Father. The bishop forbade him to teach it, but Arius kept going, with oral & written discussions. Thus, the bishop convoked about 100 bishops from Egypt & Lybia to a council in Alexandria, 321. They condemned & excommunicated Arius as heretical, & his followers, & had to give up his church. He left there & went to Palestine, where he was received by Eusebius of Caesarea the Historian, who held similar opinions. While another Eusebius of Nicomedia, was in complete agreement with Arius.⁴³⁶⁶ The word was spread to recruit other bishops of the Orient to be in favor with Arius, & a council was gathered to try to get the bishops to receive Arius into their communion of the Church. Mean while, their rivals, Bishop Alexander sent letters to his colleagues, the bishops, and warned them of perverse men teaching apostate doctrines, how Arius got Eusebius, bishop of Nicomedia as an ally, to write letters in favor of him, thus making himself a patron apostate in spreading their heretical doctrines. So if Eusebius should write them, pay no attention to him.⁴³⁶⁷

CONSTANTINE I (the Great), (274-337), Emperor of Rome, (reign 307-337), while still a pagan, & not yet baptized a Christian, for he waited until near his death to finally be baptized. While also being a murderer of different ones, even family members, in his quest for more power. (Twice married, he murdered Crispis, his son by his first wife, in 326. Had his 2nd wife drown, his 11 year old nephew & brother-in-law both killed). While acting as pontifex maximus, pagan cult leader, worshiper of Zeus, that carried out traditional Roman cult ceremonies. While using pagan magical formulas to protect crops, & to heal disease. While continuing to use vague monotheistic language that any pagans could accept. While not even a Christian theologian, & not familiar with details of Christian doctrine & beliefs, except a few. While not even ordained or chosen to be in any type of clerical Christian office or bishopric. While claiming to have seen a vision of Christ, & used a version of the cross symbol to militantly defeat his rivals, if such stories are not just lore. While perhaps thinking himself to be "a god," as many Roman Emperors did, with their own Roman versions of pagan deification. Constantine took it upon himself to correct the Christian priesthood when they err. Took it upon himself to decree into law, Christian beliefs concerning the 3 in 1, 1 in 3 Godhead. Later bribed with money & gifts, & had white robes given to pagans to become Christians, in-name- only. Forced bishops to sign the Nicene Creed under Emperor threats of banishments, property confiscations, their lives, & loss of their clerical positions. Forgetting the Edict of Milan, he thought policed & took away religious freedoms of heretical sects, & finally ordered the destruction of their conventicles, & prohibited heretical meetings. This was the type of man, uninspired, not a prophet, or apostle, but who ended up having so much influence on later generations of Christians in many lands, down through the centuries. But Constantine also exempted Church realty from taxation, after the churches had been destroyed, church property confiscated earlier, during times of persecutions. He was impressed with most Christians' morality, and conduct, and hoped this new religion would purify Roman morals, regenerate marriage and the family, and allay (or diminish or end), the fever of class war. Despite how earlier anti-Christian charges had claimed early Christians were immoral, taking part in clandestine orgies, & destroyed families. Constantine also gave money to needy congregations, built several churches in Constantinople & elsewhere. Following the signing of the Nicene Creed, he awarded presents to each according to their station, gave letters to be presented to the proper officers of their provinces. These letters order that a quantity of corn be put at the disposition of the churches every year for the sustaining of the churches' widows, virgins, & the poor. So how much of his 'good intentions,' if any, & hopes to unify his Empire, might tip the scales in the balance in the other direction, in how he might be judged? Whatever might be the verdict, good out weighing the bad, or visa-versa, he was one of the most influential characters in Christendom's history! He caused millions of later generations Christians to inherit his, & the Nicene Council's conflicting & contentiously argued out versions of uninspired, unscriptural, pagan influenced creedal formulas! Ones with unscriptural wordings, that distorted & ever after confused the simple & plain understandings of the Godhead, into confusing & contradictory terms. This, in contrast to the simple understandings about Christ, the Father & Holy Spirit that is still contained & has survived in what scriptures that came down to us today, though those scriptures have also been tampered with, as noted earlier. But things are ill products of ages of apostasies.⁴³⁶⁸

312, Constantine (reign 307–337), became sole emperor of the Western part of the Empire, after his victory over Maxentius at the Milvian bridge. In 313, Licinius became sole emperor of the Roman Orient in the East, after defeating his rival, & had married Constantia, the sister of Constantine. Constantine sought to invoke & credit Christ for his victory, and claims to have had a dream, vision, or some type of manifestation of the God of the Christians, as by way of a sign in the western sky of a flaming cross, by which sign he was told in so many words heard, that by the sign of the cross, he would conquer. Eusebius give little details of this, while Lactantius relates more of the details, claiming that Constantine, in a dream from Christ, was commanded to place a monogram XP (Chr) on the shields of his troops. Eusebius, writing a few years later, claims that the Savior appeared to Constantine, who told him to make a banner, the labarum, in the form of a cross to be carried by his troops. These alleged events nonetheless were favorable to the early Christians, as Constantine, (still a pagan monotheistic worshiper of the invincible sun god (sol invictus), not yet baptized a Christian), began to pursue a policy that certain Christian sects began to benefitted from. But these benefits were more in physical aspects, while they didn't benefit so much in spiritual aspects. For in time, Constantine took it upon himself to interfere in the formulas argued over by different rival Christian sects involved in the Trinitarian Controversy before & after 325.⁴³⁶⁹

315—325, & beyond, with the spiritual gifts almost gone, with no scripture producing prophets & apostles to give current revelation for that time, the Emperors of the Roman Empire sought to become the divine revelators for the Christian communities in disarray, continual splintering off into rival sects & going in & out of one controversy after another, sometimes with numerous ones going on at once. The Trinitarian Controversy was going on, and the Emperor got involved in attempting to resolve the disunity by having them agree, and sign the Nicene Creed. As the rivalries continued he resorted to force, threats, edicts, sending in his troops, making official doctrines & policies for the Christians of his Empire to follow, believe, & comply to or they could be exiled, banished, or worse. Constantine, still an un-baptized non-Christian pagan, through tyrannical acts of murders on his own family members, & advisors, he was thus someone that the clerical leaders were forced to have to agree with, or they'd face the might of his Imperial resolve to follow through with his threats. His rivals, or those who betrayed, displeased, disobeyed, even if family members, or who were thought to be rivals to his imperial position, could be arrested, imprisoned, drowned in a hot bath, & strangled.⁴³⁷⁰

But, inconsistently, Constantine, seemingly alright with being a murderer, was strict on his chastity laws, when he gained power over the church. These laws said that a grown female that wished to marry, her guardian must present proof of her virginity. If her guardian had seduced her, while she was growing up, he was to be deported & his property confiscated. Rapists were burned alive. If a man took a girl against her parents' wishes, he could no longer marry her, even if she was willing. Instead, her acquiescence rendered her liable to be burned alive! If nurses had encouraged girls to elope, they were to have boiling lead poured down their throats, while someone of either sex that aided the lover, was to be burned alive. Seduction was like ritual impurity & thus couldn't be cleansed. If the parents of the seduced, obstructed justice by concealing the crime, they were liable for deportation.⁴³⁷¹

We should also keep in mind that the Nicene creed era also includes debates & polemical discussion about other issues too. The controversy raged well into later centuries. For the different phrases that came out of the Nicene creed era did not settle the issues. The phrase from the substance (ousia) of the Father and homoousios with the Father. Both are said to be "unscriptural" and were employed with some reluctance. Some of the councils which followed after 325 attempted to move away from the Nicene creed by producing moderate formulas, that were still critical of Arianism. But which formulas omitted the phrase "homoousios". The controversy started when Bishop Alexander of Alexandria in northern Africa near Egypt, one day in a meeting of his presbyters & other clergy under him, began philosophizing about the subject of the Trinity with debates and clever arguments. Arius was one of the presbyters who was skilled in dialectic.

He took the opposite position and they all attempted to out do each other by coming up with the most clever arguments that they could. The controversy spread until it had divided the different Christian into warring factions. The Emperor Constantine wrote to both sides telling them that such arguments ought to be kept locked away in their own minds, rather than made known to the public. For who would be able to really understand such advanced and puzzling subjects?

THE COUNCIL OF NICAEEA, 325 AD

One of the most influential church councils in Christian history was held at Nicaea, or what is now the Turkish city of Iznik, southeast of Istanbul, across the sea of Marmonra. 318 bishops were present, 6 from the West. Debates were already going on as the interactions with different philosophers, & some pagans, intermingled along the streets, to debate different issues. From different areas came survivals of the Great Persecution, 2 Coptic bishops, who had their right eyes dug out, the empty socket seared with a red-hot iron. From Neocaesarea, a border fortress on the Euphrates river, came a bishop whose hands were paralyzed by a scorching from, again, red hot iron. Others had been deprived of their right arm. Ascetics gathered too, Jacob, bishop of Nisibis, a hermit who, for years, lived in the mountains, he was clothed in rough goat-hair cloak, perhaps symbolic for his ascetic life. Bishop of Alexandria, Alexander was there, with his deacon Athanasius, who would rise to one of the main stars, or villains of the whole drama, depending on which sources, pro or rival that is considered. He became the Bishop when Alexander died in 328. Another shining star, or snake, (again depending on the source, pro or critic), was Arius.⁴³⁷²

Eventually the Emperor had to summon them and others together for what we now call the Council of Nicaea, 325. While they were waiting for different Christians to gathering together, there was a number of preliminary discussions in which different Christians skilled in the art of dialectic, put forth different points of view. During this, a laymen with a clear head, stood up and rebuked them, saying that Christ and the Apostles did not give to us the true doctrine through the arts of dialectic, but rather straightforward knowledge preserved by faith and good works. They were flabbergasted at this, and then agreed that he was right, but they still continued to work out the creed through the dialectical art & philosophized formulas.

In the end, it was the Emperor who was the first to bear witness to the correctness of the creed. Eusebius says that Constantine urged everyone to come to the same opinion and sign the statement of dogmas and to agree with each other by signing a statement which would put in a single term that had been added. It was the word homoousion. He went on to explain what it meant, as it was agreed on in the committee. And yet the final verdict was that the thing was really incomprehensible. Eusebius says that the emperor Constantine then philosophized and the Bishops in order to explain the word homoousios. "We are well aware that the Bishops and writers of ancient times when discussing the theology of the Father and the Son never used the word homoousios." ⁴³⁷³ Here we see that they acknowledged the fact that earlier Christians had not used such terms. Eusebius had attempted to assure the Christians under him that things had been carefully examined and worked out during the council. And that they had finally agreed, even though there had been much discussion concerning and trouble concerning "the use of certain expressions not found in the Scriptures.... Since the divinely inspired Scriptures never use such terms as 'out of nothing,' or 'that existed which at one time did not exist,' and such like terms; for it did not seem proper (eulogon) to say and teach such things,... never in times before have we thought it proper to use these terms." ⁴³⁷⁴ They then proceeded to authorize the use of the very terms which they had acknowledged had not been known to the earlier Christians. The spiritual gifts of revelation by which the knowledge of God had been based on had therefore been eventually replaced by that time with formulas and dogmas worked out in a dialectical council which had settled for human reason over revelation.

Athanasius was at Nicaea, and had taken part in it. After which he seemed to have been perplexed over how that they had dashed back and forth towards one extreme to the other in order to finally find something that they could offer to the Christian world as a statement of faith, as if they didn't have it all along, until then. In their vainly dashing back and forth over different points, the scriptures should have been sufficient to clear up the different matters. And if this is not enough then they had the writings of the Fathers. However, he noted how they had contradicted each other and their forefathers.

St. Hilary in the west also wrote about how that there seemed to be as many creeds as opinions among men. He noted that the homoousion was rejected, and then later received, but then explained away by successive synods (church councils). And it seemed they were always making new creeds to describe invisible mysteries. They would repent of what they had done to only turn around to defend those who changed their minds, while those to whom they had defended were anathematized. They were going back and forth over these things, pulling one way, pushing the other way the next moment. Upon writing to the emperor he says that the faith had been corrupted to the point where its reformation was impossible.⁴³⁷⁵ Hilary noted that the argument was about words which had been worked out through heated discussions, and which had only divided them even more. "We avoid believing that of Christ which He told us to believe, so that we might establish a treacherous unity in the false name of peace, and we rebel with new definitions of God against what we falsely call innovations, and in the name of Scriptures we deceitfully cite things that are not in the Scriptures: changeful, prodigal, impious, changing established things, abolishing accepted doctrine, presuming irreligious things."⁴³⁷⁶ How they had silenced the homoousion, and then had turned around to preach it, and excuse it, but then condemned it. And thus it seemed to him that they nor their predecessors had been in a position to be sure of preserving any sacred thing intact.⁴³⁷⁷

As a result of Constantine's efforts to bring unity to his Empire, by attempting to bring unity to the State Religion, Christianity, the Nicene Creed was forced on his subjects. They had to agree to go along with it, even if they didn't like, or understand it. The council was called by the emperor, and throughout its proceedings, his influence was dominant, approved the decisions, published them, & gave them force of law. Thus, not a prophet, not an apostle, & not any cleric that could claim to have the spiritual gifts, but an uninspired, then an un-baptized, non-Christian pagan government leader, made the final decision on what was to be official doctrine for all of Christendom!⁴³⁷⁸

POST-NICENE CREED DOGMA ENFORCEMENT & DEVELOPMENTS

The Nicene Creed was ultimately forced upon all of Christendom as binding, & became the only "legal" doctrine of God's nature, for it was by Emperor decree that all Christendom was to accept it. This was one of the first "doctrines," that a non-Christian pagan, not baptized yet, had thought policed, threatened, & punished those who refused to accept it as "official" church doctrine. As Constantine attempted to unify his Empire under the cross banner of fourth century Christendom, he still found that the now legal state religion, he put under his protection, after years of them being persecuted,⁴³⁷⁹ remained in disarray. Rather than uniting, they continue to be in conflict with each other over different view points of beliefs. The creed failed to unite Christendom, like he'd hoped, but instead it caused even more schism, splintering, inner fighting & problems.⁴³⁸⁰

Eusebius of Caesarea wrote in a letter addressed to the church, how the Emperor Constantine heard the arguments, in person, & towards the end, asked the bishops to accept the omoousios, & all bishops, after explaining themselves, signed the creed. In the text of Eustathius, fear of being exiled was a persuasion used to get different ones to sign it. Neither Eusebius, nor Athanasius, had revealed this fact. It was Emperor's influence upon the decision making, for only the emperor could exile them. He wanted no opposers, no refractories, and he didn't conceal it, for he wanted unity amongst the bishops. For them to stop their squabbling, & if needed he'd apply sanctions (penalties) upon those who refused to comply.⁴³⁸¹

The Council condemned Arius as a heretic, & Constantine issued an edict branding him as infamous & condemned his books to the flames. Further thought policing included how that anyone found in possession of the now illegal copies of his books, would suffer death! When the 17, who gave votes against the creed, heard that it was going to be published under more thought policing conditions, with imperial authority, & that the penalty of refusal would be loss of place & favor, all but 2 submitted, & they were banished.⁴³⁸²

"Since the Council of Nicaea (325) there had been repeated efforts to formulate dogma, and a series of creeds was produced, representing various shades of doctrine, often concluding with anathemas pronounced upon opponents. The constant regrouping of different parties was bound to produce disturbance, especially when complicated by political, personal or patriotic interests."⁴³⁸³

328–337, Constantine also had his moments of mercy & wasn't always playing the tyrant, but could be talked into handing out pardons to different ones like Arius, & Eusebius of Nicodemia, & Theognis of Nicea who were banished & later recalled for what happened during the Nicene Creed era. It was because of this type of civic power that many bishops signed the creed, for they feared being banished. But, being banished, recalled, exiled, then later pardoned, was what seems to be the mood swings of the Emperor, depending on which clerical leader fell out of favor, or that gained his favor, even they were ones that he'd disagreed with earlier. He wasn't so much interested in what faction had the truth, as he was concerned about what the on going controversies were doing to the unity of his Empire, inasmuch as he used Christianity as the State religion to try to bring some unity. His methods of thought policing were thought could solve issues, & he kept them going almost up to the time of his baptism just before his death May 22, 337.⁴³⁸⁴

The church became the political arm of the state, & the Emperors, from Constantine onwards, would all seat or appoint bishops according to their pleasure. Or banish those that might have angered them, & who might have lost their favor, or recalled from exile, those who regained their favors. The Emperors treated the bishops like civic employees, firing whom they will, & treating them like court officials. They called councils & influenced their outcomes, decisions, & forced bishops to subscribe to whichever creed they favored. There were no spiritual gifts, no revelations, no prophets, & apostles at work during the creed making, & the office of a bishop had become a worldly, desirable position of worldly power, not divinely spiritual power, by this time. Positions that were filled not by divine selective inspiration, (but by claims to divinity, which the Roman Emperors claimed for themselves⁴³⁸⁵). This, as they selected their own bishops, & showered, those chosen-ones, with favors, & imperial blessings, as long as those bishops were subservient to them. Thus, bishops signed one creed under the pressures of one emperor & then another creed under the threats of his successor. Thereby, the force of the civil power was used to attempt unity in the Empire, but this always didn't work, because Christendom was in a continual state of disunity, endless factions, splinter groups' apostates producing more splinter groups.⁴³⁸⁶

335, THE CASE OF THE DISAPPEARING BISHOP, OR THE MYSTERY OF THE CUT OFF HAND: A Bishop Arcinous (spelling ?), who went to a monastery in Syria, & hid, was gone. So where was he? The anti-Athanasius group used this "disappearing," to vilify Athanasius with. Charging that Athanasius murdered him, & had hacked off one of his hands, & used it for black magic rituals! To vilify him further, they presented charges to Constantine that alleged that Athanasius was 'guilty' of kidnapping, murder, sacrilege, (or the violation or misuse of something regarded as sacred or as having great value). Plus, of Satanism and extortion, (or obtaining things or one's way by unfair means, by force or threats). These charges were serious enough for Constantine to have to look into, & so Athanasius was summoned to face a trial, at (Pire?), in 335. The 'missing' bishop was tracked down by one of Athanasius' men, during an elaborate undercover operation. The monks at the monastery where he had hid, wrote an ill-guarded letter that was intercepted & became known to Athanasius' men. It was a response to those who had planted the bishop amongst them in the first place, & they were wondering now, what they had gotten themselves into. They may, or may not, but might have been aware of the plot going on to discredit Athanasius, & charge him with murder, etc. So there is the question too if the missing bishop went there to hid on purpose, or was told to go there for some other reasons. Whatever might be the case, he was tracked down, & found alive! The intercepted letter made its way to Athanasius, who held on to it, as he went before the tribunal court to face the different charges. Athanasius had the council admit that they would be able to recognize the missing bishop, if they saw him. They said that they would know him. Having had the bishop brought there, he then brought him into the court, wrapped in a large cloak, from the neck on down, with only his face visible. Thus, they knew that it was the man in question, & couldn't go back on their word, or claim they were mistaken, or whatever. Athanasius went over to the cloaked man & lifted one side & exposed the man's arm. On that arm was a hand, still connected! Now earlier, so-called evidence, which must have been manufactured evidences, was presented against Athanasius, as by way of a box that had a cut off hand in it. It was passed around the court as exhibit A, "evidence," for an alleged crime done, of the hand supposedly used to perform black magic rituals with. But in displaying the arm with the hand still attached, this discredited the charges, & the manufactured "evidence." Athanasius then went around to the other side of the man & lifted the other side of the cloak, & exposed the man's other arm, again with the hand still attached! He then dared & challenged the court to come forth & show if the man had a third arm, from which the hand was cut off. At this point the legal proceedings began to collapse, because of his clever defense, & the fact that the bishop was standing before them, alive & with both hands attached! But they still wanted to somehow get at Athanasius, who himself suspected that they were plotting to religiously assassinate his character even further, or even assassinate him. So he made his escape by night in a boat across the Mediterranean.⁴³⁸⁷

338–40, the after effects of the Nicene Creed started to be felt throughout the Empire, for it failed to bring unity as hoped by the Emperors. It was almost accepted universally in the West, Egypt was divided, & it was rejected by most of the bishops of Asia, who were made to sign it under imperial pressure. The Arian bishops of the East, considered Pistus the only true bishop of Alexandria, though Athanasius was given the bishopric by imperial edict, & called a council in 337 at Alexandria, & his Athanasian bishops condemned the council of Tyre. Letters went out from the rivals to recruit the different bishops throughout different areas to accept either the Arians or the Athanasians. Letters went to the three emperors, for the Empire had been divided after Constantine's death. Constantius, one of the Emperors, sent troops to enforce civil-religious policies over the wordings in the creed, & Alexandria became a scene of mobs, wounded & dead bodies, as different sects, such as the Athanasians were driven out. Both sides thought policed each other, as the different scattered & banished Christians, or ones, driven-out by troops, sought refuge in other areas of the Empire. Both rival sides deposited each other, moved in their own clerical leaders, refused to acknowledge council canons or laws that were against their sect & continued to write to different ones in power for their support. One council that found & decreed Athanasius innocent, found him condemned by another rival council. The bishops' seats of power were being corrupted by unworthy traffic, misuse of powers, civil authorities' power plays in forcing out one bishop they disliked, so another could take his place that they favored. When force was used against the Arians, the Arians protested, but favored force when it helped their cause, when used against their rivals. When force favored the Athanasians, they didn't protest its use until it was used against them. Bishop Julius of Rome, held a council in Rome, 340, sided with Athanasius & admitted him into their communion, & the Athanasian bishops too. Julius also refused to recognize the depositions of the Arians in the East that were against Athanasius & the bishops, that had caused them to flee to Rome for refuge. As it was, if the Emperor gained victory over his rival fellow Emperor, & happened to be an Athanasian, like in the case with Constans, 340, over Constantine II, then the Arians worried that they would be in trouble & suppressed, because outcomes of military campaigns between rival Emperors could determine what might also happen to those not on the religious side that the Emperor at the time favored. Meanwhile different ones, like the Arians, & Semi-Arians were seeking to modify the formulas of the Creed to compromise the wording enough to supersede the Nicene Creed, that would be acceptable to Constans. Thus, for about 25 years, creed making would be done in the attempts to formulate new formulae, as attempts were made to change the wording in the hopes to supersede it.⁴³⁸⁸

May 342, Emperor Constans, I (reign 337–350), son of Constantine I, noting the controversy continued, that the Nicene Creed was to solve, when it didn't, he wanted to end the conflicts with trying means already employed, by convoking another council. Emperor Constantius II, (reign 337–361), also a son, was recruited to help with the council that was to be held at Sardica (Sofia in Bulgaria), about a half way meeting place for both the two Empires, & two churches. They hoped to end the differences that continued to divide the church. Issues raised by Athanasius & Marcellus of Ancyra, were on going troubles for unity, & the Council of Tyre 335, was used to depose Athanasius, while Marcellus was condemned by the council of Constantinople, 336. Eusebius of Caesarea & Eusebius of Nicomedia, both condemned & accused Athanasius of "Sabellianism," (Father, Son, and Holy Ghost being only different manifestations of one God). The council opened between the end of 342 or beginning of towards the autumn of 343, with about 160 bishops gathered. The Tyde deposition of Athanasius was requested by eastern bishops to be recognized, while the bishops of the west had, in council, declared him innocent & Marcellus orthodox. The east was offended by the west & split to hold their own councils. At Philippopolis, the eastern bishops' council condemned Athanasius, excommunicated Bishop Julius at Rome, Bishop Hosius of Cordova, & others. They drew up a new formula that made no reference to the omoousios (consubstantial—one substance). Meanwhile, the western bishops excommunicated the eastern bishops. So much for the Emperors' attempts to bring unity. The different bishops of east & west were still going to have their power plays &

continued the rivalries. 344, Constans got his brother Constantius to recall the Athanasian bishops of the East, after he had exiled them, & let Athanasius to return to Alexandria. Emperors could be recruited to forcibly install, by their troops, the bishops they favored. Moreover, despite the different councils, if a sect gained the favor of an Emperor, they could disregard the decisions written up in the canons of the councils, & gets their way by force of arms, if need be. These types of militant tactics would be continued to be used during the Middle Ages, but would also get worse under a militant Christendom who didn't hesitate to not only confiscate property, banish rivals, but use torture, imprisonment & death by fire.⁴³⁸⁹

340, & a few years after, the Arians & Semi-Arians tried reformulating the Nicene Creed enough to supersede it, make their new versions acceptable to Athanasian emperor, Constans, when he became ruler of more than two-thirds of the Empire. For about 20 years they tried to formulate such a compromise creed & came up with professions of faith in four or so formulae. One issued from the Council of Antioch, four years later, made it 5 confessions of faith. They all were anti-Sabellianism, or were against the heretical belief that the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost were only different manifestations of one God. They also omitted the offending word they didn't like, omoousios (one substance). The second council of Antioch came up with the "Creed of the Dedication," in which "The Three Persons of the Trinity are declared to be three in substance (upostasei) but one in concord (symphonia), and an anathema is pronounced on all who say "that there was a time or season or age before the Son was begotten; or that the Son was a creature like one of the creatures." The 4th creed of Antioch was the creed of the Arian party until 359, & it declared the Son to be like unto the Father "according to the scriptures." It was replaced by the "Dated Creed" of Sirmium.⁴³⁹⁰

Without prophets & apostles to settle issues, (Eph. 4:10-14), & with Greek philosophical terms & concepts tainting the developments of creedal formulas, with words that described God the Father in unscriptural manners, the attempts to find formulas to express "doctrines" continued to rival the others' attempts. There were some that had formulas that made it sound like 3 persons in the Godhead, or 3 divine substances, of 3 Gods. Others that sounded like the Father, Son, Holy Ghost were the same person, or 3 manifestations of one God. Others that made it sound like they were of the same substance, another of like substance, others that they were 3 in 1, or as in another, that the Father & Son were 2 in 1. The more the formulas, the more confusing & farther away from reveal doctrine the different formulas became, each attempting to use Greek or Latin words in found in scriptures to describe what the Godhead was to be dogmatically & canonical-enforced to be like. Add to these on going polemical messes, the different spin offs of interpretations of them, & what they must of became amongst the common folks, artists, or perhaps later anti-Christians, pagans & outsiders getting word & news about what was going on in Christendom. Such things also eventually led to strange looking depictions of the later Christians' godhead, 3 faces on 1 head, 3 heads on 1 body, etc.⁴³⁹¹

355, Council of Milan, 300 bishops assembled before pro-Arian Emperor, Constantius, & with his pro-Athanasius brother Constans dead from suicide, the Emperor turned again against the Athanasius & order a written condemnation of him, threatening to exile those who didn't sign it, some bishops were exiled. The Arian doctrine was raised by the Emperor to the level of revelation & canon law. Soldiers were sent to Alexandria to seize Athanasius to enforce the deposition, but he escaped to a hiding place on the Nile. Imperial agents were sent from city to city to ensure the enforcement of the imperial edict, & the bishops who didn't accept the deposition, were banished. But even the Arians were divided, & it came down to the use of the different formulas & words being used in the Creedal formulas in question. A slight different word with a slight different meaning to the semi-Arians: homoiousion (from homoiousion, “similar” or “like in substance”). They adopted this word to express the belief that the essence of the Son was not the same, but was like that of the Father. This party include a lot of eastern bishops & were known as Anomoeans, (from “unlike in substance”). Still other sects were produced from these controversies, that held different view points, like the Acacians led by Acacius and by Valens, bishop of Mursia in Pannonia. Thus, Arians weakened themselves by splintering off into rival sects amongst themselves. As one sect would gain favor over others, with the Emperor, the emperor would exile their rivals for them. By 357, both wordings were rejected by Western bishops, who had their own views, & drew up a second formula, during an assembly at Sirmium, during the sojourns of Constantius.⁴³⁹²

357, more Emperor’s threats, more compromises, more creed making, councils kept the different rival Christians retreating away from ever having unity, as the Arian formula of the second council of Sirmium gave way to a third council in 358. The semi-Arians had gotten, by request, the Emperor Constantius to convoke it & it drew up another new confession of faith known as the 3rd formula of Sirmium, consisting of a collection of decisions of earlier councils, including the decree of the synod of Antioch against Paul of Samosata, & the omoousios (one substance) was rejected. Banished from Rome in 355, Pope (Bishop) Liberius, who hated banishment, was restored from exile by Constantius, & was asked by him to take part in the council, & asked to condemn the one substance doctrine, but he refused, but eventually reluctantly got talked into it, & signed the formula, but felt he had to judge it necessary to declare that “...whosoever does not grant that the Son is, as to substance and in all things, similar to the Father, must be excluded from the Church.”⁴³⁹³ Thereby he said goodbye to the strict Athanasian creed for the moderate Arian formula. In letters to the Emperor Constantius, (who was for Arius), & letters to the Arian bishops of the East, & another letter to the Arian leaders of the West, Liberius, seeking clemency, seeking to be released from exile, & restored to his bishopric, admits his double minded switching back & forth between the rivalry, but claims he had good excuses. At one point he’s appearing to be for Athanasius & their wording of the Creed, while the Athanasians are in power. But when the Arians took over, he moves over to their rivalry side, claiming that he didn’t defend Athanasius, but because his predecessor, Bishop Julius received Athanasius at Rome, when they came to them, Liberius wrote how that he was afraid to be considered a traitor, so he went along with the peer pressures of the moment. However, he then claims that those in the East had been right in condemning Athanasius & his bishops. But, now that he’s on their side against the Athanasians, he’d like to be released from banishment & returned to his bishopric. To Ursacius, Valens, & Germinius, this ex-bishop of Rome, Liberius then claims that he had condemned Athanasius, & again seeks to be restored to his former clerical position at Rome. Mean while, Athanasius, in his History of the Arians, written for monks of Egypt, he declared that Liberius, at the end of 2 years in exile, fell, & that upon being frightened by threats of death, he signed an Arian formula. However, Liberius still tried to maintain fragments of the Nicene Creed faith, though giving up some of the wording by surrendering omoousios. He still maintained that anyone who didn’t acknowledge a similarity between the Father & the Son in everything, was shut out (excluded – ausgeschlossen).⁴³⁹⁴

360, the Holy Ghost is the topic in discussions & in a letter of Athanasius to Serapion, how that certain Christians held that the Holy Ghost was a Third Person in the Trinity.⁴³⁹⁵

When Constantine’s son Constantius, who leaned toward Arianism, ruled as sole emperor between the years 350 and 361, obvious efforts were made to undo the decisions of Nicaea. About 359–360, he sought to use the 4th formula of Sirmium to unite the Christian world. He convoked an eastern council to meet at Seleucia in Isauria and a western council at Rimini, where Valens (bishop of Mursia in Pannonia), presented the formula. The majority of the council declared the symbol of Nicaea sufficient, but maintained omoousios, as if it affirmed the divinity of Christ. Dissenters withdrew & held a separate assembly. Impatient, Constantius obliged the bishops, by force or by ruse, to sign a symbol which reproduced more or less the 3rd formula of Sirmium. Eventually, one by one the bishops yielded & the whole synod or council signed it. What of the 4th formula? A similar scene happened at Seleucia, 12 bishops were for the same substance wording. 40 for the unlike or dissimilar substance, 100 for omoiousios (like substance). They came to no conclusions, so Constantius had them sign the formula of Rimini containing the Arian omoiousios. The formula was sent to all bishops and they were compelled to sign. Even the deposed Athanasian bishops were then compelled by imperial powers to subscribe to their rival’s Arian beliefs. All bishops, East & West, renounced the Nicene (Athanasian) Creed, including Hosius, bishop of Cordova, the author of the omoousios (one substance), & Liberius, bishop of Rome, once favorable to the Athanasian side, turned & renounced it. As long as the Arian Emperor controlled Italy, the west remained submissive, as were those in the East.⁴³⁹⁶

361, after the death of Constantius, the Athanasians felt they could breath & speak more freely. For about 18 years the fortunes of their cause varied, with the support of the emperors sometimes vacillating. 361–363, Emperor, Julian the Apostate, tired to restore pagan worship, unleashed his anti-Christian position, but allowed the exiled bishops to return, thinking that they would start their rivalries again & thus weaken Christendom, & sure enough they started quarreling openly again. In 364, Valens (364–378), Emperor of the East, influenced by strict Arian, Eudoxius, bishop of Constantinople, started up the persecution again against the semi-Arians, but of course also the Athanasians too. Valens also used force to get new strict Arian bishops in place, & the bishops were submissive again to another tyrant Emperor. He had the Arian Demophilus take over the seat of bishop at Constantinople. Valens traveled from province to province to force the bishops in each place to submit & sign the formula of Rimini, while those who didn’t, lost their privileges and their churches. Mean while in the West, Valentinian I (364–373), as Emperor of the West and for Athanasians, unleashed persecutions on the semi-Arians.⁴³⁹⁷

362, a synod condemned Apollinaris, bishop of Laodicea in Syria, that leaned towards Monophysitism (the belief that in Christ there was 1 nature only, the divine absorbed the human nature to make that one nature). He taught that the Son of God or Word of God took on a human body & took the place in it of the human soul. Thus, there was in Christ a human body, but no human soul, the Logos having taken the place of the human soul, both “animal and rational.” He later made partial concessions, that the Word took the place not of the whole soul (animal and rational), but the reasoning spirit (rational soul) in Jesus. One part divine, 2 parts human & “animal soul,” but not the rational soul were fused in the unity of a new nature. His views were condemned by various synods & finally by the Council of Constantinople, 381. “It was through the succeeding stages of the Christological controversies that the church first reached a clear insight into this great mystery: God manifest in the flesh.”⁴³⁹⁸

387, Diodorus became bishop of Tarsus. He was born at Anioch, was a student of Greek & Latin literature & the scriptures, & had lived in Armenia. Exiled, he lived for 10 years in a monastery. After his ordination, he opposed the Apollinarians, who believed that Christ "had a human body and a sensitive but not a rational soul." The rational soul was said to be replaced by the Logos, the Word. In contrast, Diodorus believed that in Christ, there were 2 complete natures—human with a complete human soul, & the divine nature, with distinctions between the 2.⁴³⁹⁹

It was not until the year 381, at the Council of Constantinople, that the Nicene faith finally triumphed. Still, there were some Christians who felt like some issues needed to be cleared up in other councils. Athanasius, bishop of Alexandria from 328 until his death in 373 A.D., was one of the defenders of the decision at Nicaea. One of his major accomplishments was a Council in Alexandria in 362, which recognized that what was critical was not the language but the meaning it expressed. Because of the work of this council, the confusion over the possible meaning of hypostasis and ousia was cleared up. The formula of one hypostasis was endorsed as a means of stating the unity of the nature between Father and Son.

During the 4th century A.D., Gregory of Nyssa, in writing to Ablabius used a scripture, that was to become one of the "proof text" scriptures to defend the 3 in 1 & only "one God" doctrine of many of the later Christian sects. For Gregory argued that one God must be confessed by us according to the witness of Scripture. (Deut. 6:4).

During the fourth century, the Cappadocian theologians, Basil of Caesarea, Gregory of Nyssa, and Gregory of Nazianzus, used their philosophical training from the schools of Athens to refine and establish the meaning of the Nicene Creed, & to formulate what would become the orthodox production in defeating the Arianism at the later Council of Constantinople, 381.⁴⁴⁰⁰

340–364, the thought policing of dogmatic creedal formulas went according to the sides that the Emperors in the East or West favored, be they Arian or Athanasian, or Semi-Arian or Strict-Arian. Thus, there were waves of persecutions, banishments, deposing of different bishops, & dogma developments to create creedal formulas that had different wording in them that were done to try to compromise & reword the Nicene Creed, or supersede it, & reword some of it in order to appease the side that the Emperors were on in the areas of the Empire, east or west, that they were at. Their troops were used to drive them out rivals, to take over their churches, & slaughter those who resisted the imperial thought-policing tactics. The Nicene Creed & the unscriptural words contained in the different words applied to the different formulas, like the first through the fourth formula of the council of Sirmium, continued to be presented to the bishops at the different councils, & force, threats, & imperial persuasions were used to get the different bishops to sign the new formulas, & to enforce them as the new canonical laws. Emperors that banished Athanasians, were talked into recalling or restoring exiled bishops, when other Emperors, victorious over their rival Emperor, came to power. Bishops, like Liberius, exiled from his seat in Rome, & others that claimed to have renounced their former positions & had become Arian, wrote letters to the different bishops & Emperors, to be restored. Arians & Semi-Arians, were persecuted when an Athanasian Emperor, like Valentinian I (reigned 364–373 in the Western part of the Empire), came into power. Then, visa versa, with Athanasians & semi-Arians under a strict-Arian Emperor, Valens (364–378), in the East. It was a time when civil leaders of the State enforced & even used their troops to thought police those who rejected the new church doctrines & creedal formulas, according to the sided that they took & favored. There were hardly any spiritual gifts, if any at all that could be said to be at work in the formulations of unscriptural creedal formulas.⁴⁴⁰¹

Thought Policing & Punishing Those Who Rejected the Creeds & Emperors' Decrees: Pope Damasus (reign 366–84), of the Roman See, & St. Ambrose, elected bishop of Milan in 373, worked closely together to thought police & extinguish the remnants of Arianism in Italy, during the post-Nicene Creed Trinitarian controversies.⁴⁴⁰² Add to that the Christological controversy, & the different councils that tried to overturn earlier or other councils, & thought police their rivals, over the different questions about, for examples: How the Son was incarnated (born a human god in a real body of flesh & bones)? How could he be perfect God & come to be perfect man? How could 2 entirely different natures, the human and divine, be united in the Son? In what form did the union of the divine & human take place? After which, were there 2 persons, or just 1? Did the divine nature & human nature persist? Did the divine will and human exist together in Christ? Or just one will? These, & many other questions "were debated in the councils and their decisions imposed by the emperors, while bishops were installed and "deposed" with the aid of the civil power, frequently with bloodshed, over a period of more than three centuries." "The councils were conducted in a spirit of combat, and sometimes there was bloodshed. Each faction appealed to the emperors to use force to subdue or banish its enemies."⁴⁴⁰³

Unscriptural wordings, in the Nicene Creed & other formulas with wording influenced by Greek Philosophical terms & descriptions of God, became words & concepts that caused a lot of confusion, misunderstandings, & sufferings, down through the centuries. For examples: Clerical leaders & the regular church members were forced to believe in different formulas according to their imperial enforcements. Many were banished, tortured, deposed, thought policed with troops, discriminated against, imprisoned, property taken, fined, mutilated, burned, forbidden to live in different areas, forced to leave, or exiled for life. Plus, many were not given licenses to preach their own religions, & some were even murdered for the wording in the Nicene Creed & the different formulas that were argued over in different councils.⁴⁴⁰⁴ Such words as: Omoousios also Homoousion, (consubstantial, one substance, used to suggest that the Father and the Son were of one substance, or essence, same substance, or the Christ is one substance with the Father, or identical in substance). Omoiousios, or Homoiousion (similar, or like substance).⁴⁴⁰⁵

The whole mess created beliefs like Sabellianism (the belief that Father, Son, & Holy Ghost were only names for different manifestations of the one God). Plus, arguments over Upostasei & symphonia, used to suggest the belief that the 3 persons of the Trinity are declared to be 3 in substance, but 1 in concord, or agreement & harmony.⁴⁴⁰⁶

Plato's Greek Philosophy tainted later Christian doctrines, by reinterpreting scriptures about God having a body, into being metaphorical & non-literal. Thus, a new Christianity emerged that was eventually thoroughly hellenized. With this came more schisms, dogmas, creedal formulas that caused more stages of the apostasy, as different bishops fought with each other, sometimes violently, over the wordings to creedal formulas. They also used threats, force-of-arms, banishments, threats to excommunicate, & civil authorities, the Roman Emperors who sided with their formulas, to get their particular dogmas to become the decreed religious law throughout the Roman Empire.⁴⁴⁰⁷

Ambrose, a former civil servant, was elected bishop of Milan in 373, worked closely together to thought police & extinguish the remnants of Arianism in Italy, during the post-Nicene Creed Trinitarian controversies. The city of Milan was divided between Arians & Athanasians & with a new bishop in power, a serious conflict threatened to break out in violence. Ambrose had to be baptized before being ordained because he wasn't even a member of the church yet. After his election he became Athanasian, & because he had been the civil ruler of north Italy, he had great political influence. When an Arian bishop of Sirmium, Germinius, died in 376, Ambrose intervened & got an Athanasian bishop put in, Anemius. Ambrose influenced Gratian (emperor of the West, 375–383), & 6 Arian bishops in Illyria were deposed. Gratian set new rules in a Roman synod that proscribed heresy, & Arians & others were vilified as heresies. Athanasian bishops were restored & Arians were driven out under the edict Sapor, & Damasus was instructed to expel the Arians.⁴⁴⁰⁸

378, Valens, in the East died & Arianism lost its last imperial protector. Gratian, (reigned in the West, 373–383), sent General, Theodosius, to the East & he was proclaimed Augustus at Sirmium (& reigned in the East as Theodosius I (the Great), 379–395). Thus, 2 Emperors, pro-Athanasianism & pro-Nicene Creed, were then in power to suppress Arianism, & Semi-Arianism, but that wasn't a high priority on their list because of the Barbarian invasions going on. Eventually by about 380, Athanasian bishops were placed in the bishopric seats in important sees, (or the seats of authority of bishops or archbishops). In 380, Theodosius I, (the Great, reigned in the East, 379–395), baptized in the Nicene faith, (380), proclaimed the exclusive authority of the Nicene Creed. He enacted rigid penalties, not only against pagan idolatry, (with a death penalty to those caught practicing it). But he forced & thought policed other Christian sects, & made edicts against all Christian "heresies." All Christians sects were ordered to adhere to the religion of the Roman church. To this imperial decree, the bishop of Roma, Damasus, (reigned 366–84), raised the "Holy Roman Church" above all others.⁴⁴⁰⁹

Thought policing others, Theodosius entered Constantinople & order the Arian bishop Demophilus to conform to the doctrine of Nicea. The bishop left & Gregory of Nazianzus was conducted to the church of St. Sophia. Other Arian bishops were rooted out or sought after. Councils were used to depose Arian bishops, such as one by Ambrose at Aquileia in North Italy. The Athanasian bishops used the civil powers of the Athanasian Emperors to crush their religious rivals, remove the Arians from their seats & put in their own! The Emperors would also chose their own bishops, even if they were yet un-baptized, like Nectarius, who became bishop of Constantinople, after chosen by Theodosius. 36 bishops, that didn't accept the Nicene Creed, were refused seats at the Council of Constantinople to be held 381. Before leaving Constantinople, they wrote a collective letter to their members admonishing them to never embrace the Nicene faith. The power of the Emperor was recruited by the Council to confirm their canons & decisions, & for them to take over the church buildings in possession of their rivals the "heretic" Arians. In January 381, Theodosius forbade all "heretics" (or those who didn't accept the Athanasian faith & the Nicene Creed), to hold assemblies within the cities & commanded them to turn their church buildings over to the Athanasians. Pagan Rome had paganized the church by force. The council of Constantinople felt like they had to wait for approval from Theodosius, before finalizing canonical decisions. Thus, they sent him a letter, praying him to confirm its decisions. He replied by a decree, commanding that the churches in the Orient should be delivered to the bishops who should find themselves in communion with the faith, which was that of the equal divinity of the Father, the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. He names the prelates for each province, thus selecting those who were in what positions & where. If different ones didn't like it, he could always send in the troops to enforce his will, as other Emperors did. Knowing this, many bishops would sign whatever was finalized & approved by the Emperors. But because not all obeyed, despite threats, those who were condemned or resisted often meant more conflicts, contentions, thought policing, even blood shed, with troops sent in, & death penalty laws for heresies.⁴⁴¹⁰

By 383, Theodosius I (reign 379–95), became the sole & absolute Emperor of the Roman Empire, & declared Christianity as the only legal religion in the empire, whereas before, during earlier centuries in days of persecutions, early Christians were outlawed as an "illegal religion."⁴⁴¹¹ He also took over the sole arbitrator of the church by determining church policy and doctrines. He certainly wasn't a prophet, or an apostle, & wasn't inspired as such, & even though Roman Emperors were believed by the Romans to be divine, and spoke as one of their "gods," he certainly wasn't.⁴⁴¹² In attempting to reach a final forced & lasting decision on the nature of God, he convoked the Council of Constantinople in 381, the 2nd Ecumenical Council. Arianism was condemned, & the clergy adopted the Nicene concept that the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost are "one essence." The Nicene Creed was made the only legal creed describing the nature of God. Thought policing the Arians, the Emperor unleashed a reign of terror on them, forcing them to flee from Constantinople. Mean while, the Athanasian view became universally accepted by fourth century Christians, but remained under the theocratic directions of the Emperor, until his death at Milan in 395.⁴⁴¹³

In time, "...Arianism was a lost cause inside the Empire, though growing rapidly among the barbarians along its borders.... In the fourth century, doctrinal controversy centered round the relation of the Son to the Father; in the fifth century, round the nature of the Son. The two problems were not unconnected, Arianism, by subordinating the Son to the Father, was considered by the Athanasians to deny the full divinity of the Son. Sabellianism, at the other extreme, by insufficient differentiation denied, the Arians thought, his [Christ's] full humanity. Constantine had summoned the Council of Nicaea, at which the Imperial will had triumphed, and Arius had been condemned. Various councils during the fourth century sought to establish creeds of semi-Arian or non-committal nature. Finally, Theodosius convoked the Council of Constantinople (381), which reaffirmed the creed of Nicaea, and Arianism was henceforth sternly suppressed.... In the next century disputes arose over the relation of human and divine in the nature and personality of the Son."⁴⁴¹⁴

354–430, Aurelius Augustinus, or Augustine, was born 354, at Thagaste in North Africa, to a Christian mother, who became a saint, St. Monica, thus a city was named after her, Santa Monica. She must have been amongst those Christians, that were still teaching & accepting the other side of the issues of the times, that God had a body.⁴⁴¹⁵ If so, she also then must have taught it to Augustine, during his youth. However, later, after Augustine had apostatized from his earlier Christian youth's upbringing, had moved away, & lived a lustful sinful life, as he confessed to, in his Confessions. He came across the other side of the argument, and must have been embarrassed with how his Mother's embodied God teachings. "Augustine grew up with the understanding that the Christian God was an embodied being. The doctrine, he said, was for him a stumbling block. He was plainly embarrassed by it and readily embraced the arguments of those who maligned it."⁴⁴¹⁶ But it was also in his Confessions, that St. Augustine provides substantial evidence, that beliefs in a corporeal deity were still commonly held, at least in some Christian quarters, as late as the 4th century.⁴⁴¹⁷

The anti-body, body-God controversy continued to pull the early to later Christians in different directions, some going back & forth between the 2 extremes. Some being talked out of their former beliefs, others sticking to them, others, not sure what or how they should believe. Especially, as more confusing formulas, descriptions, & dogmas smothered each other, & different controversies went unresolved for years, even though councils & creedal formulas sought to solidify into laws, what was supposed to be believed. By the mid to late 4th c., the immaterial God dogma, hadn't become dominating in most areas of Christendom, & so there still were many who held onto the earlier beliefs & defended embodied God themes.

Augustine was also trained in the dialectic arts of arguments, & thus became a skilled debater, as a lawyer, & had gained a famous reputation, so that he entered a career as a teacher of rhetoric, that took him to Italy, first to Rome, then Milan. There, Bishop Ambrose taught him & introduced him to the Latin translations of Platonist writings. Augustine was thus later reconverted again to the Christianity of St. Ambrose, who told Augustine that he didn't have to believe, that God had a body, to be a Christian!⁴⁴¹⁸ Under the tutelage of Bishop Ambrose, Augustine learned of the possibility of "God's being a totally immaterial, invisible, and incorporeal being. With his long-standing stumbling block removed, he converted to the faith in 386" was baptized at age 32. Augustine confessed that at one time, he was a materialist & couldn't understand how God was without a body of some sort. But in his quests for more understanding, Augustine didn't turn to scripture to try to understand "an immaterial God," that was being adopted by most of Christianity of his time. Instead, he turned, like many of the early Christian apologists, to philosophy, Greek neo-platonic understandings, not revealed truth. Ambrose also guided him to find "answers" through the Latin translations of Greek thought too, & firmly grounded him in Neoplatonic reinterpretations of Christian doctrine. Thus, he eventually rejected the beliefs of his youth, gladly, & adopted incorporeal-God themes.⁴⁴¹⁹

He spent some time in his writings to try to make sense of the contradictions & inconsistencies of the Nicene Creed, trying to harmonize the creed with reason & scripture, but that only increased the mystery. After 15 years, he produced De Trinitate, which shows his struggling to find analogies in human experience for "three persons in one God."

Augustine: "O God... you have not parts... You are everywhere, and everywhere you are entire. Nowhere are you limited by space. You have not the shape of a body like ours [Augustine claims that God's Catholic church of his time didn't teach the corporeal version of God, which he denounced as childish absurdities, how that] there was nothing in the doctrine which she [the Catholic church] taught to show that you, [God] ...were confined within a measure of space which, however high, however wide it might be, was yet strictly determined by the form of a human body."⁴⁴²⁰ Thus, in Augustine's version of God, he was like many other platonized later church fathers, he de-literalized the Bible where it was against his views, & admits that God the Father, couldn't be actually described in human terms. For only God can know God fully, but that probably, "the true God has neither sex, age, nor body."⁴⁴²¹

As late as the 5th century, (354–430), Augustine's work the City of God & Theodoret of Cyrus' apology, The Curing of Greek Maladies, apologists continued to argue that Christians and pagans worshipped the same supreme being. The problem was, as pointed out by Augustine, in The City of God, there were so many schools of Greek thought, contending about just as many things as the different early to later Christian sects were. About 288 different schools of Greek philosophy, each was "the inventor of his own dogma and opinion" but their love of truth severed them from their teachers to go out and strive for truth, or what they thought was the truth, whether it was true or not. But that no one will easily find any who agree in all their opinions.⁴⁴²² From

Augustine's later rejection of the embodied God themes, we note that the beliefs were still around for him to reject and argue against them, he being an uncompromising advocate of incorporealism. He was troubled by "fools" who asked him about if God had a body that he was confined to, had hair, nails & was confined to a bodily shape. For "...it seemed to me most unbecoming to believe Thee to have the form of human flesh, and to be bounded by the bodily lineaments of our members"⁴⁴²³

From Augustine, we get a catalogue of "heretical" Christian communities or sects, two of which explicitly taught that God is embodied in humanlike form. They were the Audiani also called Vadiani, & the Anthropomorphites. The first were followers of a Christian deacon, Audius of Edessa, located primarily in Syria and Mesopotamia. The second were located in Egypt. John Cassian, a Christian monk, spent 15 years, between about 385–400, in the Egyptian monastic community and confirmed Augustine's testimony in regards to the Egyptian anthropomorphism (human qualities of God, feelings, physical body shaped, etc.), as the long established norm, & incorporealism was the innovation, (a newly introduced belief system).⁴⁴²⁴

428, Nestorius, a famous preacher, a priest of the cathedral of Antioch, who'd studied under Theodore of Mopsuestia & shared the views of the school of Antioch, was made bishop of Constantinople. He insisted on the distinction of 2 complete natures, human & divine, in Jesus Christ, & objected to the term "mother of God," as some had applied to Mary, with their own particular meanings. He, like others before him, had his own understandings during these Christological controversies. To sum some of it up, basically: He seemed to be suggesting that the person of the Word is different from the person of the man Jesus with whom it is associated. He denied that God as such could either be born or suffer or die. The 2 natures are not a personal unity, but are only a moral unity, & hold an outward, mechanical relation to each other, in which each retains its peculiar attributes. Mary could be nothing more than a mother of the man Jesus. Mary merely engendered the man in which the Word became incarnate. Jesus thus is God because he contains God.⁴⁴²⁵ This aroused "...the bitterest opposition of the people and of the monks. They contradicted Nestorius in the pulpit and insulted him in the street; while he returning evil for evil, procured corporal punishment and imprisonment for the monks...."⁴⁴²⁶

Nestorius reflected the religious intolerance & thought policing of the time by recruiting the Emperor, during a sermon, to give him an earth purified of heresy, & promised heaven for it. He asked him to help him fight the heretics, and if so, he would help him fight the Persians.⁴⁴²⁷

The Christological issues over the oneness of "the God-man," 2 natures, the one God-man from the unity of the 2 natures, the unity said to be real, a physical one. This, concept came out of the theology of the school of Alexandria, with Cyril being the patriarch of Alexandria. To sum up the basics of Cyril's opposing Nestorius, & how he set forth the view of the Catholic (meaning Universal) church, how that: The Logos took on human nature to Himself in Mary's womb. Thus the title for Mary, Theotokos (Mother of God), was appropriate for her. The Godhood and Manhood were united in the Incarnate Logos in one Person, (one nature argument, called: Monophysite). Before this, there were 2 natures, but being united these can only be distinguished "in theory." The godhead isn't able to suffer, while the Logos, united to the flesh, his flesh tasted death. Here on earth our Lord was one Person, but He underwent different experiences because of His 2 natures. Indissoluble, or unable to be destroyed; lasting is the union between the divinity and the humanity of Christ. The physical union, or "enosis phusike," real unity, was contrasted by Cyril against Nestorius' accidental, & purely moral union. Bishop Celestine of Rome, sided with Cyril and a synod of Rome, 430, demanding that Nestorius retract his "error" or be excommunicated. Nestorius also appealed to Rome, in the West, which strengthen the position in the western church as it was growing in importance, prestige, & theocratic powers, for a while before the Barbarian Germanic tribes troubled Rome. As it was, Theodosius I, (reigned in the East, 379–395), he had declared the thought policing concept that hence forth those in communion with Rome & Alexandria should henceforth be known as "Catholic" and that all others would be known as "heretical." Cyril & Nestorius continued to battle it out seeking anathemas, & throwing out heresy charges, & eventually their quarrel became more general, for it became Alexandria & Rome opposed to Constantinople & Antioch.⁴⁴²⁸

With many of the earlier Jews having cut the path for later Christians to follow, from the 2nd century onwards, the decline in earlier beliefs defended by many in the physical aspects of Deity, continued to decline. Consequently, it became easier to follow the same anti-body, monotheistic-path, mentioned earlier, that also come about with earlier scriptural tampering mentioned. Both early Jews & early Christians, used the tampered with Septuagint, that helped the Hellenization process to philosophize away earlier beliefs in the gods & goddesses, in their images & forms that looked human in shapes. Thus, the new 'god' was dialectically argued & reasoned as being both immaterial & passionless. During the 2nd century onwards, there arose many Body-Despisers, that punished their bodies for asceticism penance requirements. Thus, it was easier for them to also adopt the anti-body beliefs that deity didn't have a body, when it spread out to them in their places of asceticism. Though some rejected it, & wanted to maintain the earlier beliefs in the physical aspects of God, they were pressured to give up those beliefs. To re-enforce the dogmas, more tampering with the scriptural & apocryphal texts, already tampered with, continued to take out the bodily support, bodily symbolism, bodily ritualistic types, & to insert support for their dogma of a bodiless one God. Other human types also had to be changed, or morphed out of the ritualistic symbolism, that of Christ's bodily atonement. It eventually fell into disuse in some areas, & was replaced by the practice of penance in which men found suffering to be the road to heaven, & perfection, which was also assigned to them by the episcopacy (or government of a Church by bishops). The arguments over monotheism continued as the church fathers continued to merge the Father and the Son into one being, & continued to enforce the dogmas. Plus, to reduce the role of Christ as the mediator. (Because how could Christ mediate between God & the human family, if Christ was one being with the Father, & Holy Spirit?). Consequently, the role of Christ as mediator was filled by holy relics, holy virgins, holy martyrs, & celibate bishops.⁴⁴²⁹

About Mid-4th–6th centuries, in the case with Ostrogoths & Lombards, (the German Barbarian Christians), Arianism influences on them helped reshape their thinking & world views.⁴⁴³⁰ These changes & conversion to later Christianity, were said to have been helped along, through Arian influenced bishop Ulfilas, 340s, & although limited, he did influence their ways of thinking, though not with out resistance from tribal chieftains & with a versions of later Christianity of the times, still tainted with their Barbarian pagan thinking. However, it became a more simplified version of later Christianity, for to the Germans, the Trinitarian controversy, with its dogmatic formulas influenced by Greek subtlety, & dialectic polemics, was incomprehensible to them. Add to this, their dislike of dogmas, this caused them to return to simpler pre-Nicene beliefs.⁴⁴³¹ This is not to say that classical Greece & Rome had no influences on Germania, for there were limited influences in some areas that allowed some blending with German paganism. But it's to point out that the Trinitarian controversy, when it spread into pagan barbarian Germania, was not subject, during the 4th–5th centuries, to dominating Latin Roman Catholic thought policing, & enforcing of dogmas, as other areas of Christendom were under the Roman Empire & its "converted" Christian Emperors.⁴⁴³²

Though the version of Arianism forms of Christianity from Ulfila had spread to Germanic groups like the Visigoths, Burgundians & Vandals, the earliest forms of Christianity that taught more tolerance, love, forgiveness, & conversions not by force, were lacking & not traits that shined forth, but rather, the more later militant Christian concepts seem to have been more impressive to the barbarian "Christian" influenced Germanic Conquerors. As Vandal conquest went through different areas were Roman Catholics lived, they were driven out from their properties, which became 'Vandal lots,' & the Catholic clergy were expelled from the district, so that Romanizing influences might not creep in. Church property fell to the Arian-Christian Germans, during the 4th–6th centuries.⁴⁴³³

Without prophets & apostles to reveal the divine word on current doctrinal issues of the times, the Roman Emperors, believed by the pagans to be divine, would gather the later Christian leaders into church councils, or hear their wrangling, & then publish Empire wide decrees, & military-enforced thought policed policies of the later Christians' dogmas, & creedal formulas that they sided with. Thus, making the dogmas into law, with different types of punishments for those who didn't obey or comply. These rather harsh methods were done, not by prophetic revelations, but out of the different Emperors' motivations to try to settle disunity in their Empire, or section of the Roman Empire they ruled over, by trying to get the later Christian rivalries to stop their violent, at times, disputes against each other over unscriptural formulas & word games. Such methods were done during the Trinitarian Controversy, & the Christology Controversy. (Concerning later concepts & formulas about the Godhead, then later about Christ, what he was supposed to be like as a divine-man, did he have a body that could suffer or not. Did he have one, or two natures? Etc.).⁴⁴³⁴

431, another council was called to try to resolve these Christological issues, the Council of Ephesus. Cyril, Bishop of Alexandria uses the power struggle tactics of depositions & excommunication to vilify & counter Nestorius, Patriarch of Constantinople. He dogmatically claims that Nestorius had divided too trenchantly the personality of Christ. Nestorius arrived at Ephesus with 16 bishops & armed escort, like he was going to battle. Cyril had a retinue, or a group of advisers or assistants accompanying him consisting of 50 Egyptian bishops, monks, parabolani (or clerical assistants commissioned with the duties to nurse the sick), plus, slaves, & seaman, all under the banner of St. Mark & of the holy mother of God. It must have been quit the spectacle, for on his side was also the Archbishop Memnon of Ephesus, with his Asiatic bishops, 12 bishops from Pamphilia. Cyril argued the 1 nature dogma, Nestorius the 2 natures. Cyril tried to make it sound like the 2 natures would mean 2 Christs, but this was not what Nestorius was claiming. So some questioned if each opposing party cared to really understand the position of the other? Or were they intentionally misrepresenting each other to vilify one-another before the council? Not even giving each side a chance to make their case? This seems to be what Cyril tried, as he started the council without some of his rivals' supporters having the chance to be at the council. While 3 Delegates from Rome, 1 representing bishop Celestine, 2 the (430 Council of Rome), council's condemnation of Nestorius, were there. Before more friends of Nestorius could arrive, such as John of Antioch, Cyril organized the council & took the presidency of it, which probably help him gain favor over his rival. Consequently, “doctrines” were continually being settle by clever maneuvering & debate tactics, vilification methods, & misrepresenting of the rivals’ beliefs. Plus, attempts to discredit their positions, accusations of heresies, anathematizings, force of arms, troops, & thought policing. Plus, bribes, gifts of 6 ostriches to the Grand Chamberlain, & not by the spiritual gifted apostles & prophets. For had any real true ones been around, they could have helped resolve issues, had a long line of them continued down to that time. But because there weren’t any, those who inherited the consequences of the apostasy were being toss to & for with every wind of doctrine, (Eph. 4:10–14).⁴⁴³⁵

Count Candidian, commissioned by the Emperor with policing the council, tried to get Cyril’s side to wait for the rest of his rivals to arrive. 68 bishops requested they wait till John of Antioch got there. Nestorius refused to take part any further until the invited bishops assembled. But, Cyril went on with the Council, & so the Count, as captain of the emperor’s bodyguard, entered the Church of St. Mary, where the meeting was going on. With him were a band of soldiers, he announced to the bishops the command to disperse, & a tumultuous scene erupted, which ended when the imperial legate withdrew. Bishops favorable to Nestorius withdrew too, & so Cyril used the opportunity to read the imperial letter of convocation, the council heard the Nicene Creed read, the correspondence between the two rivals read, & arrived at a decision to anathematize Nestorius, to deprive him of the episcopal dignity and the priestly communion, according to canons & letters of Bishop Celestine of Rome. Cyril went out & with the people of Ephesus, held a party with jubilee, illuminating the city with torches, as if victorious. Nestorius protested & the Count invalidated the decrees because the Council hadn’t really official started because the decisions were made by only part of the council, Cyril’s other rivals hadn’t gotten there yet. So it was obvious he was attempting to cheat at getting a verdict in his favor. When John of Antioch did get there, & with 43 bishops under the protection of the Count, they held a council of their own, & deposed Cyril & Memnon of Ephesus. Cyril’s council retorted by deposing John of Antioch. It was now council against council, depositions against depositions! As new arrivals learned what happened in the first meetings, they held their own & over ruled their rivals’ decrees, send out letters announcing decisions, some from Rome even claimed they made their decisions by “apostolic authority.” But one could hardly say that such actions could have been inspired by spiritual gifts, for there were no apostles known to be alive at that time & so the claim was in name only, not with any real apostolic authority. “Now followed a succession of mutual criminations, invectives, arts of Church diplomacy and politics, intrigues, and violence, which give the saddest picture of the uncharitable and unspiritual Christianity of that time.”⁴⁴³⁶

Because the decrees of the councils couldn’t become official & executed without the Emperor’s declared will on the matters, both sides sought to gain his favor. But both parties were prohibited from visiting Constantinople. Cyril thus sent in an agent guised as a beggar, with a letter to Dalmatius, an aged monk that had great influence & lived in solitude for 48 years. He had long since warned the people about Nestorius & was aroused to fanaticism & what was in the letter of Cyril’s representations & so the old monk rallied the monks & abbots to leave their cloisters & march with torchlights to the imperial palace. They were joined by a large group that followed, & the old monk was admitted into the imperial palace & presence & presented a vigorous case that ended up favoring Cyril. Theodosius II (408–450), finally let Cyril & his group into Constantinople to choose a successor of Nestorius. Thus, out maneuvering his rival, Cyril gained the favor of the Emperor for his cause, & Nestorius was banished. John of Antioch continued to attack Cyril’s anathemas, & synods held at Antioch & Tarsus, renewed the condemnation of Cyril, first pronounced by the smaller council of Ephesus. In 432, Theodosius II used his imperial powers to force, if necessary, & the fear of punishing severely, to get John & Cyril to bring about reconciliation, ordering them to abstain from creating, ordaining, or deposing bishops until they reached an understanding. Thus, peace was made & compromises & bargains between them ended up having John condemning Nestorius, so long as Cyril subscribed to a creed proposed by John. Cyril signed the compromise doctrine that contained the term “mother of God,” but applied to Mary “in a limited sense” only. Under Cyril’s influences, John recognized Maximianus as replacement bishop of Constantinople, thus replacing Nestorius. Thus, all these compromises in doctrine, in selection of a new bishop were done under imperial pressure. But all this still didn’t bring real lasting peace, as more bishops & clerical leaders continued to condemn, anathematize, & rejected their rivals’ versions of “doctrines” & arguments continued. The Nestorians rejected the council of Ephesus & the worship of the theotokos—of Mary as the Mother of God. In 432, Pope Celestine requested the Emperor to exile Nestorius to some desert, & by the autumn of 435, 2 imperial decrees, published at the request of John, had him condemned to perpetual deportation in Arabia, his writings burned & the partisans of his doctrines fell under severe penalties & further thought policing. 40 bishops that opposed all this were also banished. Nestorius was exiled from one place to another, from his former cloister of Eurepius before the gates of Antioch, exile to Arabia, to Egypt & suffered persecution, as he had persecuted “heretics” when he was in power. He died some time after 439, but when & where is unknown. His tongue was said to have been gnawed away by worms in punishment for his “blasphemy,” & was said to pass on to harder eternal punishment. The Monophysite Jacobites would annually cast stones upon is supposed grave in Upper Egypt, & their tradition claims that the spot hasn’t been moistened by rain. The Emperor who was at first for him, turn against him & had all his writings burned, & his followers named Simon Magus, (after Acts 8:9–24), thus they were vilified & stigmatized as Simonians. But the teachings lived on in Persia, where several teachers of the theological seminary of Edessa fled to. It spread & flourished for several centuries from Persia, to India, Arabia, China & Tartary, founding schools & hospitals. Mean while, Cyril continued to help defend & shape the doctrines of the incarnation, & theotokos (mother of God), & the Trinity. His use of force against rivals continued, as he also drove the Jews out of Alexandria, after an anti-Christian outbreak amongst the Jews. He took a large group of people to their synagogues & drove them out of the city, & let the people plunder their goods. Cyril of Alexandria finally died in 444.⁴⁴³⁷

About 444, Dioscorus, Cyril’s successor, became patriarch of Alexandria. A monk named Eutyches renewed the quarrel between the Monophysitists & Dyophysitists, (a belief that both before & after the incarnation of Christ, the 2 natures were distinctly separated). Eutyches was head of a monastery in a suburb of Constantinople, & argued that Christ has only 1 nature, the divine, after his incarnation. Again, it was Christological issues over if Christ was a God-man! A God with a body of flesh & bones, born of flesh, through Mary. If so, how many “natures” did he consist of? 1 divine nature, 1 human, making 2 separate natures? Or just 1 nature, the divine united with the human? Or, as a simpler, more radical view than that of Cyril, this monk's view that there was only 1 nature, the divine. So questions must have been asked, as to what then, became of Christ, in the fleshly body of a man? Was the physical body of Christ, the man, also divine? Eutyches claimed that the council of Ephesus (431), had overemphasized the humanity of Christ, while the council of had also insufficiently affirmed His divinity. He maintained that the scriptures, (by this time what versions of the New Testament that might have been were available to them), contained the answers, for the sentiments of the church Fathers were of no help, so he argued. With no current, & living true Apostles & Prophets, (as to that time), that could produce, what would then be, "current revelations," or "current scriptures," that could have helped solved issues & controversies, the churches of this time, or at least as Eutyches argued, they had to fall back on what they thought was the next best thing, the scriptures. For Eutyches, his Monophysitism, emphasized more of the divine, while acknowledging the flesh, for after Christ's birth, there was only 1 nature, "the nature of God become flesh and man." While, with the Dyophysites, they presumed that there were 2 natures during Christ's life time, & 2 natures after his resurrection. They tried to account for His "becoming flesh" & then resurrecting with a body of "flesh and bones," if he was to remain the complex being that they had made of Him. The difficulties they faced were attempting to explain away or ignore that facts that there were changes in Christ's human body as he went from a baby to grow in stature, wisdom, feel sorrow, feel suffering, & die a human death, in the human nature. So they believed that the divine (the Logos) in Jesus Christ couldn't change, couldn't grow in wisdom, couldn't suffer & die. So the incarnation became, again, another questionable issue to argue about. For if the Logos was divine, how could the Logos assume a body like ours? Did the Logos assume a body of a different nature, a divine not a human body?⁴⁴³⁸ If so, then what were the deifying aspects of the resurrection? Christianity of this time still had many deification themes in connection with the resurrection being physical, although the physical resurrection was another controversy, as some assumed it would be a spiritual one only, such as many did, during the time of Augustine, (354-430), bishop (395) of Hippo.⁴⁴³⁹ Deification themes of Eutyches has him stressing the divine in Christ, & as he denied that 2 natures could be spoken of after the incarnation, believing that as the 1 nature of God became flesh & man, the impersonal human nature assimilated the divine by the deifying personal Logos, so that his body is by no means of the same substance (omoousion) with ours, but a divine body. All human attributes get transferred to the 1 subject, in the humanized Logos: God is born, God suffered, God was crucified & died. Eutyches asserted the capability of suffering and death in the Logos-personality, and the deification of the human in Christ.⁴⁴⁴⁰ Could it have also been asked then, logically, & this might have been a controversial question: Was God also then murdered? Was it because some didn't like how this sounds, that they came up with a separation of the natures, 2 natures, (Separationists), so that the divine can't be murdered, while the human nature can?⁴⁴⁴¹

Eutyches influenced Chrysaphius, the minister of Theodosius II, (408-450) & controlled the emperor's religious policy. Bishop of Alexandria, Dioscorus, vilified as "heretics," Theodore, bishop of Cyrus, & Ibas, of Edessa, who held the "2 natures" views. To bring upon Flavian, patriarch of Constantinople, the fate of St. John Chrysostom & Nestorius, both had been banished. These may or may not have been more for political motives, than for religious dogma sake. Whatever might be the case, bishops often would take advantage of different situations, if they knew enough about them, to then benefit or increase their territories or ranges of influence & power. With the support of Chrysaphius & Dioscorus, Eutyches proceeded to have bishops deposed. In 448, Theodosius II, (408-450) under their influence, issued a decree against the Nestorians & deposed the bishop of Tyre, thereby bishop Dioscorus became sole master of Egypt. He seems to have caused the Monophysitism (1 nature - Eutychianism), to dominate, as he also sought to establish his clerical seat even above that of the Orient & Constantinople. It was the continual era of religious-political games of power, with Christological issues thrown into the mix, & sometimes seemingly becoming weaponized issues against less dominant dogmas. Which, when decreed heretical, with imperial condemnations as backing, they became even more a weapon that was used to drive out rival bishops! Now that Christendom was in the early part of the Middle Ages, these tactics would continue to be used in the centuries to follow.⁴⁴⁴²

448, opposition to Eutyches came out in force at the synod held by Bishop Flavian in Constantinople. Eusebius, bishop of Dorylea, demanded that Eutyches provide proof of his charges of Nestorianism against him & others, & accused him of heretical opinions. Eutyches debated for a long time, after which the Bishop Flavian, in the name of the bishops & abbots, pronounced him of being imbued with the errors of Valentinian & Apollinaris heresies, & that he be deprived of all sacerdotal dignity, excluded from their communion & fallen from the government of his monastery. Moreover, the thought policing of him included how that if anyone should even speak to him, or knowingly associate with him, they shall be excommunicated! Eutyches countered these actions by appealing to Pope Leo, the Bishop of Rome, & the Emperor, but also did Flavian. Leo wrote that he was preparing a complete exposition of Catholic doctrine on the debated issues. Meanwhile, both rival parties sought public opinion, recruited different distant bishops to their side & Eutyches, with powerful friends among the monks & at the court & a patron in Dioscorus of Alexandria, got the emperor Theodosius II to convoke another general council.⁴⁴⁴³

Spring, 449, Second Council of (or 'Latrocinium') of Ephesus, Dioscorus, bishop of Alexandria, deposes Flavian, bishop of Constantinople. The Emperor was on the side of Eutyches, thus when Theodore, bishop of Cyprus tried to attend the council, being anti-Monophysite, he was forbidden. Another rival, Ibas, was imprisoned. Bishop (Pope) Leo sent a dogmatic letter, the Tome to Flavian, to be read in his behalf, but it didn't get read, because he didn't have the support of the Emperor. The council finally opened in August 449, in the church in Ephesus. Bishop Dioscorus of Alexandria, pro-Eutyches, was the choice of the Emperor to be the presidency over the council. The thought policing through imperial powers continued to shape these later Christian dogmas, as an imperial commissioner declared to the council that whosoever should alter the "true faith," would receive double condemnations from God, & the emperor. Dioscorus asked if anyone wanted to make changes to the declarations of Nicea & Ephesus, to which some of his followers shouted threats of anathema to anyone who would suggest changes. Eutyches was reinstated as abbot & priest, & further attacks on the two natures issue was thought policed, for as the formula proposed by Eusebius of Dorylea, was read, there were cries of threats to drive out Eusebius, & "Burn him!" Claiming that he had divided the Savior. The council, pro-Eutyches, adopted 12 anathematisms of Cyril, condemned dyophysitism as heresy, deposed & excommunicated rivals, such as Theodore, Flavian of Constantinople, Leo of Rome. Seeing that the tide had turned, bishops that had voted for

2 Natures, held by Bishop Flavian at Constantinople, now changed their minds. Count Elpidus, the chief legate of the Emperor, declared how the heresy of Nestorius had rightfully been condemned. Almost as if declaring a revelation from Christ, he said that the Logos had granted to declare to the church Fathers there, about Him (Christ-Logos), concerning His person and His nature, if they really recognized Him, if they professed the orthodox faith in regards to the Logos, then He would recognize them also before His Heavenly Father. Elpidus further warned, that those who would alter “the true faith,” would be subjected to the double & severe punishment from God & the Emperor. To enforce & thought police the wording in dogmas further, Elipus asked that the Emperor’s orders be followed, & the on going issues over that of the terms used in the composed formulas were again reconsidered. That of theotokos (mother of God) & enosis (union), as applied to the 2 Natures, (that declared how the 2 Natures at the Incarnation were united into one). Plus, in contrast to that, the concept that Christ’s Nature after the Incarnation was One Nature made flesh, (mia phusis sasarkomene). Dioscorus pointed out the text of the Council of Ephesus, where it was forbidden to propose, write or compose a formula of faith other than that which had been defined by the church Fathers at Nicea. It was said that to add peer pressure in thought policing the decisions of the council, a crowd of soldiers, sailors & monks invaded the church, & intimidated the bishops. Consequently, 130 signed the deposition against Flavian & Eusebius of Dorylea, sending them into exile, where Flavian died soon after. Two weeks later, depositions were enforced against bishops Ibas of Edessa, Irenaeus of Tyre, Theodoret, Domnus, while Monophysites bishops replaced them. Like with other Emperors that went back & forth between favoring some, to later condemn them, Theodosius II had first supported Nestorius, then abandoned him & ordered his works to be burned & vilified his followers as Simonians (after Simon Magus, the father of heresy, Acts 8). But when he died in 450, so did his powers to protect the Alexandrian party that imposed Monophysitism, through imperial civil powers & the imperial police enforcing “doctrine” on all the important bishops’ sees of the East. Pope Leo, bishop of Rome, declared the council to be a Latrocinium (a gathering of robbers). But Theodosius II didn’t have enough imperial power to impose Monophysitism on the West, so more dogmatic battles were on the way, for it was a heresy in the West.⁴⁴⁴⁴

One of the points of contention, in the Christological Controversy, was over the single personality, or not, & the single nature, or not, of Christ. These power struggles caused different ones to rise & fall in their clerical positions, as the See at Alexandria, that dominated earlier, lost to the domination of other Sees, or areas of the church. The doctrine of the 2 natures of Christ, was formulated by Leo of Rome, & it was accepted then, 451, though the Alexandrian party resisted this, & thus, at Egypt & Syria, the Monophysite heresy prevailed, that proclaimed dogmatically, 1 nature of Christ, only, not 2.⁴⁴⁴⁵

451, Council of Chalcedon, Dioscorus is banished, while Eutyches, a monk who was restored earlier & who dogmatically attacked Nestorius, was condemned. The points of contention, in the on going Christological Controversy, was over the single personality, or not, & the single nature, or not, of Christ. The doctrine of the 2 natures of Christ, was formulated by Leo of Rome, & it was accepted then, 451, though the Alexandrian party resisted this, & thus, at Egypt & Syria, the Monophysite heresy prevailed, that proclaimed dogmatically, 1 nature of Christ, only, not 2.⁴⁴⁴⁶

About mid 450–51, with Pulcheria, sister of the emperor, being a Dyophysite, who married another follower of the belief, a general Marcian, proclaimed Emperor, they both unleashed the reversal of the previous council’s decisions. Chrysaphius, the minister of former emperor was executed, the bishops exiled were recalled & their rivals had to choose to follow the new Emperor’s faith, or be banished. The doctrine of the person of Christ was again under imperial pressures, with bishops running back & forth, according to what the current beliefs were enforced to be. Thus, as they were being ‘tossed to and fro with every wind of doctrine,’ because they didn’t have prophets, & apostles, (Eph. 4:10–14), the imperial threats of anathematizing, excommunicating, banishments, & imperial thought policing continued. Emperor Marcian called another council to meet in September 451, at Nicea, & more than 500 bishops assembled, but the emperor was distracted & retained by an invasion of the Huns into Illyria. Consequently, he had the council transferred to Chalcedon, near Constantinople, so that news of deliberations could be sent to him, while high functionaries, senators, 19 in all, represented him. The council decided that Bishops Flavin & Eusebius had been unjustly deposed & it deposed Dioscorus, Bishop Juvenal of Jerusalem, and bishops of Caesarea, Ancyra, Beryta, & Seleucia. The emperor confirmed it & exiled Dioscorus, “the murderer” of Flavian. The next day the creeds of Nicea & Constantinople, letters of Cyril to Nestorius, & to John of Antioch, plus the doctrinal letter of Leo’s Tome or letter to Flavian were all read. When Leo’s was read, his supporters cried that it was the faith of the Fathers, & apostles, & they claimed it orthodox backed, & threatened anathema on whosoever doesn’t believe it! They further claimed that Peter had spoken through Leo! That it was the doctrine of the apostles, & that Leo & Cyril had taught the same doctrine. Thus, why wasn’t it read at the council of Ephesus? From this they sought to put the letter up as almost being, if not even, on the level of scriptures, revelation, as if it was what Peter & the apostles would have written, as a profession of faith. But the letter only debates the same types of arguments over the same Christological issues, the 1 or 2 natures! But the letter was also a compromise between the two rival dogmas, to make the West’s formula, “Two natures in One Person,” but although it was held up as if revelation from Peter, there was no biblical authority in Leo’s tome. Eventually, after opposition from several bishops, those of Illyria & Palestine, after a few days, the entire council adhered to the tome. The emperor wanted them to unit on a formula of faith, but the bishops of Rome complained that what was drawn up had terms insufficient to exclude Monophysitism, so they threatened to hold their own council in the West. The emperor recommended they come to an understanding, & had them voice their opinions on which version to go with. The bishops exclaimed that they were with Leo, so the commissioners of the emperor had added to the definition how that “there are in Christ two natures, without conversion, without separation, and without confusion,” and so it was done.” But again it was through imperial threats, pressure, fear of going against the emperor, who sided with his commissioners, that the eastern bishops gave in & said they believed Leo, when asked. A new formula was deliberated, but in secret, & it was then read, after repeating the creeds of Nicea & Constantinople. It told of the different stages of the controversy, & then told how the Synod, opposes those who seek to rend the mystery of the Incarnation into a duality of sons, & consequently excludes, from her communion, those who venture to declare the Godhead of the Only-begotten capable of suffering. Plus, who imagine a mingling and a confusion of the 2 natures in Christ. It excludes those who foolishly maintain that the servant-form of the Son, assumed from us, is from a heavenly substance, or any other than ours. It anathematizes those who claim that before the union, there were 2 natures, but after the union, only 1. It claims that the church fathers had all taught with one accord that Jesus, perfect in His Godhead & perfect in His manhood, true God & true man, consisting of a rational soul and of a body, of 1 substance with the Father as touching the Godhead, & of 1 substance with us as touching the manhood, like unto us in everything except sin; according to the Godhead, begotten of the Father before all time, but in the last days, for us men and for our salvation, according to the manhood, born of the Virgin Mary, the God bearer. It further on told of Christ being confessed in 2 natures, without confusion, change, rending or separation. While the difference of the natures is not denied by reason of the union, & the peculiarity of each nature is preserved, & both concur in one Person, (who is Jesus, the Son & Only-begotten & God the Logos). The formula was such a blend of compromises to attempt to satisfy so many rival view points, that it ended up not entirely satisfying anybody. So the emperor, knowing this, had it ratified during the 6th Session on Oct. 25, 451.⁴⁴⁴⁷

451 & later, after the Council of Chalcedon, bloody fights between monks & the rabble broke out, & Monophysite fractions went off in schismatic churches. September 454, Dioscorus died, Peter Mongus & Timothy Aelurus organized an anti-Chalcedonian opposition. 457, Emperor Marcian died, & Alexandria revolted, drove out Bishop Proterius & elected Timothy Aelurus. The commander of the troops being gone from the province at the time, upon returning, he arrested the new bishop, Timothy, and installed Proterius, which infuriated a mob that invaded the baptistry of Proterius' church, massacred him while he was officiating, dragged his corpse through the streets, burned it & scattered the ashes to the winds. Timothy regained his seat at the see of Alexandria, called a council, anathematized Leo of Rome, Anatolius of Constantinople & Basil of Antioch. He then installed bishops devoted to his cause throughout Egypt. There were mobs, violence, reports of 10,000 dead, & if accurate, the rivalries continued, Timothy was arrested & exiled. Emperors continued to use their civil powers to enforce dogmas, like Basiliscus (476–477), who sided with the doctrine of St. Cyril & in the condemnation of the Council of Chalcedon. Timothy was recalled from exile, & the emperor's position was published & sent out to the bishops & monks throughout the empire, they were invited to sign it & if not, they'd suffer deposition & confiscation of property, & exile for the monks. 500 bishops approved his anathema of the Council of Chalcedon. Thus, dogmas, formulas, canons, synods, decrees, & creeds, bishoprics & property gained during earlier times by rival powers, could be turned over & reversed by the next rival civil authority! For Zeno, the former Emperor of the East, (reigned 474–491), in exile in the mountains of Isauria, marched on Constantinople, entered the capital, banished Basiliscus & his family to Cappadocia where they starved to death. He decreed the abolishment of all the former emperor's measures & policies. Again the Monophysite bishops were driven out, & replaced. All bishops that subscribed to the former emperor, retracted quickly to implore Zeno's pardon. In the East, the clerics' dogmas bent with every wind of doctrine blown by whatever the then current emperors' favored. They would switch back & forth as quickly as a new Emperor gained power, & happened to have a different dogmatic view point. About 481–82, Bishop Acacius got the favor of Zeno & the Henoticon or Edict of Union was declared, in which it accepted the canons of the councils of Nicea & Ephesus, but rejected the formulas of Chalcedon, avoiding the "in 2 natures" expression, & gave it the force of law in 482, but Zeno was not strong enough to impose it on the West.⁴⁴⁴⁸

Felix III (II) bishop of Rome, (483–492), upon the news of Henoticon, sent 2 bishops to Constantinople with letters for bishop Acacius & Zeno, that admonished them to stay faithful to the Council of Chalcedon. The Roman legates were to also find the Acemete monks, when they got to Constantinople, because they were devoted to the Council of Chalcedon & had written to the clerics in Rome, several times about what was going on in the East. The thought policing tactics of the all-powerful patriarch Acacius, made it hard for the legates to proceed. They were kept by the Acacian party from communicating freely with the outside world, beautiful promises were told them, they were flattered & given presents. They were invited to be present at the liturgy in which Acacius officiated. All this was to perhaps either get the legates on their side, or delay them from proceeding, or play whatever political-clerical maneuvering they were doing against their rivals in Rome. The Acemete monks, alert & suspicious of tactics being used, sent word to Felix, who called a council & excommunicated Acacius, who in turn excommunicated Felix. This was not the first time that both bishops in the East & West excommunicated each other. Or in opposite councils, they deposed, excommunicated & exiled each other, for these types of responses & tactics had become weaponized during the Middle Ages. But the enforcement of this moves often depended on if they could get militant backing to force them, such as getting the favor of an Emperor, or a King with their troops. When delegates from Rome notified Acacius of his excommunication by Rome, they used the Acemetes monks, & got some of them to pin the act of excommunication to the mantle of Acacius while he was performing church services & those who did the pinning, paid for their audacity with their lives.⁴⁴⁴⁹

491–518, (reigned in the East), Emperor Anastasius, (anti-Chalcedonian), widened the gap between East & West. Rome had been in trouble for some time, with the fall of Rome, 476, & with the increase of importance of Constantinople & the Byzantine growths, the church of the East sometimes sought to have little to do with Rome. Besides, the East had its own issues with being racked by continual disputes, as to the nature of the relationship between the divine & the human within the person of Christ. What the council came up with was met with resistance from church leaders in Egypt & Syria. Large sections of the Church in the East accepted the theological formula, as directed by imperial power, while other sections rejected it, & this resulted in a pro-Chalcedonian faction, that resisted the anti-Chalcedonian faction, that now had an emperor backing them. The Acacian schism wasn't going away also, & would disturb the inner life of the church for at least 34 years, 484–518. Anastasius used his imperial powers to also try to force, like others before him, seating clerical leaders to his liking. He went so far as to try to elect the Archdeacon Lawrence pope. After Acacius died in 489, Euphemius became bishop of Constantinople, in 490, & was a Dyophysite. When word came of his election was met with mix support, some acknowledging, others refused to admit him into their communion. He was disposed in 496, by a council in Constantinople called by Anastasius. The problem with the Henoticon, was that it was causing further divisions, rather than union, for it was being interpreted differently according to which rival faction wanted it to sound in their favor. The emperor didn't approve of diverse interpretations, & he himself, was against the 2 natures, being anti-Chalcedon, & thus proceeded to depose pro-Chalcedonian bishops. In 511, he caused a council to depose Macedonius, bishop of Constantinople. Timothy, a Monophysite, took his place. Flavian, the patriarch of Antioch, replaced Severus (512–518). Bishop Elias of

Jerusalem, took over for John (516–524). Peter Mongus, a Monophysite, remained bishop in Alexandria. In 513, with Eutychianism gaining influence & civil affairs in great confusion, Anastasius proposed a general council to attempt unity & peace, but the controversies over the same issues continued, even after his death in 518, when Justin I (450–527), became Emperor in the East, (reigned 518–527).⁴⁴⁵⁰ He was a zealous Catholic, & accepted the Tome of Leo, & was pro-Chalcedon. Six days after Anastasius died, a disorderly crowd in front of the church of Saint Sophia, inspired by the changed religious views of Justin I, demanded that the Patriarch John approve Chalcedon, Leo, Macedonius & others who'd been deposed. Furthermore, that an anathema be done against Severus, the patriarch of Antioch. John said he'd refer the matter to decision of an early council, & when gathered in July of 518, or 519, under the presidency of the metropolitan of Heraclea, they recognized 4 previous councils, Nicea, 325, Constantinople, 381, Ephesus 431, & Chalcedon, 451. It deposed the patriarch of Antioch, requested the Emperor to recall the pro-Chalcedonians who'd been exiled. It ordered different names of Bishops to be restored to the diptics of the church, Macedonius & Leo. Churches divided in their allegiance to the new bishop were thought policed by imperial police. Justin, pro-Rome, sent an officer to request Bishop Hormisdas of Rome (514–523), to send legates to Constantinople. They came with anathemas & another faith formula of Hormisdas, & Nestorius, Eutyches, Dioscorus & others added, were anathematized. It accepted Chalcedon, Leo's Tome, & all those who separated themselves from communion with Rome, to be effaced from the diptics, (or panels that flip open, a note book type art works, hinged together & that open up). Did they also use the "apostolic" claims, to attempt to raise the position of the Roman Catholic see as being higher than others for its "apostolic," roots? Was this used to put an additional authenticity stamp of approval on their formula, & decisions?⁴⁴⁵¹

Despite Empress Theodora's efforts to install her own Pope to help the Monophysite sect, the Catholics were able to maneuver around her to get Justinian to renew persecutions against them. This was probably done because of how in 535 the Monophysites were in the ascendant, or they were holding a position of increasing status or influence. John of Tellas, spread the doctrines in his wanderings over Asia Minor. Monks of the sect flocked to the capital & fashionable people had their children baptized in Monophysite churches. But things changed in 536, for Catholic Pope Agapitus I, arrived in Byzantium on an embassy from the Ostrogoths, and he soon excommunicated Anthemius, bishop of Constantinople. With support from the Catholic party, he convoked a synod which deposed him and other bishops. Justinian was induced to ratify the pope's decision. Persecutions began again against the Monophysites: "In Syria, Armenia, Mesopotamia, Monophysite monks were hunted down, whipped and burnt alive in market-places. John of Tellas was captured and put to death with slow tortures by Ephraim, bishop Antioch."⁴⁴⁵² So went further thought policing over dogmas that were produced under conditions apostasies produce, such as the Christological Controversy.

Justinian (born 483, died 565), during Emperor Justinian's reign, (527–565 as a pro-Chalcedonian & Catholic), both the church & state were under his dominating Imperial rule. The Code of Justinian, became the law of the land. It began by declaring the Trinity, & anathematized Nestorius, Eutyches, & Apollinarius. It acknowledged the ecclesiastical leaders of the Roman church, & commanded all Christian groups to submit to their authority. But it also claimed that the civil power of the empire was over the church. The law was to come from the throne, be they clerical or civic laws! It regulated the church clergy on down through its ranks. It threatened apostates, heretics & order them to be put to death. Manichaeans, relapsed heretics, had automatic death sentences. Donatists, Montanists, Monophysites, & other dissenters, it was decreed, would have their goods confiscated, economically suppressed by having them declared incompetent to buy or sell, to inherit or bequeath. They were excluded from public office, forbidden to meet, & disqualified from suing orthodox Christians for debt owed them. Montanists were collected in their churches & their buildings were burned with them inside. He deified himself as being divine & required worship gestures & ceremonial pomp, when different ones came to meet with him. He used his divinity to remove bishohps & put in ones he liked.⁴⁴⁵³

538, Justinian has a general Belisarius, to substitute in place of the new pope, St. Silverius, (536–537), the deacon Vigilius, former papal ambassador at Byzantium (Constantinople). He was made bishop of Rome, 538, but only under the secret stipulation that he favors Monophysite doctrine. Chalcedon had condemned Nestorianism, but approved their doctrines in The Three Chapters, which Justinian's edict rejected. He wanted his condemnation signed by 5 patriarchs, & the bishops under them also sign it. With bad grace, 4 signed, but Vigilius didn't & defied Justinian. Rome was taken by Totila & was in the hands of the militant Ostrogoths (East Goths). Vigilius eventually gave in & he published his Judicatum, 4-14-548, & it now condemned The Three Chapters. Protests came from those in the West that were loyal to Chalcedon, & Vigilius was condemned. The African churches excluded the pope from their communion, until he did penance, & by 555, the opposition to Judicatum was particularly violent! Vigilius, having caved to imperial pressure to condemn The Three Chapters, Vigilius, by about 549–553, alarmed by the protests of the western bishops, he withdrew his condemnation & prepared another formula, Constitution (Constitutum), & refused to go against Chalcedon. But Justinian refused it, points out Vigilius switching back & forth in his positions & thus contradicting of himself. As proof of his vacillations, (or wavering between different opinions or actions), Justinian sent letters of Vigilius, his Judicatum, plus other documents including an oath 8-15-550, whereby Vigilius had sworn to do nothing without being in agreement with the emperor. The council was therefore ordered to erase Vigilius' name from the diptics of Constantinople & everywhere else, & although not excommunicated, this was just as equal to that.⁴⁴⁵⁴

The Arian clergy were firmly organized, & would have been allowed to remain with little governmental regulating, if they'd embrace the orthodox faith, & if it hadn't been for the Catholics that hated them because of what they suffered under Arian dominated areas in the Empire. Moreover, with some of the German barbarian tribes having converted to Arian Christianity, & with them invading, migrating & or encroaching into different areas of the Empire, as conquerors, they continued to take over the booty & spoils of those they gained power over. Even so, a few years after Justinian's death, with the Lombard conquerors into Roman lands, the "Church property was seized without scruple, for the Arian invaders were not inclined to respect the rights of Catholics."⁴⁴⁵⁵ Before this, Justinian acceded to Catholic demands for vengeance against them. In Italy, other causes favored spoliation of Arian churches. The Christological Controversy, was being used as an excuse, as with their Gothic sympathies, & an added factor, their riches, all created the covetous incentive for the spoilers to go after the Arian "heretics." Up till 541, the Monophysites (believers in the single nature of Christ), also called 'the hesitants,' were thought, by Justinian, to be erring brethren. But, by 541, sterner measures followed, though conciliation, or Justinian's mediation in the dispute, was also consider an on going option, especially in that there were powerful Monophysite cities of Egypt & Asia Minor that the Imperial budget counted on through taxation in tapping into Monophysite Christian prosperity. Perhaps also because the Empress Theodora was a Monophysite, & had made up her mind to install a Pope who might compromise with Monophysitism. She'd been working on getting the deacon, Vigilius, a Roman occupying the key post of apokrisiarios, or nuncio, which is a papal ambassador to a foreign government or court, at the imperial court, to help with her quest, by having him installed as Pope. But stronger religious-political forces were against Vigilius to assure that his rise to power failed. This didn't stop Theodora from prodding Justinian into continue to bring about a reconciliation between the Catholics & Monophysites.⁴⁴⁵⁶ However, Catholic opposition at Constantinople, with the support of the Pope by the majority of the Western bishops, added to the difficulties in continued Imperial toleration of such erring brethren of the Christological Controversy, that were believed by the papacy to be due for stronger thought policing. But because Justinian had been softer on them earlier, such as causing the persecution of them to end in 529, & their exiles recalled, & had attempted in a conference at Byzantium in 532, to reconcile the two rival sects. The Catholic papacy didn't trust Justinian to follow through with harsher thought policing that they would have liked to have done on them. They also didn't like his continued absolutism, (or the principle that those in government should have unlimited power), as manifested in his inconsistency on dictating to the papacy on religious as well as other issues. Such practices were to precipitate an acute crisis between the Empire and the papacy in the Church in the West, later on.⁴⁴⁵⁷

The Donatists in Africa, charged as heretics, were deprived of their property & churches; they had been in alliance with anti-Imperial forces too.⁴⁴⁵⁸ The rivalry between the clerics of the Catholic western part of the Empire & those of the others, or non Catholic sects in the East, rivalries in north Africa, continued to become a challenge for Justinian, in his quest for unity in his Empire. With differences over dogmas, Christological differences, (the 2 or 1 natures of Christ issue, that of the Monophysite issue).

In his last years of his life, Emperor Justinian (born 483, died 565), became a heretic! He declared that the body of Christ was incorruptible, his human nature had never been subject to any of the wants & indignities of mortal flesh. To this, the clergy warned him that he'd burn forever in hell if he didn't repent of this error, but he died unrepentant.⁴⁴⁵⁹

Pope, Gregory the Great, (reigned 590–604), sent missionaries to try to convert the Arian Christians of the Barbarian Germanic tribes to the Catholic faith, & also entered into friendly relations with all the Germanic-princes.⁴⁴⁶⁰ Chilperic, king of Soissons, despising the German language, composed Latin hymns & poems, & the 3 Persons of the Trinity were condemned as anthropomorphic follies.⁴⁴⁶¹

6th–7th c., GOD'S TWO WILLS OR ONE? These earlier issues over what particular dogma was dominated at a particular time & place, continued to cause other questions to be raised. What of the human will of Christ, was there 2 wills or only 1? If there were 2 distinct natures in Christ, the human & the divine, like the Council of Chalcedon had affirmed, then: Did Christ have 2 wills, or 1? Did the human will persist side by side with the divine? If 2, then must there be 2 to will? If so, was there confusion, antagonism between the 2? But because antagonism comes from evil, & there is no evil in Christ, then: How can the sinlessness of Christ be explained if Christ is truly man that has a human soul?

610–658, Sergius, Patriarch of Constantinople, hoped to answer these issues by saying that Christ had 1 will, the divine human. Sergius drew up a formula of conciliation that was intended to calm the Monophysites, (1 nature), but which wouldn't get rid of the Chalcedonian symbol & creedal "2 natures," concept. Thus, what was to become known as the Monothelitism (1 Will) problem, started as an attempt to compromise, appease & un-alienate the Monophysites. During this era, the Emperor Heraclius, (born 575, died 641, reigned 610–641), & his advisors, all wanted to retain they Monophysites from going over to the Persians. They feared that if they were alienated anymore because of on going rivalries between the different rivalries over on going Christological issues, that they'd side with the Persian encroachments into the Empire that started about 614, & continued for many years. For by 621, the Persian army was threatening Constantinople. Consequently, Sergius reasoned that if the 2 natures of the Chalcedon creed was retained, the Chalcedonians wouldn't be antagonized, while if he asserted that the Jesus had 1 will only, the Monophysites would be appeased, because, if Jesus had only 1 nature, as they claimed, perhaps they would accept only 1 will, & would conclude that the Bishop had advanced to side with their Monophysite religious ideology. Further moves to gain support were made by means of arguments, promises of promotion, to get the bishop of Phasis to become a zealous advocate of the compromise measure, as he was made Patriarch of Alexandria. Also, the leader of the Syrian Monophysites were won over too, & made patriarch of Antioch. Next step was to try to recruit Pope, or Roman bishop, Honorius I (reigned 625–638), to support the new compromise. But such things were of no importance to the West. When asked for his opinion, the pope responded with sarcastic annoyance that the new definition seemed unexceptional, & that he had no patience with theoreticians, (or a person who develops or studies the theoretical framework of a subject), who persisted, like a lot of 'croaking frogs' in re-opening old quarrels. He said that they, at Rome, profess a single will in Christ, because the divinity assumed our nature, but not the sin, 'or original sin,' that was in it. Mary was also free of 'original sin,' too. The Emperor had Sergius substitute 'will' for 'energy,' & publish the edict Ecthesis (profession of faith), in 638. In it the 1 or 2 energies, or 1 or 2 wills, concepts (called Monoenergism) tried to express an already distorted & non-scriptural controversial new compromising formula. When the Patriarch of Jerusalem heard the first version he objected to it as being only the new doctrine that was simply Monophysitism under another name & must be rejected. So more attempts to please as many different factions as possible continued, the Emperor had Sergius compromise further with trying a different word, 'energy,' but this didn't help either, & Honorius, in 638, the year of his death, had the edict Ecthesis, to command his subjects to forget about the 'energies,' (which they rejected because it scandalized some though found in certain church Fathers, while the '1 or 2 wills' concept wasn't found in any of the church Fathers' writings too). So the Emperor told them to forget the 'energies,' & conform to the doctrine of 1 will, or Monothelitism. Still, this didn't resolve any doctrinal issues, but only added more to the Christological controversy. More questions were raised about: What might 2 wills do in 1 being? Wouldn't there be conflicts, & competition between the 2 to see which 1 dominated? If one did over the other, would that mean the Father would have to be subordinated to the Son? Or would that be, like Arian (during the Trinitarian controversy of 325 Nicea), had taught, that Jesus was subordinated to the Father? Thus, with the possibility that the '2 wills' question, could lead to '2 wills opposed,' this was thrown out along with the 'energies' concept & all the subjects under Honorius were to thereafter conform to the '1 wills,' or Monothelism. Thus, there was in Christ only a single will.⁴⁴⁶²

While Honorius I of Rome (625–38), concurred with Sergius, the other Roman bishops were oppose to the '1 will' of the Ecthesis, & increasing opposition to it grew, so that by 648, Emperor Constans II, (born 630, died 668, reigned 641–668), weary of the controversy, withdrew Ecthesis. He then substituted for it the Typos, that thought-policed both sides by an imposing silence on both sides, & prohibition of any controversy over "the will" issues. In defiance of this, Bishop Martin I of Rome (649–653), convoked a council of Italian bishops in Rome, & anathematized the Monothelite leaders, like Sergius, Pyrrhus & Paul II of Constantinople. Angered by such defiance, the Emperor caused Martin I to be transported to Constantinople, condemned for treason & exiled to Crimea, where he died, 655. Vitalian (657–672), next to succeed Martin I, as bishop of Rome, didn't condemn the Typos, so that communion could be re-established between Rome & Byzantium. But then, along came Emperor Constantine IV, (born 648, died 685, reigned 668–685), & influenced by Bishop Agatho of Rome (678–681), Typos was suppressed, & religious peace was reestablished by the definitive condemnation of Monothelism (1 will). The 3rd Council of Constantinople 680, 6th Ecumenical Council, was held & Bishop George of Constantinople yielded to the pressures & the deposition of 1-will followers & their leaders began, as anathematizations were also handed out to, as they were also vilified as being "heretics," including former bishop of Rome, Honorius.⁴⁴⁶³

726, further thought policing continued on into later centuries, such as during the Byzantine era, & anti-art works movement, or the anti-icons eras, of the 8th century called the Iconoclastic controversy. Thus, the Iconoclastic conflict broke out as a results of an order of the Emperor of Byzantium, Leo III, in 726, (Leo III, born 680, died 741, founder of the Isaurian Dynasty, reigned as Emperor, 717–741). His son, Constantine V (740–775), directed the controversy with even greater zeal. The order was that all holy images or icons in the Empire, of Christ, the virgin Mary, & of saints, should be destroyed. The reason being stated that the ignorant Byzantines were worshiping the images, rather than simply showing reverence to Christian-theology prescribed. Doctrinal issues about the bodily representations of Christ were part of the controversy: "To deny the possibility of representing Christ by a visible image, claimed the adversaries of Iconoclasm, was to deny the reality of the Incarnation, and therewith the basis of the Christian faith."⁴⁴⁶⁴

A summation of clerical & civic practices, thought policing over the Christological & Trinitarian Controversies of the fourth–Seventh centuries in the Roman Empire(s) of the West & East (Constantinople – Byzantium), when the apostasy raged on: It was a time of continual back & forth swaying of the churches, when different councils exiled & replaced, then restored the former exiled. Or banished & replaced, to later restore those earlier deposed. Rivals excommunicated each other, & replaced many different bishops, & put ones favored by the Emperors of the times, according to the dominating sect of the areas too. The churches suffered & were damaged by the on going practice of removing those who replaced the formerly exiled, who then being restored to their former seats of clerical powers, as such acts were being enforced by councils backed by imperial powers. But then, when a new Emperor came into power that favored a different rival, the former sect was sometimes harshly dealt with, & some suffered capital-punishments, & discriminations, property confiscations, church buildings were taken over by their rivals, & their writings, (once approved earlier), to then be burned & destroyed or suppressed. Imperial powers were used to enforce on going changes & reformulating of non-scriptural words used in the Councils' canons, creeds, synods' decisions, & the dogmatic letters of rival church leaders to be approved, or later burned, when their rivals regained power. Plus, forced signing of different changing creedal formulas & statements, that became the laws of the land. Or councils' decisions that were also against the latest former once dominating sects' dogmas, against their leaders, as they took their turn being thought policed by Imperial troops.⁴⁴⁶⁵

The Iconoclast argument clouded the Christology controversy with further products created by the later stages of the Great Apostasy during these later centuries. How to depict the divine in art? Was it possible or even to be permitted? If so, how was the divine to be depicted? How would Christ be? What about the Father & Holy Ghost? If Christ had 2 natures, human & divine, as it was argued, how could they then be depicted? The Iconoclasts' attempted to answer these types of questions, & answer their rivals, as those answers were based on orthodox Christology. Both sides of the issue at least agreed that the Divine, could not without blasphemy be represented in pictures. "Christ had two natures—human and divine. A claim to only represent only the human nature was contrary to the dogma of the indivisibility of the two natures, and a lapse into the so-called Nestorian heresy." However, to claim both natures of Christ could be depicted, amounted to a denial of the distinction of the two natures, & thus fall into agreement with the Monophysite heresy, (one nature of Christ). Thus, according to this controversy, any representation in art of Christ was impossible & was a form of blasphemy & thus, art works, or icons that depicted him were to be destroyed, whitewashed, or removed.⁴⁴⁶⁶ These types of on going early to later controversies, over the nature(s). Plus, over the human physical body of Christ, as actually having been born into a physical body that could suffer, while his Divine nature couldn't. Or the controversies over there being a physical-resurrection, or as others argued, a spiritual resurrection only. Plus, how to depict the trinity, 3 in 1, or those, who rejected the trinity & the Nicene creed, how to depict the 3 separate beings in the divine Godhead. All these types of controversies, sometimes enforced by Emperors' decrees, or clerical canons, or royal laws, all put artists in danger of getting in trouble with those who wanted to enforce whatever were the dominating dogmas in whatever areas of the different times & places that the artists were in. Thus, to be safer from being guilty of the numerous violations of laws that spawned from these different controversies, a lot of symbolism that represented the trinity, or the Son, Father & Holy Ghost, developed over time.⁴⁴⁶⁷

9th c., Paschasius Radbert brought into the Roman Catholic church's doctrine of the sacrament, the doctrine of the real or corporeal presence of Christ in the eucharist. This was contested by Berengarius in the 11th c., & denied by John Wyclif in the 15th c. How were these beliefs in the body & blood aspects of Christ, then translated over into issues about the trinity? Plus, how did this translate over into the on going issues about which member of the Godhead, if any, still had his body, namely Jesus Christ resurrected? Especially if, & as different ones arose, & were claiming that the Godhead was without body, parts, & passions, as it would later be enforced by laws of the land, in different areas of the American 13 colonies.⁴⁴⁶⁸

11th c., St. Anselm, the philosopher, believed in an “infinite God,” that is unlimited, not territorially bound. A “God” that lacks nothing, is good, & is worthy of religious worship. He cannot be limited in any way. To be limited in any way is to be relative in that way, which would in turn create the possibility of being dwarfed by something else that is greater. Thus, God must tower above all other objects & cannot have body or parts. Anything that is bounded by place is less than that which is not limited by place. Since nothing is greater than God, he can be in no place but rather must be in all places at all times.⁴⁴⁶⁹

1014, a song of praise in venerated in Gloria, that starts out with Nicene Creed wording, then pre-existence themes, in the words about how Christ, for our salvation, “descendit de coelis. Et incarnatus est de Spiritu Sancto ex Maria Virgine: et homo factus est.” Translated, Christ, “came down from heaven. And was made Flesh by the Holy Ghost of the Virgin Mary: and was made man.” The song also mentions Christ as being “the Only-begotten Son of God.” But how literal, during these later centuries, was that to be interpreted? It also mentions how Christ rose from the dead on the 3rd day, ascended into heaven & sits on the right hand of the Father. But how literal, if not at all, was that to be interpreted, back then?⁴⁴⁷⁰

1054, the on going schisms in the churches caused a split between the Eastern Greek “Orthodox” (meaning “true belief”) church of the Byzantine Empire, & the Latin Roman “Catholic,” (universal) church, of the Western Empire. Pope Leo IX attempted to get the East to endorse the western interpretations in creedal formulas concerning the procession of the Holy Ghost proceeding from the Father and the Son, in the on going schism over wording in the Nicene Creed. Thus, patriarch of the east at Constantinople, Michael Cerularius, concluded that the additions of the words “and the Son” to the Nicene Creed was heresy. Along with other schisms & differences in church practices, plus claims to who had more authority to enforce dogmatic formulas, all these were some of the things that caused the split. The Pope anathematized the patriarch, while the patriarch excommunicated the Pope.⁴⁴⁷¹

During the around 1300, the anonymous German Nizzahon vetus, vilified Christ as a common criminal, the Hanged One, etc. For doubting the Saviour, mocking the Virgin, the Trinity, etc., inquisitors went after the Jewish Talmud, the works of Rashi of Troyes, Maimonides and the polemical works of David Kimhi son of Joseph (1160-1235) of Narbonne. As the polemical war between Jews & Christians raged, some Christians in power saw to it that the Jews should be treated the same way as heretics. Either they could convert, or suffer being persecuted, expelled, or could be hunted down for forced conversion tactics to be applied upon them.⁴⁴⁷²

1376, Nicolás Eymeric, made a cardinal, appointed Grand Inquisitor of Aragon, earlier, in this year, he published Guide to Inquisitors (Directorium inquisitorum), & it demanded & obligated that one of the beliefs Christians had to believe in, or be counted as a heretic, was that they must believe & not deny the Holy Trinity.⁴⁴⁷³

1529, Martin Luther & Ulrich Zwingli met in the castle of the Landgrave in Marburg. Melancthon, Justas, Cruciger, & others went with Luther. Oecolampadius, Bucer, Jacob Sturm, & others with Zwingli. There, the Marburg Articles were their attempts to work out differences & areas of agreement between their different Reformation & Protestant views. One being the sacrament, as they relate to their views about the body of Christ, (a point of disagreement). 1530, the Augsburg Confession states Luther’s & his followers’ position, in Article X, how that the true body & blood of Christ are truly present under the form of bread & wine. In contrast, the Roman Catholic sacrament becomes, or is transformed into the flesh & blood of Jesus. In contrast, Lutherans believed that the bread & wine, remains bread & wine, but that the body of Christ is in & around them, called consubstantiation, the Roman Catholic sacrament (transubstantiation). Most other reformers, especially in Southern Germany & Switzerland, didn’t believe the real or corporeal presence of Christ, maintaining a spiritual presence only. Zwingli declared that the eucharist wasn’t a sacrifice, but a commemoration of the sacrifice once offered on the cross. 1524, Zwingli in a letter to a friend, declares his beliefs that the bread & wine were merely emblems, or representations of Christ’s body & blood.⁴⁴⁷⁴

1529, 1 October and 4 October, friendly discussion & debates between Luther & Zwingli at the castle of the Landgrave in Marburg, were later called The Marburg Colloquy. During it Luther & Zwingli discuss & debate differences over the Sacrament. Christological & Trinitarian issues over Godhead themes arose over the bodily attributes of Christ’s body being “everywhere” present in the sacrament, or being bodily separate, the sacrament only being symbolic of his body & blood. Thus, Luther held to the medieval doctrine of ubiquity, (or everywhere, in Latin ubique ‘everywhere’). For the body of Christ was believed by many Reformation Christians & Lutherans, to be everywhere present. Zwingli rejected that concept. Thus, Luther is said to have began the discussion about the sacrament by writing in chalk on the table: “This is my body” [Hoc est Corpus Meum], and by saying, “I take these words literally; if anyone does not, I shall not argue but contradict,” and Zwingli spent all his argumentative powers in disputing the doctrine of ubiquity (the medieval doctrine that the body of Christ was everywhere present); Zwingli maintained that the body of Christ was at the Right Hand of God, and could not be present, extended in space, in the elements, which were signs representing what was absent. Luther argued that the body of Christ was in the elements, as, to use his own illustration, the sword is present in the sheath. As a soldier could present his sheathed sword and say, truly and literally, This is my sword, although nothing but the sheath was visible; so although nothing could be seen or felt but bread and wine, these elements in the Holy Supper could be literally and truly called the Body and blood of Christ.⁴⁴⁷⁵ These differences split the two Reformers & caused further issues between Lutherans & Zwinglians.

The roots of later Christendom’s laws that enforced beliefs in the Trinity as being a being, somehow 3 in 1 & only 1 God, or 3 persons united in God, & claims that thus is God one and, nevertheless everywhere present. Has their roots in these Trinitarian controversial concoctions influenced by Greek philosophical terms adopted by many early Christian Apologists, many of the Ante, Nicene & Post-Nicene Fathers, including Augustine. It became a death sentence to those who rejected the different formulas of creedal dogmas concocted. For with the backing of imperial, & royal thought-policed policies these formulas & different versions of creedal wording that changed from one Emperor or bishop to the next, became the laws of the lands, in many different areas of early to later Christendom. So that as time went by, on down through the centuries, these “laws” were enforced to the point where people could be tortured, burned, & “legally” murdered if they didn’t confess, or totally accept the creedal incomprehensible & unscriptural concepts, & their controversial off shoots that the different bishops in different areas concocted. Eventually, the laws enforced were that the Godhead was 3 in 1, & without body parts & passions! But, these militant thought policing forced beliefs, didn’t start with Augustine, they happened before his time, & he was one in many that helped keep they thought policing going on into later Christianity.⁴⁴⁷⁶

1611–1616, governor Thomas Dale, the Dale Laws, spread England's harsh religious theocracy laws to Dale's jurisdiction in America. Those who spoke impiously of the Trinity or any article of Anglican faith were to be put to death, or suffer capital punishment!⁴⁴⁷⁷

1634–49, Maryland, America, Protestants & Catholic rivalry from Europe spread to America, so Cecil Calvert directed the Maryland assembly to pass the first toleration act. By the Act of 1649, toleration was to be continued for all Trinitarian Christians, with the state protecting the religious rights of such citizens. However, anyone who denied the Trinity or unity of the Godhead was to be punished with death, their lands were to be confiscated, & their goods to the Lord Proprietary and his heirs.⁴⁴⁷⁸

1649, Cecil Calvert, Catholic proprietor of Maryland, in colonial America, after noting how Catholics had been persecuted for their faith in other areas. He didn't help solve toleration issues any better than his rivals by passing the Act of 1649. By it he also intended to use to try to get profits from confiscations & forfeitures. Thus, he directed the assembly to pass the first "toleration" act in American history, but it was for all Trinitarian Christians, but not for non-believers. "By the Act of 1649, toleration was to be continued for all Trinitarian Christians and the state was authorized to protect the religious rights of such citizens. But anyone who denied "the Holy Trinity, the Father Son, and Holy Ghost . . . or the unity of the Godhead" was to be "punished with death and confiscation or forfeiture of all his or her lands and goods to the Lord Proprietary and his heirs."⁴⁴⁷⁹

1705, in America, Virginia colony, Anglican dominated. Despite the Toleration Act passed in England in 1689, intolerant ecclesiastical laws & policies continued in the 18th century in Virginia. "By an Act of 1705, anyone convicted of denying the Trinity (which was interpreted as the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost being one essence)... was to be denied the right of holding any office in the colony." If convicted a second time, nonconformists could suffer imprisonment for 3 years.⁴⁴⁸⁰

Some writers seek to vilify the founding fathers of America, almost making them sound like they weren't Christians, or didn't believe in God. The truth is, that many of them did believe in Christ, the Christ of the New Testament, but not of the 'god' of the Nicene Creed. One in many reasons for the USA's constitution, as to why it was written, was to respond to the lack of freedoms experienced by many of them & the people in the different 13 colonies, & areas that had enforced beliefs in the trinity, plus other religious thought policing laws. As noted earlier, a person could be put to death, according to the thought policing laws, if they refused to believe in the trinity.⁴⁴⁸¹

Civil and ecclesiastical tyranny had shared the same bed from the time that a church, which had long since lost its virtue, was seduced by Constantine, during the 4th century. Consequently, from that time until the American Revolution, true religion was impossible, especially without true prophets & apostles. This became obvious for different ones that had noted the on going corruption in the national institutes of churches, & the thought policing that went on. Religious liberty was unknown. The creeds of Christendom, were like chains forged in the fires of hell, & kept the souls of men & women held captive in the dark dungeon of theological mysteries, & religious inconsistencies, & nonsense. Different particular dogmas were guarded and abused by those wearing the clerical robes, who in turn were sustained by the power of the state. Forced tithing-taxes, required licenses to preach, all these kinds of factors and more, meant lack of religious freedoms. In that permission to express religious beliefs were selectively given, while others' preaching attempts were often suppressed, controlled & thought policed by those who enforced their particular faith's tenets. In the American 13 colonies, such conditions were according to the areas that different faiths had gained political-religious powers & controls to dominate over rivals. Thus, in any particular area, you either embraced the tenets of the prevailing faith, or were labeled an enemy of the state.⁴⁴⁸²

Thus, it was under these settings that religious freedoms were sought after, that Seekers of truth & those seeking for a return, even a restoration to the original earliest Christian faith of Christ. They, looked for the return of the spiritual gifts, & the return of true prophets, & apostles. Different ones, noting the world was in a state of apostasy, & also noted the products created by the apostasy, such as the trinity dogma. Thomas Jefferson notes: "When we shall have done away with the incomprehensible jargon of the Trinitarian arithmetic, that three are one, and one is three; when we shall have knocked down the artificial scaffolding, reared to mask from view the very simple structure of Jesus, when, in short, we shall have unlearned everything which has been taught since his day, and got back to th pure and simple doctrine he inculcated, we shall then be truly and worthily his disciples."⁴⁴⁸³ Thomas Jefferson also attributed the absurdity of the notion of the trinity to Anthanasius, & that the doctrine was a result of the unhappiest example of what happens when one gave up "morals for mysteries, Jesus for Plato."⁴⁴⁸⁴

LATER RESULTS OF ANTI-BODY DEITY BELIEFS: 1646, in many parts of much later Christendom, the anti-body dogmas of the much earlier Christological Controversy won out to maintain the later believes, such as those by the Westminster Confession of Faith: "There is but one only, living, and true God: who is infinite in Being and perfection, a most pure Spirit, invisible, without body, parts, or passions."⁴⁴⁸⁵

OUTSIDERS VIEWED CHRISTIANS' GODHEAD AS POLYTHEISTIC: Even though early to later Christians tried to argue that the 3- in 1 Godhead made them monotheists, or believers in One God only, outsiders looked at the 3 in the 1 as being polytheistic. "Responding to Muslim allegations that the Trinity showed Christians to be polytheist, lawyers like Innocent IV and Hostiensis asserted that Islam itself was idolatry and polytheism."⁴⁴⁸⁶

1141, the Abbot of Cluny, Peter the Venerable, touring Benedictine monasteries of Spain, met up with 2 scholars, an Englishman, Robert, probably from the village of Ketton in Rutland; plus, Hermann, from Dalmatia. He got them to make translations of Muhammadan documents, with the assistance of 2 local men, Peter of Toledo & Mahomet the Saracen (Muslim). After a few years, they built up a collection of works that explained Islam, from Islamic points of view, known as the Dialogue of Abdia, plus an early work of Christian-Muslim polemics, the Apology of Al-Kindi. Peter did a short response: Summary of the whole heresy of the diabolical sect of the Saracens.⁴⁴⁸⁷ From Muslims' point of view, they were the true monotheists, & Christians, no matter how they tried to make their 3 in 1 God, as only 1 God, still sounded & were considered as polytheistic, when mention of the three members of the Godhead, were considered. Thus, in their polemics, this was one of the issues they considered.

12th–13th c. "Anti-Christian polemics reinforced natural scepticism. Muslims ridiculed monogyny, clerical celibacy and trinitarian 'polytheism'."⁴⁴⁸⁸

DEPICTIONS OF THE GODHEAD IN LATER CENTURIES: The Trinitarian controversy later produced many different rival view points as to how the image of God, & the Godhead was to be depicted in art. For after the Nicene Creed era, and on through the centuries, many of the Christian artists were faced with the challenges & questions as to how the Godhead was to be depicted. Some artists depicted the Godhead as a 3 headed one body personage, while others with three faces on one head. Some Christian artists introduced different symbols such as rabbits, stars, triangles, fishes, & circles, etc. In some of the other branches of Christianity which had rejected the creed, they depicted the Godhead as being 3 separate personages, or three men. The Father was often depicted as an older man, while the Son was depicted with wounds, while in some cases, the Holy Ghost was depicted symbolically as a dove, while at other times as a man. In other cases, the Father & Son are two separate identical looking older men, with a dove, symbolic of the Holy Ghost. For example, in Cité de Dieu, a folio manuscript in the Bibliothèque de Sainte Geneviève, the Divine Trinity is depicted as two identical looking men, with a dove in the middle, wings extended, touching their cheeks. Enthroned, they hold open a book, a cloak is draped around both men, the man on the left holds an orb in his left hand.⁴⁴⁸⁹

The confusion & challenges the early to later artists faced were because of how different Christology controversial issues & the Trinitarian issues of the council at Nicea, 325 & later, made it difficult to depict the human-god Christ, the incorporeal Father, & Holy Spirit, or the Trinity-Godhead. If, as some sects argued, God the Father came down into the body of the Son to be born, suffer, & die. Then, how was that to be depicted in art works? If, as others argued, God the Father, Jesus Christ & the Holy Ghost, were not three separate beings, but manifestations of the same one God. Then, how should that translate into art works? If, according to others, the Father, Son, Spirit were only one, & thus all three of the Trinity were formed in Mary's womb. How might that be depicted in art works? If, as different ones argued, God the Father, Son, Spirit weren't confined to a body, but were immaterial, without body, parts or passions. Then, how would all that, if it even could be, translated into art? If, as others who rejected the Creed & the different formulas of the different councils, argued that the Father, Son & Spirit, were three separate beings in the form of man, as man was created in the image of the gods, & thus the Godhead consists of three separate Gods. Then, how could that look in art? Would different types of symbols be safer representations of those who believed in incomprehensible a 3 in 1 Trinity? The Nicene council, in coming up with the Nicene Creed, they still hinted to 3 gods, although claiming only 1 Godhead. But then, insisting confusingly that there wasn't three gods, for there was only 1, although there was also "Three Persons," distinct from each other, the Holy Ghost being "the Third Person." These types of illogical, & incomprehensible language only added more confusion & wonderment to the whole mess. "In the "one substance," itself "indivisible," the council of Nicea had affirmed the idea of one (immaterial) God and then continued to maintain that there were nevertheless three distinct Persons in the deity."⁴⁴⁹⁰ The conflicting ways of describing the Godhead, also contributed to the conflicting & diverse ways the Godhead was depicted in art, or symbolized. Different ones continued to insist that the Godhead was of the same substance, so that the Father, Son & Holy Ghost are not in reality "a triple deity," but is "numerically one."⁴⁴⁹¹ If so, how might that be translated over into art works? The descriptions didn't help either in attempting to somehow make three persons into one. A trinity of persons, three persons, who are called Father, Son & the Holy Spirit, are distinct from each other, for the Father is not the Son, and the Holy Spirit is neither the Father nor the Son. But even though they are said to be distinct, they were somehow, & it's a mystery, they are not three Gods, because they subsist all three in a single and unique nature. There is unity of nature, but distinction of Persons, & this is the mystery of the Trinity. So modern descriptions go.⁴⁴⁹²

A depiction of a three faced one body Godhead is from Iconographie Chrétienne.⁴⁴⁹³ We've noted that the pre-existence controversy was crashed up against by pre-existence themes in the Christological controversy. That also was crashing up against other controversies, as they blended with the huge waves of the Trinitarian controversy. The consequences, years later, strange products of the Great Apostasy. That of fragments of Christ's pre-existence that got included in depictions of the 3-faced Godhead, as seen in art works of the creation, the 3-faced-1-head-trinity, with Adam & Eve.⁴⁴⁹⁴ With one of the 3 faces representing Christ, he must have pre-existed to be involved in the creation. In the Hebrew, Elohim, can also denote a combined masculine & feminine in the plurality of Gods, thus Genesis 1:1 could mean: "In the beginning, Gods created the heaven and earth"⁴⁴⁹⁵ Attempts had been made to try to work in the trinity in with the "us" (plural), & "our" (plural) parts of Genesis 1:26. "It is argued that the Apostolic Fathers and the earlier theologians saw it as indicative of the Trinity. Modern commentators, however, favor the explanation that it is a matter of pluralis majestatis (plural majesty), meaning God is so great he can only be described in plural terms, which of course they assiduously avoid doing." A 3rd explanation is that God is speaking to himself; and if not, then to the animals and the elements, if not then to the spirits or angels who constitute his heavenly council. However, the attempts to associate the "let us" with the Trinity, is regarded as bad history & as being "too ingenious to have occurred to the early Hebrew mind."⁴⁴⁹⁶

About 8th century, The Trinity of Salerno, Sketched by the artist of Gartenlaube in an inn at Salerno, the Godhead's oneness is depicted as having one head covered in long hair, four eyes, three noses, three mouths three beards & moustaches. The Godhead's mouths are not smiling, & the four eyes seem to be looking downward.⁴⁴⁹⁷

15th c., Italian Trinity, on one enthroned body, on one head, three faces look in three different directions. Behind these faces is a triangle symbol, & this version of the trinity, holds an orb in the left hand, while right hand is raised to shoulder level, with two fingers up, perhaps in blessing gesture. Two of the faces have beards, one, not.⁴⁴⁹⁸

16th c., a painted window in the church of Notre Dame at Chalons, France, shows the trinity as 3 faces on one head, 4 eyes, 3 noses, 3 mouths, 3 beards, etc. The middle two eye looking forwards, & are also the same eyes for the other two faces. For, when looking at each face, the right side face's eyes mysteriously look like they are looking away, this happens on the left face's eyes too. But when one focuses on the middle face the two middle eyes look forwards, even though those same eyes' directions will automatically change directions, in this interesting optical illusion, when looking at the right or left other two faces.⁴⁴⁹⁹

1734, there were many art works, that of course, showed the Godhead as separate deities, apart from each other. An example in many is the baptism of Christ art work in St. Jean Church at St. Jean, Ile d'Orleans, Montmorency, Quebec, Canada, built in 1734. It shows the Father, as an older looking bearded man extended half way out of the clouds above the Holy Ghost-dove symbol, with Christ having water poured on his head, standing ankle-high water, in the river Jordan. Other artist, like Francesco Albani, El Greco, etc., in earlier centuries, depicted the Godhead as separate from each other.⁴⁵⁰⁰

Tainted & influenced by the earlier creed making era of the church fathers of the third – fifth centuries, the arguments of the Christology Controversy, the pagan influenced Roman Emperors that enforced different versions & formulas about the nature of God & the Godhead. Plus, the on going influences that got passed down to later modern times, some modern Christians continued to argue for their particular versions of what they believe the Godhead to be like. Thus some claim that

Isaiah 43:10-12; 45:21-2, supports their claim that there is only one God and no other Gods, for God does not know of any besides Him. The historical situation in Isaiah's day shows us that the Lord was concerned with how the people were forming idols as their "gods" rather than accepting the true savior as their God. The makers of idols have no knowledge for they set up the wood of their graven image, and pray unto a god that cannot save. Is there any other person who is our Savior, who paid the price for the sins of the world, other than the savior Jesus Christ? Answer: "I, even I, am the Lord; and beside me there is no savior." (Isa.43:11). Is the Father the savior? Is the Holy Ghost? Did they die on the cross? Or is Jesus Christ the only savior who died for the sins of the whole world? Isaiah 46:9 has been used too, however, the first verse talks about the idols of that time (Isaiah 46:1, 47:4). Some modern Christians cite "there is none beside me. I am the Lord, and there is none else." (Isaiah 45:5, 44:8, 7:14, 9:6, Matthew 1:18-25, Luke chapter 24; Philippians 2:5-11). A closer look at these passages in Isaiah shows that the Lord was responding against the idolatry of that time. (Isaiah 45:15-17). God was saying that the idol "gods" formed before, and which would be continued to be formed after that time were not real gods like unto himself. Thus, the Lord through Isaiah continued to warn against the idolatry that flourished at that time. "To whom will ye liken me, and make me equal, and compare me, that we may be like? They lavish gold out of the bag, and weigh silver in the balance, and hire a goldsmith; and he maketh it a god: they fall down, yea, they worship." (Isa.46:5-7).⁴⁵⁰¹

The Lord said that these false "gods" thus formed by the hands of men, were not divine. For there was no god formed among these idols that could be compared to Him. (Exodus 20:3-40).

Some modern Christians have claimed that God wouldn't restrict himself by taking upon himself a body. However, God the Father sent the Son to gain a body, so how did that body restrict Christ? One of the reasons why some people rejected Christ was because he looked like an ordinary looking man, (Matthew 13:53-8; Mark 6:1-6; John 1:46, 7:41-42, 10:23-36; Luke 4:16-30). Today, some modern Christians used parts John 4:24 and Luke 24:39 to suggest that God does not have a body, or that God is a spirit only. However, in Luke 24 Christ shows some of his followers that he had a resurrected body, (Luke 24:36-48). Others have claimed that if Philip had seen Christ he also saw the Father, for they are one in each other. However, Philip saw the Father's image, likeness, & family resemblance in Christ. Historically, and in some cases, the word "one" can also mean the same thing as unity, to agree in one, and one in purpose. Early to later 19th century publications are filled with hundreds of examples of this kind of symbolic terminology, which is not to be taken as being literal.

Isaiah had given many titles to Christ: "For unto us a child is born, unto us a Son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace" (Isaiah 9:6). But is Christ the literal everlasting Father, in that Jesus is his own God the Father? Of course not!

Very few sacred titles are used exclusively for one or the other. For example, "Who is the God of Abraham, Isaac, & Jacob?" We might think first of Jesus Christ since the Father delegated responsibility for this earth to Him. However, some of the other prophets have understood this and yet they have designated God the Father as the God of Abraham, Isaac, & Jacob. In other cases even former prophets, now angelic messengers speak as if they were Christ, (Revelation 22:8-9 & 12-16).

Some confusion and misunderstandings have arisen from these types of situation because the prophets have called the different members of the Godhead by different titles, while in other cases they all have shared the same sorts of titles. Thus, some have misunderstood who the prophets had in mind. While the prophets themselves probably knew to whom they spoke, but the identity of the messengers may have become confused in translation or transcription of the original texts.

CHANGING GOD?: Some modern Christians, like the early anti-Christians, have claimed that their rivals have a changing God. The early anti-Christians said that Moses, taught that there was only "one God", now the early Christians have added another, who "changes", when God does "not change."

In some ways, if there is only one God, then God the Father, and the Holy Ghost would have had to have also been changed through the changes that came about in Christ, as he passed through the different realms of existences. For when his spirit gained a body at birth, did theirs? Then when Christ's spirit left that body at death, did theirs? And then, when Christ was later resurrected, were they too? If there were no changes, then the other 2 Gods would have to have been separate & distinct individuals, apart from Christ's person, in order to have not been changed in these different ways. Does Jesus still have His resurrected body or has He changed? In what way does He manifest His personality as the Christ in modern times? Other modern Christians argue that God does not change, that He is and always has been a spirit that fills the universe, and He is not a man, "God Is not a Man." They use Romans 1:21-3, to say of other Christians, how that they have changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image like unto corruptible man. And yet others will also claim that God changed by taking upon himself a body of flesh in the person of Jesus Christ. Could God "Himself" then be "guilty" of this same charge? (Compare Philippians 2:5-8 & Romans 1:21-3). Is a dove a bird? What then was the "form" of the Holy Ghost in the scriptures? (Mark 1:10, Matthew 3:16). If they are 3 in 1, or only "one". Did all 3 in 1 literally turn into that dove for that moment? Rejecting the physical aspects of God, other modern Christians argue that God "fills the universe" in a literal way! Because He is "a spirit". However, what will this "god" look like when it comes again, if it does not change? But if God does literally fill heaven & earth, because it is impossible for him to be in one place at once, (as some modern Christians say). Did this unchangeable "one God" or 3 in 1 being, in the "real Jesus", walk the streets of Jerusalem, at the same time, He was in Nazareth? But how could he not have been there, if their "god" is literally every where, & fills the universe? Some use Jer.23:24, where God is said by them to literally "fill heaven & earth". Now does God literally fill heaven & earth with His person? In that His body fills heaven & earth? Or could this means that God has a perfect knowledge & foresight, etc., of all things? That there is nothing hid from His "all seeing eye"?

To understand the different versions of deification that developed over the centuries, we first had to consider how the early to later Christians viewed, understood & believed what God, Christ, & the Holy Ghost, are said to be like. What were they like in their nature, their beings, what they looked like, did they have physical bodies, or were they divine spirit(s) only, etc.

PART 10: DEIFICATION, THEOSIS, MORAL PERFECTION

There can be no doubt that Christ, his apostles, & many of the earliest to later Christians taught the doctrine which scholars call deification, divinization or theosis.

This doctrine that a person can become divine, or can be deified a god is not to say that everyone will, but it is to say that it is possible.

Many early to later Christians had conflicting views & interpretations about the doctrine because of how outside & inside influences began to shape later Christian dogmas, such as during and after the Nicene Creed era. For some versions of the doctrine blended the views as presented in the creeds. While other versions reflected neo-platonic anti-body elements in which God was considered to not have a body. Thus, a number of hellenized versions under the pressures of Greek philosophy took on the anti-body doctrines in Greek thought which didn't mix very good with the doctrine concerning a physical resurrection in deification. Eventually, a number of early Christians began to consider deification to mean that they would become gods, but would not have the need for a body in the eternal world, because God is a spirit only.⁴⁵⁰² Other earlier Christians who were not influenced by Greek philosophy argued against this idea, saying that God does have a body, and that when they would be resurrected they would be raised up with glorious bodies that would be fashioned like unto Christ's glorious resurrected body. And so, we note and acknowledge from the start that there was diversity in early Christianity. Which diversity was based on a number of polemical situations & influences during those early centuries.

The mysteries or ordinances with all the coronation rites, & rites of passage, etc., represented in types, the pilgrimage of the human family in, & through the different realms of existences, and the hope of our possible glorious return to the family in heaven. The mysteries included baptism, sacramental meals, different hand clasping rites of passage when being raised up out, or into different realms of existences. Plus, the body being clothed in garments as a type of being clothed in a glorious body during the resurrection. Coronations rites were types of the heavenly coronation rites of passage, with assumptions or ascensions, anointings, being invested in royal robes and garments, being crowned, enthroned, glorified, and eventually deified.⁴⁵⁰³

SOME OF THE BASIC ELEMENTS AND ASPECTS OF THE DOCTRINE OF DEIFICATION IN HISTORIC CHRISTENDOM

1. Return to glory: When the faithful & righteous die, their spirits return to heaven, where they are welcomed in glory.

2. The ultimate end and symbolical type of the mysteries or ordinances, ritualistically enacts the righteous' quest and sojourn through different realms in order to return home to God. At which time they will be coronated, anointed, robed, crowned, enthroned, glorified, and deified a god or goddess.1 (see End notes).

3. Martyrs who suffered for the cause of Christ, are perfected and deified in the after life, as a reward.

4. If one is faithful in this life in small things, upon being deified, God will intrust them with greater things, by making them rulers over many things.

5. God gave us Prophets, apostles, and other Church leaders, for the perfecting of the saints (Ephesians 4:10—14).

6. An early anti-Christian Celsus mocked early Christians for promising young people that if they would follow them, they could be made perfect.

7. Celsus also notes how the pagans had their own versions of deification, and thus charged that the Christians believed in an old worn out myth.

8. Early Christians, upon noting deification in the different mystery religions, argued that such things were counterfeit forms of deification.

9. The deified shine as bright as the sun.

10. The deified's body is fashioned & changed like Christ's glorious resurrected body was.

11. Christ came to earth to show us how to become gods.

12. Jewish writings say how the deified will inherit numerous worlds.

13. In other ancient documents: The deified will continue to have children in the after life. Their "seed" or descendants would be scattered across the universe.

14. In early Christian thought: The faithful and martyrs were already angels. Thus, they were already progressing towards becoming a god or goddess.

15. Glorified, illuminated deified saints ought not to be worshiped for we should worship only the Father and Christ only.

16. However, later Christians did begin to worship different relatives who they believed were eventually deified.

17. Prayers were made to deified saints whom they hoped would reveal the glory that they now enjoyed.

18. They also hoped the deified would pass on certain requests to those in the Godhead.

19. In numerous Christian art works, the virgin Mary is enthroned with the Godhead.

20. She is also depicted as passing through heavenly coronation rites, in which she is lifted up by the hand into heaven, coronated, anointed, robed, crowned, glorified, & sits enthroned with the other three members of the Godhead, as the Queen of heaven.

21. Each rung in ladders to heaven symbolically represented different Christ like traits, such as love, kindness, & charity, etc. Thus, life's sojourn towards Christian moral perfection.

22. At the top of the ladder, Christ clasps hands and wrists to let them into heaven.

23. The "2 ways" or two extremes represents the two paths one can choose to go on. One brings you closer to where you become like the devil and his angles. The other brings you closer to where you progress towards becoming like Christ.

24. Later Christendom's stories of Adam & Eve have them seeking to return to their former state of glory where they were bright beings. Satan comes with his fallen angels to teach them a counterfeit form of deification. God sends them true messengers to expose Satan's counterfeit mysteries, and to give them the true ordinances by which they and their descendants can return to glory.⁴⁵⁰⁴

25. The sacramental bread was the body of Christ which deified their bodies.

BIBLICAL PASSAGES USED BY EARLY TO LATER CHRISTIANS

Psalms 81-2 was a passage that some of the early to later Christians made reference to in order to show from the scriptures that their own particular versions and interpretations of deification were based on the scriptures. "I have said, Ye are gods; and all of you are children of the most High." Christ cites this passage in defense of his claim to being divine, (John 10:30-39). Thus, He may have set an example which some of the earliest to later Christians may have followed when they made reference to what is now Psalm 82. Some of the Jews of Christ's time could not accept Christ's divine Godhood for to them He was just a man claiming divine rank. Christ reminded them that the concept was in their law. "Is it not written in your law, I said Ye are gods?" Perhaps this concept may have been suppressed or ignored in later centuries during the times of apostasy in ancient Israel. So that by the time of Christ it was a concept that was not accepted by many of the Jews, though there may have been some who accepted the concept. Another different reading of Psalms 82, is from the Qumran 11th cave fragment, which scholars seem to suggest hints to the possible deification of Melchizedek. In line 9-10, of Psalms 82:1, 'God (Elohim) has taken His place in the divine council; in the midst of gods He will hold judgement', as referring to Melchizedek. Line 25 ends by saying, 'Your God, that is....' the fragment cuts off at this point, but scholars think that the missing word is Melchizedek, in reference to his divinity.⁴⁵⁰⁵ Note also the reference to the council in heaven, a pre-existence theme.

Some of the early to later Christians who made reference to Psalms 81-2 as scriptural proof texts in support of their own particular versions of the doctrine of deification were:

1. Justin Martyr, 110-65.⁴⁵⁰⁶
2. Irenæus, 120-202.⁴⁵⁰⁷
3. Clement of Alexandria, 153-193-217.⁴⁵⁰⁸
4. Tertullian 145-220, (The Ante-Nicene Fathers = ANF, 3:480, & 608).
5. Origen of Alex., 185-230-254. ANF 4:509.
6. Thascius Cyprian, 200-58, bishop of Carthage, martyr 248-58, ANF 5:263-4, & 518.
7. Novatian, Roman Presbyter, 210-80, ANF 5:631.
8. Athanasius, Bishop of Alexandria, 298–373, (The Nicene & Post-Nicene Fathers = (TN&PNF), Vol.4, p. lxxxv, lxxxvii, & 329, Discourse Against The Arians I:38-39.
9. S. Cyril, Archbishop of Jerusalem, 318– 386, (TN&PNF) Vol.7, p. i, xi, 2.
10. Jerome, 345-420.⁴⁵⁰⁹
11. Augustine of Hippo, 354-430.⁴⁵¹⁰

Christ prayed that we would become perfect and one with Him and the Father. "Sanctify them through thy truth...And for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth." "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through thy word; that they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them: that they may be one, even as we are one: I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me. Father, I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am; that they may behold my glory, which thou hast given me: for thou lovedst me before the foundation of the world." (John 17:17-24.) If we are to become one with Christ, & the Father, would we not also become divine? Would we not also be glorified with the same type of glory? Christ said: "And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them: that they may be one even as we are one...that they may be made perfect in one..." (Jn.17:22 & 23). Irenæus, 120–202, used John 17:24 to scripturally point out that the disciples would also be glorified. (ANF 1:478-9. Origen 185-230-254, used a portions of Christ's prayer in support of the doctrine of perfection & deification. ANF 4:344-5, Origen De Principiis, book 3, chap. 6.

This was what Christ hoped for when he said: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." (Matt.5:48). Origen also used this passage in defense of deification. ANF 4:509, Against Celsus, book 4, chap.29.

Another idea behind deification was that the earliest Christians believed that Christ & the Most High God the Father would not be removed out of their places so that these newly deified beings could take over: "For whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased; and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted." (Luke 14:11, 18:14). And: "The disciple is not above his master: but everyone that is perfect shall be as his master." (Luke 6:40). Irenæus 120–202, cites this passage to point out that in coming up out of the realm of the dead by way of the resurrection, the body that is raised up, is perfected. ANF 1:560. Clement of Alexandria, 153-193-217, cites this passage while writing about deification too. ANF 2:364, The Stromata, or Miscellanies, book 2, chap. xvii.

Paul wrote to the Romans that: "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are children of God: And if children, then heirs; heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together. For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us." (Romans 8:16-18). A number of early Christians used this passage to support their beliefs that the early Christian martyrs had been perfected, glorified, deified & rewarded with divine ranks. For they had remained faithful, & even though they had suffered greatly, they still had endured to the end.⁴⁵¹¹

Upon becoming heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ, we might want to consider what Christ was heir to. God appointed him to be "heir of all things", for it was through Christ that the worlds were created. Christ alone had purged our sins and had "sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on High; Being made so much better than the angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a more excellent name than they". The Father also said to his Son, "Thy throne O God, is forever and ever: a scepter of righteousness is the scepter of thy kingdom." (Hebrews 1:1-4, & 8; see also: Galatians 3:27-29, 4:1-7; Revelations 3:21-22; 21:7).

Another passage reads: "His lord said unto him, Well done thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee a ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy lord." (Matthew 25:21). Hippolytus 170-236, wrote that one of the reasons why the righteous had been deified was because they had shown that they had been faithful over small things while in earth life. And thus, upon being deified, they would have entrusted unto them that which was great. ANF 5:151, & note 6, The Refutation of All Heresies, Book X, chap. xxix).

The ritual of anointing is combined with the idea of deification, even in the earliest days of the Church. However, John noted that some of their anointing rituals had been counterfeited by "anti-Christ's" who had infiltrated the Church and who were bringing in counterfeit forms of anointing. He goes on to tell the earliest saints that the anointing they had received was from God, while the other was from "anti-Christ's". (1 John 2:3-11, 18-29.) John then goes on to present the idea and symbolical types in their own anointing ritual, and how deification fits in with some of the symbolical meanings behind anointing. For having been anointed they were cleansed and purified of their sins. This also shows up and is expounded upon in the writings of the Fathers in early to later Christianity.

John wrote: "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." (1 John 3:2-3). Origen 185-230-254, cites portions to support of the doctrine of perfection & deification. (ANF 4:344-5, 509, Origen De Principiis, book 3, chap.6; Against Celsus, book 4, chap. 29). Thascius Cyprian, 200-58, bishop of Carthage, martyr 248-58, wrote something similar: "What Christ is, we Christians shall be, if we imitate Christ." (ANF, 5:469).

Some of the different leaders in Christ's church were chosen to help the members develop Christ like traits. Thus, they were given: "For the perfecting of the saints, for the work of the ministry, for the edifying of the body of Christ: Till we all come to the unity of the faith and the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ:" (Eph.4:10-13). Clement of Alexandria used this passage upon writing about perfection & deification. ANF 2:433, & 547, Miscellanies, book IV, chap. xxi, & book VII, chap. xiv.

Peter wrote: "Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord, according as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called unto us to glory and virtue: Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust. And beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity. For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fail: For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord & Saviour Jesus Christ." (2 Peter 1:2-11). A portions of this passages helped Athanasius, 298–373, scripturally support the idea deification through Christ. (TN&PNF), Vol.4, p.lxxxv, lxxxvii, & p.576, Letters of Athanasius, LX. Ad Adelphium, 4).

"Knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance: for ye serve the Lord Christ. But he that doeth wrong shall receive for the wrong which he hath done". (Colossians 3:24-25.) "And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me". (Luke 22:29). In the New Testament we read about how some resurrected bodies will shine with greater glory and brightness than others. For in some cases our resurrected bodies will also be glorified, some to lesser, others to greater degrees of glory. (1 Corinthians 15:35-43). Origen [A.D. 185-230-254], used this passage while responding to the early anti-Christian Celsus, & while expounding on what he understood to be the doctrine of deification. ANF 4:509.

Jesus: "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear." Mat.13:43. Irenaeus, 120-202, cites this passage as scriptural evidences for deification. ANFI:523-5; Matt.13:40-3. Much later, Thomas Aquinas, 1225-74, also used this passage to suggest that the righteous would shine forth with great light and glory in the after life.⁴⁵¹²

The Old Testament Prophet Daniel wrote: "And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever." (Daniel 12:3). Irenaeus also cites from Daniel as scriptural proof text that showed that the faces of those who had been deified would shine with great glory and light. ANF 1: 488-90, & 497.

Christ tested a rich man to see if he was willing to do all that He asked of him in order to be perfected. The rich man said that he had kept the commandments from his youth till then, and he asked what more he lacked. Christ said: "If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven: and come follow me." (Matthew 19:16-26). However, this man refused to do what Christ asked of him. Later on during the 3rd century A.D., this passage inspired a number of Christians, such as a wealthy young man named Anthony of Egypt, 251–356, he became one of the first early Christian hermits, & the founder of monasticism. He was so impressed by the passage that he followed Christ's advice and retired to the desert. He was later joined by like-minded men who lived as monks or hermits who sought to work towards moral perfection or "Christian perfection."⁴⁵¹³

Other passages that could have been known & used by early to later Christians were: "Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world" (Matt. 25:34-40). Christ also talked about the good works that they did, & thus, in having done these good works they would enter on the right hand path into the Kingdom of God, & would inherit the kingdom. (Rev.1:6; 3:21-22; 4:4, 10-11; 5:10).

Paul to the Corinthians: Through the "spirit of the Lord" we will be changed from bodies without glory, into bodies of the same glory as Christ. "Now the Lord is that Spirit; and where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty. But we all, with open face beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord." (2 Corinthians 3:17-18).

Paul to the Philippians: "For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ: Who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself." (Philippians 3:20-21).

Paul to the Colossians: "To whom God would make known what is the riches of glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory: Whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom; that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus:" (Colossians 1:27-28).

"That ye would walk worthy of God, who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory." (1 Thessalonians 2:12). "For by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified." (Hebrews 10:14).

"When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." (Colossians 3:4.) Paul wrote to the Galatians: "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." (Gal.3:27). In some cases in the early Christian mysteries, after they had been anointed and baptized. They put on new & pure garments to symbolize that which was to come in the resurrection when they would be clothed in the same type of immortality as Christ was.

Paul tells us to put on charity "which is the bond of perfection." (Col.3:14). To Timothy, Paul wrote that the scriptures would, among other things, help them towards reaching perfection. "That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good work." (2 Tim.3:15-17).

To the Hebrews, Paul wrote: "Thou madest him a little lower than the angels; thou crowndest him with glory and honour, and didst set him over the works of thy hands: Thou hast put all things in subjection under his feet. For in that he put all in subjection under him, he left nothing that is not put under him. But now we see not yet all things put under him. But we see Jesus, who was made a little lower than the angels for the suffering of death, crowned with glory and honour; that he by the grace of God should taste death for every man. For it became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings. For both he that sanctifieth and they who are sanctified are all of one: for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren." (Hebrews 2:7-11).

Paul seems to have written here of Christ's return to glory. But also of Christ leading his other brothers and sisters back into the family in heaven to partake of divine glory with him. This idea was expounded upon in early to later Christian writings and art works. Christ suffered for the just and the unjust, and those who were once disobedient, but who were willing to repent and live according to God's commandments even though they might have been sent to the spirit prison. For Christ descended down unto them and preached the gospel there and led them up out of captivity. Thus, Christ brought them to God the Father, and presented them to the Father. Having led the way. Upon their ascension up out of the underworld their deification and glorification had begun. As Christ and the host of freed captives exited out of the spirit prison, they trample over the devil or demons that had attempted to keep Christ from entering into the prison house. Paul also mentioned crowns of glory, and makes references to having all things put under his feet. Many early to later Christian art works show Christ standing on the devil as he frees the captive prisoners. Paul also made references to Christ leading or bringing "many sons", many "children" or "vast multitudes of God's people to heaven". Leading them over into "glory" and deification.

The Old Testament Prophet, Isaiah seems to suggest that even though we have done good or evil, we may be washed clean of our sins, if we repent, and then in the ultimate end, we can become gods. Isaiah wrote: "Let them bring them forth, and shew us what shall happen: let them shew the former things, what they be, that we may consider them, and know the latter end of them; or declare us things for to come. Shew the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that ye are gods: yea, do good, or do evil, that we may be dismayed, and behold it together." (Isa. 1:16-20; 41:22-23, Heb. 10:16-22; 1 Cor. 6:9-11).

The deified would have also passed through rites of passage dramas too, thus, in early to later Christianity this included the heavenly coronations, vestments, crowns, enthronement, and the glorification of the saints. The New Testament writers mentions many aspects of this aspect of deification, for Paul, upon writing to Timothy, shows how he looked forward to being crowned in the next life for his efforts & endurance, for he says, I have "Fought a good fight, I have kept the faith: Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." (2 Timothy 4:7-8). The crown of righteousness hints to the ordinances. The early Christians were anointed, clothed in garments & royal robes in their mysteries or ordinances as types of that which was to come in the heavenly kingdoms of God. The crown was the symbol of the reward for faithfulness, for they would be deified & crowned in glory. In John's book of Revelation, Christ promised: "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." (Revelation 3:21).

In early Christian thought, Christ was the greatest example of the deification process because the body in which His Spirit had been clothed in through birth, was eventually deified and glorified when He was later resurrected. For when Christ lived on the earth in the body of His birth to Mary, was He glorified? Did His earthly body at all times give off visible light and a brightness that was brighter than the sun at noon-day? Or did He look like other men? The scriptures tell us that He was born and grew up from childhood to manhood (Matt. 1:25; Luke 1:80; 2:52). There were times when the divine light of His power and glory did shine forth while He was in that earthly body. Such as the time when Christ was transfigured to the point in which "his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light." (Matthew 17:2-9). But we know that His body didn't shine as bright as the sun every moment of His life. If He was already glorified in that body every moment, why did He pray to His Father that He would glorify Him with the same glory that He had had before His birth? "And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." (John 17:5). Christ also prayed that His followers would be glorified too. John 17:18-26. Later, after the crucifixion & Christ's descent into the spirit world, Christ's spirit entered his resurrected body which was eventually glorified upon his ascension into heaven. A number of people became witnesses to the brightness of that glorified resurrected body. Acts 1:9-11, 7:55-56; & 9:3-5. The scriptures show that others, such as those who had lived on the earth as prophets, they too had been glorified after Christ had. John saw in a number visions, bright angels, some were even ones "like unto the Son of man", in great brightness & glory. Later he found out that some of these bright angels were glorified persons who had been prophets at one time, like unto himself. And yet they were & are glorified, & even speak for the Lord, at times, in the first-person. In some cases, John had thought that the glorified person that was speaking to him was the Lord, but the bright messenger corrected John as he began to worship the messenger. He told John that he was only a fellow servant & of his brethren that have the testimony of Jesus. And that he should not worship him, but rather he should worship God instead. Had this servant from among the prophets been glorified and perfected? Had his body been changed and fashioned like unto Christ's glorified body, as the scriptures say would happen? Rev. 1:10-15; 19:6-10; 22:7-9; 2 Cor. 3:4-18; 5:2-4; Phil. 3:20-21; Col. 1:27-28; Heb. 2:9-11; 10:16-22.

Paul wrote to the Philippians: "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name: That at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father. Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling." (Phil. 2:5-12, 1 Peter 1:3-16).

"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him" (1 Cor. 2:9).

GOD BECAME A MAN, SO MEN & WOMEN COULD BECOME GODS OR GODDESSES

This includes also the deification of righteous female saints too, who become goddesses. (I sometimes wonder if our Divine Parents, Male Father God, & Female Mother Goddess, were also involved together to create the first man, & first woman, Adam & Eve, in their images. My reasoning of this is to note that, inasmuch as if the human family consists of Fathers, Mothers, sons, & daughters, here on earth. Why wouldn't the "family in heaven," also consist of there being Divine Parents, Father, Mother, sons, & daughters? (Eph. 3:15; Gen. 2:4-5, Rom. 8:14-21).⁴⁵¹⁴

Especially, when we also note how the Hebrew word, Elohim, can also denote a combined masculine & feminine in the plurality of Gods, thus Genesis 1:1 could mean: "In the beginning, Gods created the heaven and earth"⁴⁵¹⁵ But also, in the creation drama, only man & woman were told that they were in the image of Elohim (thus Gods, female & male), for the fish, animals, & other things were not told that, "...because they do not participate in the divine. Only humans are created in God's image, and so only humans would aspire to the divine."⁴⁵¹⁶

The above basic concept in the heading here, God became a man, so man could become god(s), was repeated throughout historic Christendom, in different formats, & wordings. Although it sounds basically the same, each repeat of it should be interpreted according to the Christology, & understanding that different ones gave them to their own particular understanding about what God is like. In understanding each cases, this will then put into perspective about what was believed the type of god(s) (or goddesses), that the deified would become like, in being deified. Thus, in each case of this basic concept that was repeated, such understandings should be considered as to be according to the times, places & dogmas being expounded on about what God(s) were believed to be like, (physical, spiritual, 3 in 1, 1 in 3, man created in God's image, the image of God not in the shape, form of man's, a spirit essence, without body parts or passions, & so forth). By known each case where one of those examples about what God was believed to be like. It will then put into perspective what was also believed the deified would become like. Thus, though this concept was repeated, it should be understood that they could mean differently. For as the doctrine of what God was said to be like changed, so also did the different versions of deification themes differ. So also with this repeated concept. This I have attempted to include elsewhere in this study. In some cases, this concept also answered early anti-Christian questions about why early Christians taught that God became a man.⁴⁵¹⁷ The answer was basically, so that men & women can learn to become deities too. The deification process was over a long period of time, & was to God's glory that he deified his sons & daughters. Some of the ones who repeat this concept are:

Irenaeus, 120-202, says that we should follow Jesus Christ, who did, through his transcendent love, become what we are that He might bring us to be even what He is. "If the Word became a man, it was so men may become gods."⁴⁵¹⁸

Clement of Alexandria, 153-193-217, made a similar comment. For "...the Word of God became a man so that you might learn from a man how to become a god..."⁴⁵¹⁹

Athanasius, 298-373: "The Word was made flesh in order that we might be enabled to be made gods.... Just as the Lord, putting on the body, became a man, so also we men are both deified through his flesh, and henceforth inherit everlasting life..." Also, "He became man that we might become divine."⁴⁵²⁰

Clive Staples Lewis, (1898-1963), a famous Christian writers, basically, to summarize him, wrote that: Christ became a real man, as man as men are, but also he was God as God the Father is. But He did this, became a real man, so that he can be our example, if we will let him. Plus, if we let him teach, guide, & bring us to perfection. It will not happen in this life, but in the after life, he will then make us purified & perfected gods (for the males), or goddesses, (for the females).⁴⁵²¹

DEIFIEDS' RESURRECTED BODY IS LIKE UNTO CHRIST'S: Paul to the Corinthians: In the resurrection, our bodies "are changed into the same image from glory to glory" (2 Cor. 3:17-18). Paul to the Philippians: "...Christ... shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body..."

(Phil.3:20-21). When Christ appears in glory, we shall be like him, (1 John 3:2-3). We should live a life of godliness, that we might be made partakers of the divine nature, (2 Pet. 1:3-4).

RESURRECTED TO SHINE: 1 Cor.15:35-43. Jesus: The righteous shall shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. (Matthew 13:43). Daniel: They that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament (Daniel 12:3).

SAINTS SEEK TO ADVANCE TOWARDS MORAL PERFECTION: Paul to the Colossians: Put on charity "which is the bond of perfection." (Col.3:14). Paul to Timothy: The scriptures were given that "...the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good work." (2 Tim.3:15-17). Paul to the Hebrews: Christ's atonement made it possible for him to bring "...many sons unto glory..." (Heb.2:7-11). "God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." (Heb.11:40). "That ye would walk worthy of God, who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory." (1 Thess. 2:12). "For by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified." (Heb.10:14). God appeared to Abram, and said, "walk before me, and be thou perfect." (Gen.17:1). Jesus: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in Heaven is perfect." (Matt.5:48). Christ prayed for oneness, agreeing & working as a team, type oneness, so that "they may be made perfect in one." (John 17:22-23). Church leaders are to help towards, "the perfecting of the Saints" (Eph.4:11-14). Be perfect, (Phil.3:12, 15).

HEAVENLY CORONATION CEREMONIES, ENTHRONED GODS: ANOINTING WAS BEING COUNTERFEITED

John warned that anti-Christ's had entered the church and were preaching their own apostate forms of anointing. He tells his readers to stick to the anointing which they had received from the apostles. In the early Christian ordinances, also called mysteries, anointing was a ritualistic type of what would happen to their bodies during the resurrection when Christ's appeared again. Thus, "... it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he [Christ] shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure." 1 John 2:3-11, 18-29; 3:2-3. Those who cite this were: "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Col.3:4.

Isaiah: What's ahead for those who are cleansed of their sins? "...Shew the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that ye are gods..." Isa.1:18; 41:22—23.

9th & 10th c., Europe, as earlier, as early Christian mysteries' deification themes & their ritual counterparts passed down into the coronation ceremonies of the later Churches' anointings, vestings, crownings, & enthronings of Christian Kings & Queens. So also did the deification themes of how Kings & Queens sometimes thought of themselves as gods & goddesses, to a certain extent, & at times enforced their powers as if they were divine beings. This bothered a lot of people, who often didn't like the decrees, & sometimes brutality of different kings & queens during the Middle Ages. But, the fragments of deification themes, nonetheless gave royalty the excuses they needed in order to use their royal powers to get their way, even over, at times, the will of the clergy. For "...it was part of the divine dispensation; the king was no layman; he was king and priest, rex et sacerdos, 'mediator' between clergy and people, in whom God's ruling will was operative; and the pope himself had asserted that according to the ancient custom of the church, the king alone had the right to appoint bishops. Nevertheless, the first seeds of doubt were there before Henry III's death in 1059.⁴⁵²²

DEIFICATION IN BAPTISM: Paul to the Galatians: "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." (Galatians 3:27). Part of the symbolical ritualistic type of deification was to put on robes and garments which, in their mysteries, were types of how they put on the same type of resurrected body as Christ did. Thus, they "put on Christ" or were "clothed in Christ" in the resurrection. After they were raised up out of the baptismal font, they were anointed again and clothed in robes or garments. This was a type of how Christ raised the dead out of the underworld to cloth their spirits in glorified resurrected bodies.⁴⁵²³

Paul to the Colossians: "To whom God would make known what is the riches of glory of this mystery among the Gentiles; which is Christ in you, the hope of glory: Whom we preach, warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom; that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus." Col.1:27-28.

Clement of Alexandria, (153-217), Being baptized we are illuminated, made perfect, made immortal, & made gods. (ANF, 2:215).

CROWNS, A POPULAR SYMBOL OF DEIFICATION: Paul to Timothy: Having endured: "...there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." 2 Tim.4:7-8. Heavenly crowning ceremonies were an important part of early to later versions of deification. A popular scene in historic Christian art works, was to show Mary, with a crown on her head, enthroned.⁴⁵²⁴

ENTHRONED A GOD OR GODDESS: John, Revelation: "To him that overcometh will I [Christ] grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne." Rev.3:21.

Clement of Alexandria, (153-217), wrote of the instruction & preparation, that leads them to the endless & perfect end, how those who become perfect, after their purification, are called gods, being destined to sit on thrones with the other gods that have been put in first in their places by Christ, (ANF, 2:539).

All throughout historic Christianity, the Virgin Mary is seen passing through an after life coronation ceremony in heaven, where she is crowned⁴⁵²⁵ by the Father, or by Christ,⁴⁵²⁶ to then sit with the other members of the Godhead, enthroned as the Queen of heaven.⁴⁵²⁷ In addition to the Virgin Mary, and the Christ Child,⁴⁵²⁸ other saints are depicted crowned and enthroned⁴⁵²⁹ too, even in later centuries, when the doctrine of deification was in the process of becoming fragmented and legendized.

CASES IN WHICH PEOPLE WERE GLORIFIED:

1. Christ's physical body didn't always shine like unto his resurrected one. For one reason why he was rejected was because he looked like a person, who was born and grew up from childhood to manhood (Mat.1:25; Luke 1:80; 2:52).

2. During his mortal sojourn on the earth, there were times in which his mortal body did shine, for example, during the mount of transfiguration when: "his face did shine as the sun, and his raiment was white as the light." (Matthew 17:2-9).

3. When he prayed to his Father, he asked to return to his former state of glory, thus he asked the Father to: "...glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." (John 17:5).

4. Christ also prayed that his followers could return to glory too (John 17:18-26).

5. After his resurrection, Christ appeared to Saul in glory (Acts 1:9-11, 7:55-56; & 9:3-5).

6. John saw one in great glory who was "like unto the Son of man."

7. He was about to worship this bright being, but was told not to because he was of his brethren the prophets & told that he should worship God instead. Had this servant from among the prophets been glorified and perfected? Had his body been changed and fashioned like unto Christ's glorified body, as the scriptures say the righteous saints would be? Rev.19:10; 1:10-15; 19:6-10; 22:7-12.

8. In historic Christian art works, the Virgin Mary is sometimes depicted as glorified, in that rays of glory and light shine forth from her, as she sits enthroned in heaven.⁴⁵³⁰

Paul to the Philippians: Concerning Christ godhood, it was "... not robbery to be equal with God... Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him..." (Phil.2:5-12).

Peter: Christ gave them knowledge "...that pertain[s] unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called unto us to glory and virtue... that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature." They were to advance & progress towards moral perfection by adding to our faith virtue, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, kindness, & charity. For if these things be in us, & abound, they make us neither barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. Giving diligence to make our calling & election sure. 2 Pet.1:2-11.

Paul to the Ephesians: Different leaders in Christ's church were chosen to help the members develop Christ like traits. Thus, they were given: "For the perfecting of the saints,... and the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ:" (Ephesians 4:10-13).

Paul warns against counterfeit forms of deification in pagan mysteries: Paul notes a "mystery of iniquity is already at work" by which people were believed to be deified, and sit in their temples as enthroned gods. He warned his readers to not follow after these mysteries, but to stick with the instructions and true mysteries or ordinances, and "walk worthy of God, who hath called you unto his kingdom and glory." (1 Thes. 2:12). "Whereunto he called you by our gospel, to the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ." (2 Thes.2:14). Thus, they were warned to stick to hold to the traditions which they had been taught, rather than go after false counterfeit mysteries of deification. (2 Thes. chap. 2).

ASCENSION DRAMA AND DEIFICATION: Some of the symbols for deification in early to later Christianity were rites of passage. Artists have depicted in progressive stages the different points in time and moments of the ascension of Christ into heaven, or that of souls, saints & martyrs. If we were to put these different pictures all together as if part of a movie we would see Christ surrounded by his apostles in a prayer circle with up lifted hands towards heaven. Christ rises into the air as the hand of God parts the clouds which acts as a veil. Christ reaches up towards the hand of God, as the Father's hand reaches down towards Christ's hand. Then the hand clasp, or as suggested by other art works, different kinds of ritualistic rites of passage hand clasps. Artists showing Christ about to be raised up into heaven have shown it at different moments, the moment when his hand entered, his arm, his top portion, half of his body, his whole body except for the feet, and his complete entrance except with the veil not closed yet as suggested by rays of light which extend down.

Most often the Father's hand clasps His Son's, while in other cases it could be the hand of an angel, or angels, or even both an angel and the Hand of the Father at the same time. This whole drama can also be seen in progressive moments in the cases where saints, martyrs, and others ascend into heaven. There are different types of hand clasps, and in some cases clasps on the wrists. In the act of being raised up, or lifted up by these different hand clasps and wrist grips, the early to later Christians believed that the person had been raised up to the divine being's (or beings') level(s) to where they entered the heavenly realm where God the Father, Christ, the Holy Spirit, angels & other crowned saints lived in blessed glory. In later Christendom, traces of these different types of hand clasps are seen in the traditional hand clasping rites of passage before some of the Christian kings, in Christ's descent down in & out of hades, limbo, purgatory, the pit, the grave, and the spirit prison. Deification was the ultimate reward and doctrine behind these ritualistic journeys of souls on pilgrimages from the lower realms into the higher realms of existences, as depicted in art works, ritualistic mystery dramas, & plays. In the concepts & symbolical journeys up ladders towards crowns, & the hand of God.

Numerous biblical passages reflect these sorts of rites of passage hand clasps, in which God takes a hold of the person's hand & guides them over into glory. "Nevertheless I am continually with thee: thou hast holden me by my right hand. Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterwards receive me to glory." Psalms 73:23-24.

In some translations of Isaiah: "Thy Lord said to Christ," my Lord, whose right hand I have holden," (Codex Sinaiticus, Latin Text has, "he has taken hold"), that the nations should yield obedience before Him; and I will break in pieces the strength of kings."⁴⁵³¹

Coronation ceremonies of Christian Kings derived many of its elements from the earlier Christian mysteries, and early liturgical and ceremonial dramas. Thus, the ascent to the throne ceremony was a type and imitation of Christ's ascension into heaven. For example, in 12th century mosaics in Norman Sicily, the earthly ruler was an imitation of Christ's right to rule. "As Christ's apotheosis, the Ascension was particularly well suited to the royal mausoleum of an anointed ruler linked to Jerusalem's throne and Christ's kingship. The idea that after his Ascension Christ shared the throne of Heaven on the right of the Father was a beloved feature of benediction formulas for medieval rulers who aspired to a place close to the celestial throne in the hereafter. In this spirit, Roger II used this motto on all his diplomas from at least 1136 onwards: DEXTERA DOMINI FECIT VIRTUTEM, DEXTERA DOMINI EXALTAVIT ME. [The right hand of the Lord made me strong, the right hand of the Lord exalted me.]"⁴⁵³²

DOMES, AS A SYMBOL FOR HEAVEN AND DEIFICATION: In many cases, the shape of many churches included a dome shape area where symbolical art works about the heavenly regions were drawn and painted. As E. Baldwin Smith has shown, the dome was symbolic of the heavenly regions to where the resurrected Christ and his saints had ascended to.⁴⁵³³ Numerous Christian art works,⁴⁵³⁴ some in arch ways, and under them, and in, or under domes,⁴⁵³⁵ but not always in these types of places, they sometimes included different types of hand symbols.⁴⁵³⁶ Plus, hand and wrist grasping⁴⁵³⁷ ascensions into heaven, the assembly of the newly deified saints,⁴⁵³⁸ and of souls making their way towards paradise, or resting, and greeting each other in paradise.⁴⁵³⁹ In old world symbolism, which the early to later Christians blended with their own, the domical shape was a type of "the sacred dwelling of a divinity who once lived on earth among men, and as the ideal abode of the souls in a paradisiac, or heavenly garden."⁴⁵⁴⁰

Martyrs were symbolically represented as having been deified and dwelling in the heavenly realms and paradise, for domical architectural works, and art works sometimes represented a "sepulchral ciborium and the ideal abode of the martyred dead in a celestial paradise."⁴⁵⁴¹ Some of the Greek and Latin inscriptions that go along with these symbolic designs tell of "martyrs who received the prize and triumphed gloriously."⁴⁵⁴²

ROBES, GARMENTS & CROWNS were also symbols of deification and perfection, for a number of art works show different saints, &, or martyrs obtaining crowns, robes & garments of glory for having suffered for the cause of Christ.⁴⁵⁴³

The garments of glory, or garments of light represented, in some writings, the higher celestial angelic-spiritual nature. Garments of glory [in Enoch-Metatron], is attributed to angels, & the righteous spirits ascending into heaven. The difference between men & angels, in such connections is only one of degree of perfection. During ascension depictions, angels often cloth the ascending soul in garments. In some cases, garments were also a symbolical type of that which was to come in the resurrection, when the resurrected would be clothed in a garment of light and glory just as their spirits had been clothed in a glorious perfected resurrected body. Thus, garments of glory were often mentioned in the different stories, & art works depicting the soul's return to glory.⁴⁵⁴⁴

Hippolytus, 170-236, cites Isaiah (1:18), & interprets the washing as being a beforetime of the purifying power of baptism. Deification & white garment themes of a brilliant resurrection, are in he or she that "...comes up from the baptism brilliant as the sun, flashing forth the beams of righteousness, and ... he returns a son [or daughter] of God and joint heir with Christ."⁴⁵⁴⁵ Returning to glory theme.

Hippolytus, Discourse on the Holy Theophany, 8-10: "...I wish to go back to the fountain of life, and to view the fountain that gushes with healing. The Father of immortality sent the immortal Son and Word into the world, who came to man in order to wash him with water and the Spirit; and He, begetting us again to incorruption of soul and body, breathed into us the breath (spirit) of life, and endued us with an incorruptible panoply [or 'complete protection', later 'complete set of arms or suit of armor': from Greek pan 'all' + hopla 'arms']. If, therefore, man has become immortal, he will also be God. And if he is made God by water and the Holy Spirit after the regeneration of the laver he is found to be also joint-heir with Christ after the resurrection from the dead...." Hippolytus later goes on with more baptismal washing & garment deification types, the taking off of evil traits & sins & putting on the good traits: "...if thou cleanse off the filthiness of impurity, and putteth off the burden of sin; if thou castest off the armour of the devil, and putteth on the breastplate [panoply] of faith, even as Isaiah saith, 'Wash you,...' (Isa. 1:18). 'Do you see, beloved, how the prophet spake beforetime of the purifying power of baptism? For he who comes down in faith to the laver of regeneration, and renounces the devil, and joins himself to Christ; [Joined by deification-hand clasping, as in baptismal-resurrection type symbolism of the Anastasis,⁴⁵⁴⁶ who denies the enemy, and makes the confession that Christ is God; who puts off the bondage, and puts on the adoption,—he comes up from the baptism brilliant as the sun, flashing forth the beams of righteousness, and, which is indeed the chief thing, he returns a son of God and join their with Christ."⁴⁵⁴⁷

The types of these early Christian cleansing & washing rituals, is how that the cleansing away of sins through the washing process, is the removal of sin-spots from the white garments,⁴⁵⁴⁸ to make them white as wool. Thus, as in the baptismal-rite, also are many references to white or 'bright' garment themes. Hippolytus thus hints to these, & deification themes, which were in the types, "puts on," (garment type), & coming up 'brilliant,' as the sun, 'flashing' 'beams of righteousness,' (these are more garment types blended with deification themes). As also in those coming up from baptism, the ritualistic type of resurrection, being clothed in a glorious body, that shines brilliantly!

About 3rd-4th c., in the Apocalypse of Paul, authorship questionable, quoted as scripture by Origen, 185-254, about Paul being caught up into the 3rd heaven. Original sin (tainting innocent infants), is countered by this, in that there's a place in heaven that the infants, that were slain by king Herod, are seen greeting Paul. But also deification garment themes are seen in how: "...The saints... discuss with one another and say: Wait and see these unlearned men who understand nothing more, how they merited such a great and beautiful robe and such glory because of their innocence." Those who die in infancy, despite not being baptized, or who have mental limitations, will receive the "promise of God" and "great glory."⁴⁵⁴⁹

Inasmuch as the New Testament abounds in examples of "the crown of life used as an image of the Christian's eternal reward, and symbolic coronation of the saints and martyrs,"⁴⁵⁵⁰ it also became a popular theme in early Christian art. The crown represented how that the saints had been rewarded with deification, having endured sufferings for the cause of Christ, and having won the fight against the forces of darkness, and vices of the world, during the struggles towards moral Christian perfection.⁴⁵⁵¹

For example, on the Troyes cathedral, 12th century, the twelve virtues are crowned for their victory over their adversaries, hence, they "wear their victors' crowns as they trample their adversaries under foot," the same is also true of the 13th century Psychomachia maiden virtues carved at Strasburg north portal.⁴⁵⁵² Having fought the good fight against the devil, his wicked angels, and servants, and upon having progressed toward higher virtues and overcoming vices, "the Christian is promised that after he has suffered a while, he will assuredly be called to eternal glory through Jesus Christ and receive the incorruptible crown, therefore he can cast all his cares on the Redeemer. These crown of life references then, describe the virtues of perseverance and hope."⁴⁵⁵³

Numerous illumination manuscripts' art works show how different monk orders understood, from deification lore that was passed down to them from earlier centuries, that Christian monasticism was the quest for moral perfection. And to illustrate this struggle toward moral Christian perfection and deification, they developed different types of rules and policies for how to conduct themselves, so as to not "fall" into vices. One of the popular illustrations was the climb up the ladder of moral perfection, in which each rung represented moral traits, virtues, or Christ like aspects, and eventual perfection & deification, if they reached the top.⁴⁵⁵⁴

Gerhoh of Reichersberg, (died 1169), opined that, rich or poor, noble or servile, merchant or farmer, or everyone that renounces the devil, without exception: "...Every man has his place and every profession without exception [including women?] has a rule in the Catholic faith and apostolic doctrine suitable to its quality, under which, by fighting well, a man [and women?] can attain the crown."⁴⁵⁵⁵

At the top of the ladder, Christ is waiting to clasp the hands or wrists⁴⁵⁵⁶ of the monks who make it to the top, and thus pull them up into safety, and into heaven, or Paradise. In other cases, the hand of God extends with the crown, such as in the case with the 12th century "Ladder of Virtues," from Hortus Deliciarum, formerly in Strasbourg. In this work, too, demons and protective guardian angels battle it out. For the demons seek to shoot their arrows at the monks in order to get them to fall, down below is a number of vices and distractions which they could fall for, such as lust, the material wealth of the world, etc. However, if the protective angels help the monks reach the top, the crown or the hand or wrist grasp represents that they can enter heaven, having become victorious over the forces of darkness, and thus deified, to join in the assembly of the gods, consisting of all the deified saints that went before, and the Godhead.⁴⁵⁵⁷ For example, during the 15th century, the "Assembly of the Gods distinguishes Perseverance from a profusion of virtues by the eternal crown."⁴⁵⁵⁸

And even though this type of quest for godhood, with all its symbolism of crowns, garments, hand and wrist grasping entrances into heaven, were very popular in earlier centuries, in later centuries, different ones like the 16th century Reformer, John Calvin, 1509—1564, rejected this form of deification. Concerning this, Roland H. Bainton notes how Calvin suggested that: "No moral achievement can ever give any claim upon God, and no ascending of the ladder of the chain of being can ever unite man with God and make him into God. The very notion of the deification of humanity was to Calvin blasphemous."⁴⁵⁵⁹ The ascending up the ladder to form a chain that unites different persons to God, is seen in the art works, and it may be that Calvin may have seen some of these manuscripts, or similar ones. In what might be a 12th century manuscript, the struggle up the ladder to deification and Christian moral perfection, shows numerous souls ascending up a ladder, at the top, Christ greets the two people into heaven by letting them grasp his wrists.⁴⁵⁶⁰

RIGHTEOUS WILL RETURN TO GLORY AND BE DEIFIED

Return to Glory themes, are connected up with pre-existence themes, in that those being glorified, deified, are returning back to the heavenly realm they came from: "The incarnation of spirits as an opportunity for accomplishing their exaltation and glory has no exact parallel in either Greek or Jewish literature, [also there are no exact parallels in Mormonism] but to the extent that incarnation was not viewed as a catastrophe but rather as a positive part of the divine plan it does have Greek and Jewish parallels."⁴⁵⁶¹

In some of the translations of Jewish & Christian apocryphal literature & legendary stories about Adam & Eve. Fragments of the doctrines of the pre-existence & deification are combined together in the return to glory dramas of Adam and Eve. Adam was told that while he was under God's command he had been one of His bright angels. The Spirit of the pre-existing Christ promised Adam that there was a way back to glory for them, and their restoration to their former state of glory would come about because Christ would come into the world and would be born, would atone for the sins of the world, and after his death, he would descend into hell, limbo, hades, etc., to rescue them and the souls of the righteous out of hell. Upon their ascension up out of the grave, hell, the pit, limbo, hades, purgatory, or the spirit prison, as that realm was called in the different areas of early to later Christendom, Christ would take hold of Adam's hand. After which Christ guides them over into paradise where they would be eventually deified. Thus, their ascension was a return to glory, & having been restored to their former state of glory, they would be clothed in a garment of light. There are further references to anointing, garments, & prayer gestures with up-lifted hands, and other rites of passage in these narratives, which suggests that some of God's angels were sent to teach Adam and Eve about the pre-existence and how they would be able to return to glory and become bright and glorious beings again. A garment of light and glory awaited them upon their return to glory where they would also be deified.⁴⁵⁶²

In some cases in later Christian traditions, Adam's return to glory and his deification is under way when Christ comes to free him and the righteous from the grave, limbo, hades, or the underworld. For according some Judaeo-Christians traditions the redemption by Christ was to have particular meaning for Adam, which was the anticipated glorification of his body. We read in The Conflict of Adam & Eve that Melchizedek saw on the body of Adam a great light, & while in the grave under Calvary he could see angels going up & coming down to help the just souls scale the cosmic ladder between the grave & paradise. In other depictions of the anastasis or the resurrection of Adam and Eve, etc., Christ reaches down towards Adam's hand to clasp it in order to raise him up from the grave, the pit, hades, limbo, etc. And as Adam reaches up with his own hand into the glorious mandorla & light that surrounds Christ, Adam's reentry to paradise has already begun & his deification as with also the deification of mankind is already under way in this miracle of re-creation, as the Anastasis came to be known.

Christ had pre-existed before his birth to Mary, thus Christ, who was then a spirit, spoke to Adam after Adam had transgressed. Adam's returned to glory & his deification was predicted by Christ who promised to raise Adam out of the grave and make Adam a god. The Testament Of Adam preserved what might have been Christ's promise to Adam: You wanted to be a god; I will make you a god, but not right now, but rather after a space of many years. For it will be for your sake that I will be born of the Virgin Mary, taste death & enter the house of the dead, and then after three days, I will raise my body up. "And I will set you at the right hand of my divinity, and I will make you a god just like you wanted."⁴⁵⁶⁴

In later centuries, such as during the 12th century, the return to paradise theme seems to have preserved elements of this aspect of deification.⁴⁵⁶⁵

EARLY TO LATER CHRISTIANS ON DEIFICATION

30–100, Apostolic father, Clement of Rome, wrote of their hope that the Christians would be made partakers of God's great & glorious promise. He wrote of how blessed, wonderful, & beloved are the gifts of God! Life in immortality, splendour in righteousness, truth in perfect confidence. Those who endured were heirs of glory and honour for they would be exalted and made illustrious. The Christian was to cleave to the holy so that they themselves would become holy. By love all the elect would be made perfect. Those who are full of love & live a godly life shall procure to themselves great glory in the Lord. ANF 1:14, & 17-19, 1st Epis. of Clement to the Corinthians, chaps. xlv-liv.

65–200–155, another Apostolic father, Polycarp, in his Epistle to the Philipppians, wrote that if the Christians pleased Christ in this present world, they would receive also the future world in which they would be raised from the dead, and would also reign together with Christ. (2 Tim. 2:12; ANF 1:34, chap.v).

In the Encyclical Epistle concerning Polycarp's martyrdom, written to the Church of Smyrna. The martyrs' reward of deification, is mentioned. Other early Christian writers held this belief also. Those who had been martyrs of that time were already on their way towards godhood, as it was now, they were no longer men, but had already become angels. The same sort of thing would happen to those who also became martyrs for the cause of Christ. ANF 1:39.

30–107, Ignatius, in his Epistle to the Magnesians, wrote of the different characters that are found in human natures. Thus the doctrine of "the 2 ways" is hinted to here. The choice is ours, for the unbelieving bears the image of the prince of wickedness. The believing possess the image of their Prince, God the Father, & Jesus Christ. In his letter to the Trallians, Ignatius wrote that Christ invites us to share in His immortality, by His passion & resurrection. To the Philadelphians, he wrote that the Lord seeks that we should be imitators, when Christ said, "Be ye perfect, even as also your Father that is in heaven is perfect." Also, Christ's gospel is the perfection of immortality. To those who are worthy to worked in the ministry for Christ, he wrote that they too would be glorified, receiving glory in Christ. To the Smyrnaeans, he wrote: As persons who are perfect, ye should also aim at those things which are perfect.⁴⁵⁶⁶

100, Barnabas wrote of a time when we ourselves also have been made perfect so as to become heirs of the covenant of the Lord. Also, those who learn of, & do the righteous works that have been written shall be glorified in the kingdom of God; while those who choose to do evil works shall be destroyed with their works. ANF 1:141, chap. VI; p. 149, chap. XXI.

70– 155, PAPIAS, seems to suggest that God would give to the true and faithful, "dominion over the arrangement of the universe". Thus, their "rule and their advancement go on forever and ever."⁴⁵⁶⁷

1st c., Odes of Solomon, the Christian was to love the Son for in so doing they would become a son. They were to also be joined to Him that is immortal, for in so doing this they would themselves become immortal. Christ became like unto man, in order that we humans might receive Him. Thus, Christ was reckoned like unto a human being in order that we might put Him on. Christ extended our knowledge, He widened it & brought to all perfection. It is the Lord's will that He might bring to us salvation, & His thought is that we should have everlasting life and become immortal in the end. The Christian was also to put off darkness and be clothed with light. They were to think of the Lord & His fellowship in incorruption. And of being lifted up in His light to where their own images, faces and brightness would reflect the same sort of light as Christ's face does.⁴⁵⁶⁸

160, Hermas, was the brother of Bishop Pius, at Rome. The Shepherd of Hermas, its context is figurative & symbolic in many cases. Hermas wrote that God would bestow on those who keep the commandments the promised blessings of much joy and glory. If they should do good beyond what is commanded by God, they will gain for themselves more abundant glory, and will be more honored by God than they would have been. The leaders that preside over the church were to direct their ways in righteousness so that at the time of their own deaths they may receive in full the promises with great glory. Thus, they were to stand steadfast, work righteousness, and doubt not, so that their passage may be with the holy angels too. The righteous who had been purified shall also become bright like unto the sun. ANF 2:10-11, see also n.13; p.34, Bk.3, chap.3; Luke 16:22). What little Hermas offers us in deification themes are clouded by symbolical types, & hints.

Upon passing up towards heaven, the good angels of God are often depicted in art works as holding robes or garments in their arms as rewards for the righteous who are then clothed in them while ascending unto God towards the heavenly realms, and on towards deification, and perfection.⁴⁵⁶⁹

130, EPISTLE OF MATHETES TO DIOGNETUS. The anonymous writer of an epistle to Diognetus, has given himself the title "Mathetes" a disciple of the Apostles. This early Christian writer mentions the Christians' return to glory, thus hinting to deification and the pre-existence too. He wrote that the Christians were immortal souls who dwell in mortal bodies, for on earth they were sojourners in corruptible bodies, looking for an incorruptible dwelling in the heavens. God sent His Son Jesus Christ, whom He formed after His own image. To Christ he promised a kingdom in heaven, and He will give it to those who have loved Him. Those who really love Christ should do the same sorts of good works that he did, such as help the needy, show kindness to others, & take upon themselves the burdens of their neighbors. ANF 1:23, 27, & 29, chaps. vi, & x.

140, GOSPEL OF PHILIP: It isn't possible for anyone to see anything of the things that actually exist unless they become like Christ and the Father. You saw Christ, and you became Christ. You saw the Father, and shall eventually become Father. Thus, in this place you see everything and don't see yourself, but in that place you do see yourself and what you see so shall you become. In other portions of this work it says that: A horse begets a horse, a man begets a man, a god brings forth a god. And the faithful would become perfected, & glorified & become joint-heirs with Christ in the Kingdom of His Father. (The Gospel of Philip 60:1-6).

110-165, Justin Martyr, in his first Apology to the Roman Emperor, notes that the Romans believed that their emperors who had died were considered to be worthy of deification. However, Justin knew that the Christians of his time had their own doctrine of deification too. For he wrote that the Christians have learned that those only who are deified are those who have lived near to God in holiness & virtue. The righteous would shine as the sun, while those who have lived wickedly & do not repent would be sent and punished in everlasting fire. He wrote of the joy afforded to those who expect the immortality promised by Christ. If we show by good works that we are worthy of reigning in company with Christ, and were to choose what is pleasing to Him, we would be considered worthy of incorruption & of fellowship with Him. ANF 1:165, chap. x, pp.168, & 170, chaps. xvi, & xxi, & p.177, chap. xlii, 1st Apol., Matt.13:43, Dan.12:2-3, 1 Cor.15:40-2.

Justin Martyr's & others' approach to answering the pagans was somewhat Hellenized, or was influenced by Greek thought & their own particular former pagan backgrounds. So while Justin had attempted to show that the Christians worshiped the same God as their pagan neighbors did. Justin also points out that though there were parallels between the pagans and Christians, the pagans had a faded apostate form and memory of God which Christ had come to restore. He also notes that the different pagan nations, such as the Greeks, had perverted forms of the doctrine of deification which he believed had been inspired by Satan and the fallen apostate angels. Satan had tempted Adam and Eve with one of his own counterfeit forms of deification too.⁴⁵⁷⁰

Justin Martyr in response to the Jew, Trypho, used Psalm 82, & says that Adam fell like one of the princes, here he made reference to Satan's fall from heaven. Further on he wrote "...let the interpretation of the Psalm be held just as you wish, yet thereby it is demonstrated that all men are deemed worthy of becoming "gods," and of having power to become sons of the Highest; and shall be each by himself judged and condemned like Adam and Eve." ANF 1:262, chap. exxiv, Justin's Dialogue With Trypho.

In some cases in early to later Christians art works & writings, Adam & Eve was depicted in hell, limbo, hades, the pit, or the grave, etc. And even though they fell, Christ later descended down to them to free them, & many others up out of the lower regions. Thus, they were raised by Christ through different kinds of hand grips and eventually Christ guides them over into paradise where they were deified as gods.⁴⁵⁷¹

120-123-203, IRENAEUS AGAINST HERETICAL INTERPRETATIONS OF DEIFICATION: Born in Asia Minor. His anti-heretical books were written between 180-200. He was a Greek, who wrote in Greek. He studied Christianity under Polycarp. Having known Polycarp, who had known John, Irenaeus drew upon a rich store of knowledge to present what he thought was orthodox Christianity. Irenaeus says that those who had been "under the earth" or in the spirit prison would also behold their King of glory and light, who Himself had been made the first-begotten of the dead. (Col. 1:18). During Christ descent into the underworld, Christ made it possible, because of the resurrection, for them also to attain to immortality, having invested them too with the paternal light which Christ shined upon them. He brought them forth from under the earth and led them to God the Father. Those who see the light are within the light, and are made partakers of its brilliancy, being made immortal by that sight, and attaining even unto God being sanctified, instructed in the things of God, and disciplined for a reception into that glory which shall afterwards be revealed in those who love God. For the man who loves God shall arrive at such excellency as even to see God, and hear His word, and be glorified to such an extent, that others cannot behold the glory of his countenance. Irenaeus cites Daniel to show how those who had been deified, their faces would shine with great light & glory, (Dan.12:3). Thus, the disciple will be perfected. ANF 1:488-90, & 497.

Also, in many of the early to later Christian art works that depict Christ's descent, we often see Christ destroying the adversary, the devil, or some other underworld monster. Irenaeus wrote a lot about Christ's descent to preach the gospel to the spirits in hades, & the resurrection that followed, which resurrection also brought about deification and perfection. Irenaeus cites Luke 6:40, to scripturally back up his point. (ANF, 1: 560). At times he hints to both these ideas, for he wrote that Christ, upon destroying our adversary and raising the dead, He was also in the act of perfecting man after the image and likeness of God.⁴⁵⁷²

"Irenaeus' Concept of the Ultimate Potential of Man" "Why Man was Not Made Perfect from the Beginning," "...For we cast blame on Him because we have not been made gods from the beginning, but at first merely men, then at length gods.... He (God) declares: "I have said, Ye are gods, and ye are all sons of the Highest." (ANF, 1:522).⁴⁵⁷³ Citing from Irenaeus: "...the Word of God, our Lord Jesus Christ, who did, through his transcendent love, become what we are, that He might bring us to be even what He is Himself."⁴⁵⁷⁴

Irenaeus also wrote that they did not cast the blame on God for not making them gods in the beginning. For though they had been made at first merely men, they would at length be made gods. He cites Psalms 82:6 as saying the God declares: "I have said, Ye are gods, & ye are all sons of the Highest." Through Christ they can pass into the glory of the Father. Irenaeus also wrote against the heretical versions of the doctrine of perfection & deification. Their interpretations were consider by him to have apostate elements to them. He also wrote that while we are on the earth we have not, as yet, sat down upon His throne. Here he may have had Rev. 3:21 in mind. He also noted that many of the rival "Christian" sects of his time believed in the heresies that the resurrection was spiritual, in that the body would not be raised to immortality. Though the rival sects had extreme perverted forms of the doctrine of deification, or their own particular versions, and interpretations, Irenaeus must have felt that he had the most correct interpretation of the doctrine. He wrote that the apostles & their disciples had taught as the Church preaches that the martyrs were called away to that which is perfect. They are perfected who know one and the same God, who from beginning to end was present with mankind in various dispensations. He expounded on one of the reasons why Jesus Christ had become a man. He makes reference to the symbolical title that John gave Christ, calling Christ "the WORD," who became flesh and lived as a man on the earth. (John 1:1-14). The idea that God the Son had become a man, by taking upon Himself a body, was, to some heretics, something that was unthinkable. It seems that the anti-body platonic greek influences had hellenized some of these rival Christians' thinking. Thus, some of the heresies that Irenaeus wrote against were those which claimed that Christ had not taken upon Himself a body. When according to the scriptures, & the predictions of the prophets, Christ had in fact taken upon Himself a body, & had become a man! Why had He done this? Irenaeus explained why, with the help of Psalms 82:6-7. The heretics are those who defraud the human nature of promotion into God, and thus prove themselves ungrateful to the Word of God, who became flesh for them. For it was for this reason and ultimate end that Christ was made man, so that we could attain to incorruptibility and immortality. Being joined to incorruptibility and immortality. And even though Christ at birth had not at first been joined to incorruptibility and immortality and had become that which we also are through birth. He made it possible that the corruptible might be swallowed up by incorruptibility, and the mortal by immortality.⁴⁵⁷⁵

Why had God caused that the human family should pass through different realms of existences, such as mortality? It was to show us how mortal and weak we are, & help us understand how God is immortal and is so powerful that He can confer immortality upon what is mortal, and eternity upon what is temporal. And even though the human family had once been disobedient to God, and had been cast off from immortality, through the Son of God, the human family can obtain mercy. Upon continuing in His love, etc., we shall also receive from Him the greater glory of promotion, looking forward to the time when we shall become like unto Christ. In the process of time, the human families' development would be bestowed with an incorruptible inheritance for the purpose of bringing humans to perfection in advancement and increase towards God. Love makes a person perfect in that he or she who loves God is perfect, in both this world and the next. Christ's laws and teachings were centered on moral conduct in good works, & the keeping of the commandments, which were to help bring the human family closer to perfection & eternal life. For it is to those who follow Christ's example and serve God, that God grants life, incorruption and eternal glory. All the nations' sons & daughters, & those in lands afar off, even they will not be held back from being partakers of glory if they will follow Christ's example too. Our struggles & challenges here on earth will ultimately be for our good, for in the end we will be rewarded with crowns of glory. God brings man to perfection for his edification, and the righteous are perfected. It was possible for God to have made man perfect from the first, but man couldn't receive this perfection, being as yet an infant. And even Christ had not come to earth in great immortal glory for all to see, but rather as we were capable of beholding Him. It is true, He could have easily come to us in His immortal glory, but if that had been the case we would not have been able to have endured the greatness of his glory. Therefore it was that He, as the perfect bread of the Father, offered Himself to us as milk, in a basic manner which we would be able to understand and swallow and thus be nourished by the bread of immortality, because we were as infants.

Irenaeus goes on to write about the different stages in which human beings progress towards becoming perfect. We are created by the uncreated one, then receive growth, then strengthened, then abound, then recover from the disease of sin, then glorified, then we see our Lord as immortal beings having been rendered near unto God. For even though we were first made mortals and not gods from the beginning, in this we don't blame God, for at length we will eventually be made gods. He declares, "I have said, Ye are gods; and ye are all sons of the Highest." (Psalms 82:6-7). But since we could not sustain the power of divinity, He adds, "But ye shall die like men." He shall graciously confer good upon us, and make us like unto Himself. For what was mortal should be conquered and swallowed up by immortality, and the corruptible by incorruptibility, and thus we should be made after this into the image and likeness of God.⁴⁵⁷⁶ For though we were made imperfect, & mortal and hold the rank of a man, should afterwards partake of the glory of God. For we did not make God, but God made us and in due time we shall ascend to that which is perfect. For God will fashion us and He will adorn us to such a degree, that even 'the King Himself shall have pleasure in thy beauty.' (Psalms 134:11). If we shall show faith towards him and subjection, we shall receive His handiwork, and shalt be a perfect work of God.

There are 2 ways or 2 extremes which ends with either deification, where the just will shine forth like the sun in the kingdom of their father. While on the other path ends at the fire. We freely choose which end we will arrive at. Thus, we can either choose deification, glorification, godhood, and a life in God's presence as a god. Or, if we refuse to repent and continue to rebel against God, we will retrogress away from any light we might have once known until we become like unto the fallen angels & the devil. (Consider where we are to walk & how, & what will happen to us if we do: Matt. 7:13-14, Philip. 3:2-21, Col. 1:19-29, 2:6-15, 3:7-15, Rom. 6:1-23, 1 John 2:4, 8-11, 3:2-3, deification).

Irenaeus continued: God would be glorified in us as we are modelled after and in His Son Jesus Christ. The human body and soul is like the handiwork of God which is eventually perfected and made in the image and likeness of God. Through divine help, we advance towards perfection. Moral perfection helps sustain the other phases in perfection. The body is glorified and perfected, along with the soul, & the spirit. All are perfected together as mankind is faithful & righteous. Thus, as mankind advances towards moral perfection, and does not defile the temple which is the body. So that that temple, being undefiled, has the Spirit of God dwelling with in him or her. Then both moral, spiritual, & physical perfection all become part of becoming perfect in being also raised up by Christ in the resurrection. For when Christ raises us up from death, it will render us like unto the Father and accomplish the will of the Father; for it shall make man after the image and likeness of God the Father. Later, Irenaeus cites from Philippians 3:29, to further scripturally demonstrate the doctrine of deification. Through His power, Jesus shall transfigure our bodies that it may be conformable to the body of His glory. Thus, the flesh will be transformed from being mortal and corruptible to being immortal and incorruptible. This will come about through the mighty workings of the Lord who is able to invest the mortal with immortality, and the corruptible with incorruption. The scriptures speak of the flesh being deified and perfected and raised up by God to immortality too.

Irenaeus also used 2 Corinthians 4:10, & 3:3, to help him to scripturally show that the perfected body had, in a symbolical sort of way, put on Christ. For Christ is the example of what could also happen to our bodies in the resurrection, if we follow Christ's teachings and example. All along Irenaeus responded to a number of passages of scripture which he felt the heretics had abused. In the resurrection, contrary to heretical beliefs, the resurrected just, who shall be worthy are accustomed gradually to partake of the divine nature. (2 Peter 1:2-11). Those who are thus worthy to reign, shall behold God in his creation. Martyrs would be deified and perfected and would even reign having become joint-heirs in God's creation.

The ultimate end of the journey for mankind, if we show ourselves to be worthy, is to be perfected, & resurrected to a glorious body in the likeness of God in order so that we may also see God the Father, & Christ, & even live the type of life they live, with them in the Kingdom of God, having been brought to perfection. ANF 1:154, 531-41, 544, 561, 566-7, 1 Cor.6:20; Rom.8:16-19.

Irenaeus: "Man receives advancement and increase towards God. For as God is always the same, so also man, when found in God." Further on: "... but following the only true and steadfast teacher, the Word of God, our Lord Jesus Christ, who did, through his transcendent love, become what we are, that He might bring us to be even what He is Himself."⁴⁵⁷⁷

Dr. Hugu Nibley points out that the doctrine of deification, or "eternal progression" was one in many doctrines which later Christian churches rejected. Nibley notes that when Irenaeus was challenged to explain how man being created can partake of the uncreated glory of God, Irenaeus had to fall back on earlier teachings even though they contradicted many of his own ideas. This led Irenaeus to the paradoxical conclusion that though man was not uncreated, yet in time he could become uncreated through an endless progression that would make him of the same eternal nature as God himself!⁴⁵⁷⁸

110-172, Tatian wrote to the Greeks. The "heavenly Logos, a spirit emanating from the Father and a Logos from the Logos-power, in imitation of the Father who begat Him made man an image of immortality, so that, as incorruption is with God, in like manner, man, sharing in part of God, might have the immortal principle also." He also wrote that even though the soul alone is endowed with immortality, the flesh is endowed with it too in the resurrection. ANF 2:67 & 76.

115-168-181, THEOPHILUS OF ANTIOCH RESPONSE TO AN EARLY ANTI-CHRISTIAN, Autolycus, that God will raise the body up immortal with the spirit; and then, having become immortal, they shall see the Immortal. If He would now believe on Him; and then He would come to know that he had spoken unjustly against God. Theophilus points out how that Autolycus believed that the images of their idols though made by men were said to be gods. Why don't you believe that the God who made you is able also to make you a god here after in the resurrection too. Further on he wrote that those who patiently continue in well-doing Rom.2:7 & seek immortality. And God will give them life everlasting, joy, peace, rest, & abundance of good things, which they had not yet seen, heard, or thought could be possible, so great would be their rewards. How Adam was deified. For God had transferred Adam from the earth into Paradise, giving Adam means of advancement, so that upon maturing and becoming perfect, & being even declared a god, Adam might thus ascend into heaven in possession of immortality. Theophilus wrote that if the human family were to incline to the things of immortality, keeping the commandment of God, we should receive as a reward from God, immortality, & should become God. He then goes on to warn his critic what would happen to those who were disobedient to God. ANF 2:91-3, 104-5; 1Cor.2:9, Isa.64:4.

In later Christian symbolism, art works & writings, Adam is one of the first to be deified a god, along with others that follow, in resurrection symbolism. The hand & wrist grasping in icons of the Anastasis (resurrection), are deification symbols. For at the moment of the hand or wrist grips between Adam & Christ, during the descent into hades, is the moment when the deification of Adam is underway. In the Testament of Adam, the Messiah promises Adam: "... You wanted to become a god; I will make you a god, but not right now, but after the space of many years.... And I will set you at the right hand of my divinity, and will make you a god just like you wanted."⁴⁵⁷⁹

153-193-217, CLEMENT OF ALEXANDRIA ON DEIFICATION AND PERFECTION: Titus Flavius Clemens (or Clement), was head of the Catechetical School at Alexandria. He was a pagan philosopher, who was converted to Christianity. Origen was one of his pupils.

Clement explained how the mysteries symbolized a journey through illumination, purification, resurrection, ascension into heaven, perfection and deification to godhood. The Christ [or 'Word'] of God became man, so that we may learn from man how man may become God. (Women would be deified too.) Deification was for the obedient, not the disobedient, for by obeying they would progress to become like God: "And now the Word Himself clearly speaks to thee, shaming thy unbelief. Yea, I say, the Word of God became a man so that you might learn from a man how to become a god...."⁴⁵⁸⁰ The ultimate salvation is deification, or becoming a god. For it is in their power to become a citizen of heaven, & to cultivate Paradise, where they could walk about in heaven & partake of the tree of life & immortality! The saints of the Lord shall inherit the glory of God and His power. Which glory eye had not seen, nor ear heard, nor had it entered into the mind as to how great it would be (1 Corinthians 2:9). God is not unrighteous, as the demons are, but rather He is very righteous in the very highest degree and nothing more resembles God than one of us when we become righteous in the highest degree too. Further on Clement brings together the symbolical types in the mysteries, such as regeneration (or baptism). The ultimate reality which the rituals were to prepare the Christians for was deification, for the rituals in the mysteries were a type of that which was to come in the resurrection. Baptism was a symbolical type of the resurrection. For in their regeneration, they would attain to that perfection after which they aspired. Christ had been baptized to set an example for us, even though, being perfect, he was not in need of baptism, but was baptized to fulfil the profession that pertained to humanity. In our case, in following Christ's example by being baptized, we are illuminated; illuminated, we become sons; being made sons, we are made perfect; being made perfect, we are made immortal. Citing from Psalms he says: 'I have said that ye are gods, and all sons of the Highest.' (Ps.82:6). Through this work & grace we are illuminated, perfected, and washed of their sins. We are to take off the sinful old man as like unto wicked garments and be clothed in new and pure ones, as if we had put on the immortality of Christ. Thus Baptism or regeneration, and the new garments, etc., these were considered to be steps towards perfection and deification. Clement also suggests that, in the resurrection, when they would arrive at the end of the journey they would be made perfect. In eternal life, we would see the eternal light. ANF 2:174, Exhortation to the Heathen; p. 198-9, 215-7; John 1:1-14).

In many of the early Christian mysteries, when coming up out of the font, they were clothed in a robe or garment. Which garment was symbolic of a number types of Christ. One of which was a type of that which was to come in the resurrection, in that their spirits would be clothed in an immortal glorified body, fashioned like unto Christ's glorious resurrected body. Thus, Clement may have hinted to the true garment as compared to counterfeit garments. Clement may have known of such garments among the pagans mysteries, having been one himself before he was converted to Christianity. And so he may have hinted to the garments in counterfeit mysteries, and then speaks of the true garments by hinting to the symbolical types & symbolism behind such garments. Or perhaps, in the early Christian mysteries their old garments were set aside, symbolic that the initiates had set aside a life of sin, or the "old man," to put on the new. For in putting off their street cloths as filthy rags, to be later clothed in new garments. This may also have been considered as being a type of how the spirit would set aside the body in death, to be clothed in a glorious body in the resurrection. Clement also suggested that when mankind resists the lusts of the flesh, this commits man to eternity, along with those who are divine, immortalizing him. He cites from Phil.3:15 to show from scriptures how they are to become perfected.⁴⁵⁸¹

Clement, like many other early Christian writers, presents many deification themes for both females and males, in becoming perfected, progressing towards becoming more divine & like Deity. For although many early Christian writers speak of man becoming god(s), this didn't exclude the repentant & righteous female saints of also becoming goddesses, as is sometimes also illustrated in art works. Many show female saints also passing through heavenly coronation ceremonies, being raised into heaven, by hand & wrist grasping, clothed upon in royal type heavenly robes, crowned, enthroned, glorified & deified. A case in point is what happens to Mary, the Mother of the Son of God.⁴⁵⁸² Thus, to summarize some of Clement's deification themes: If one knows himself, he will know God, and knowing God will become like God. His is true beauty, for it is God, and that man becomes a god, since God wills it. Clement admits that one Heraclitus, a Greek Philosopher, about 500 B.C., was right when he said: "Men are gods, and gods are men." (ANF, 2:271). To sum up more of Clement's on going comments, he further on, wrote of the future life, of progressing towards perfection, divinity & becoming deities ourselves. This is after being freed from all punishment & penalties, as a result of our sins. Thus, those who have become perfect, become pure in heart, are called by the appellation of gods, for they are enthroned with other gods, that have first been put in their places by the Savior.⁴⁵⁸³

Clement goes on to also mention the veil, then later wrote about God's holy mountain, which is a symbol of the God's holy temple. The Master fills us with righteousness & feed us on that holy mountain the Church, which is above the clouds touching heaven. The Shepherd is a type of Christ, and thus their Shepherd, (Ezk.34:14-16), will be near them, as the garment to their skin. In some cases, such as this, the garment is a type of Christ's glorified resurrected body. Christ wishes to save the body by enveloping it in the robe of immortality, and has anointed our body. The Lord would be near to help them pass over into immortality. And if they pass over, they shall not slip, says the Lord. For we who are passing over to immortality shall not fall into corruption, for He shall sustain us. (ANF 2:231 & 263).

A number of art works in early to later Christianity depict the righteous' ascension towards perfection where the hand of Christ, or the hand of the Father, or in some cases angelic guides clasp the righteous' hand, or hands. Thus, they had made it, they had not fallen for the different dangers that the demons had tempted them with.

Clement also wrote that God had formed man of the dust, regenerated him by water, made him grow by his Spirit, trained him by His word, and directed him by sacred precepts to bring about his transformation from the earth-born man into a holy and heavenly being. And fulfil that divine utterance, "Let Us make man in Our own image and likeness." (Genesis 1:26). Christ became the perfect realization of what God spake and thus humanity is conceived as being created in His image. Clement encouraged his readers to fulfil the Father's will, and listen to Christ the Word, and take on the impress of the truly saving life of Christ, meditating on that heavenly mode of life according to which they would be deified. In their mysteries having been clothed with immortality, the flesh itself being pure, we pursue after that which is according to the measure of the angels. He cites Dan.7:9 & Rev.6:9, 11, to scripturally supports the Christian mysteries, and their use of garments & robes. They were a type of that which was expected to happen in the after life. For those that wait at the heavenly court around the King of all, are sanctified in the immortal vesture of the Spirit, that is, the flesh, & so put on incorruptibility. Christ's resurrected body shines with great glory. The garment is likened unto this, for they were clothed with confession and comeliness, putting on light as a garment. ANF 2: 234, 265-6; Psalms 104:2.

Those who seek not after the riches of this world but rather seek well-doing will eventually be made like God. Their example and the form is Christ for so it was that He was made like to God. Man becomes God, since God so wills it. Clement cites from Heraclitus, who said, "Men are gods, and gods are men." Clement then suggested that Christ Himself is the manifest mystery: God in man, and man God. God endows man with incorruptibility, & arrays the flesh in immortality. Clement defended the old law as being given by Christ to discipline and train them, in order to the attainment of the perfection which is by Christ. He cites Hermas who said that love perfects. He cites Luke 6:40 to scripturally support the doctrine of perfection & deification. We are not as the Lord, since we wish, but cannot be: "for no disciple is above his master:" (Matt.10:24-5, Luke 6:40). However, the way we are as Him is only in our having been made immortal, etc. Martyrs who had died for the cause of Christ had been deified & perfected as their reward from God. God stood in the congregation of the gods; He judgeth in the midst of the gods. (Psalms 82:1). Who are they? Those that are superior to pleasure, passions, who are greater than the world. "I said, Ye are Gods; and all sons of the Highest." To whom speaks the Lord? To those who reject as far as possible all that is evil of the human family. For the highest perfection is in accordance with virtue, justice, holiness, & wisdom, etc. Becoming to the best of his power, becoming such as He is. Becoming to God's glory fellow-heirs with Christ. Martyrdom was to be called perfection because the person had thereby exhibited the perfect work of love. As Christians, they were not to seek opportunities to become martyrs, like some over zealous heretics who had taken it to an extreme, for true Christians should do all they could to assure their own personal safety. But if martyrdom should come, they were not to worry for they would be part of the golden race with the gods who are in heaven in the state of immortality. Those who reach the right hand path and stick to it make advances towards immortality. ANF 2:271, 354--5, & 360, 369, 374, 376, 411-14, & 416; & Col.3:14.

Citing from Romans 8:7-8, 10, 13, 17, 28-30, Clement points out scripturally that those who suffer for the cause of Christ are later glorified & are made joint-heirs with Christ in the afterlife. Hebrews 11:36-40, became another scriptures that he used to help him expound on the doctrine of perfection & deification. "God having provided some better thing for us (for He was good), that they should not without us be made perfect." Outsiders may view martyrs as being punished, while those who were suffering, their hope was full of immortality. Martyrdom was a glorious purification process like a refiner's fire. And in the time of their visitation they will shine forth like unto sparks of fire. For they shall judge the nations, rule over the people, and the Lord shall reign over them forever. Those who resist evil & do good works are perfected. Through love, all the chosen of God were perfected. Both men and women equally share in perfection. Those who excel in every virtue, etc., and who abstain from what is bad are eventually perfected, even though they are not perfect in all things at once, while still human. The law of Moses was a step towards receiving the higher covenants of Christ delivered to the apostles, and which would thus lead us to perfection. Those who strive after perfection will do good works, and will live righteously. Clement also cites Paul's words to the Ephesians, concerning the perfecting of the saints, etc. The Christians were to strive to be as perfect as they could while yet in their bodies of flesh. For the Lord says, 'Be ye perfect, as your Father is perfect.' ANF 2:417, 428-29, 433-4, 437, Eph.4:16-18; Mat.5:48, Wisdom 3:2-4, 3:5-8.

Clement cites what is now Psalms 82:6 again while expounding further on deification. He gave additional sources by citing from ancient Greek writers in order to show that the knowledge of deification was known, to a certain extent, among the ancient Greeks. And thus, if the Greeks rejected the idea of deification in Christian thought, they would have to also reject a similar idea as found among their earlier writers.

The glory & light that shined forth from the face of Moses, Ex. 34:29, was an example of one who had the stamp of the righteous soul. In the 2 ways souls are glorified, or condemned. Righteous faces' will shine forth with glorious light. They were to be assimilations to God, being made perfect "as the Father who is in heaven." Mat. 5:48.

Those who have learned to control their passions will eventually become equal to the angels. They shall become luminous and shall shine forth with great glory like the sun. Through purity in thoughts, words and deeds and upon thus remaining pure and receiving the Lord's power, the soul studies to be God. The perfect inheritance which belongs to those who attain to "a perfect man," according to the image of the Lord, is not, as some imagine, that of the form of a man who has remained in iniquity but rather it is for those who have become perfect as the Master is perfect. In short, Clement continued to expound on deification and perfection all throughout his writings.⁴⁵⁸⁴

The ranking of the gods is mentioned by several early Church Fathers, suggesting that no one is deified into ranks that aren't above The Holy Ghost, Christ and the Father, but are rank below them. Hence, Clement wrote how to Christ are subjected "the whole army of angels and of gods". Plus, he mentions those who "are being perfected through faith." And then a little further on wrote of the "supreme Administrator of the universe, as he pilots all in safety according to the Father's will, rank being subordinated to rank under different leaders, till in the end the great High Priest is reached. For on one original principle, which works in accordance with the Father's will, depend the first and second and third gradations, and then at the extreme end of the visible world there is the blessed ordinance of angels, and so, even down to ourselves, ranks below ranks are appointed, all saving and being saved by the initiation and through the instrumentality of One." A little further, Clement mentions the many mansions as being a type of the different ranks among the saved beings, for "through the attraction of the Holy Spirit the various are adapted to the highest mansion, [John 14:2] and the others in their order even to the last mansion: but they that are wicked from weakness, have fallen into an evil habit owing to unrighteous greed, neither keep hold themselves nor are held by another, but collapse and fall to the ground, being entangled in their passions."⁴⁵⁸⁵ This gradation, the assembly of the gods rank below the Godhead, and the humans strive towards perfection, hand and wrist grasping to help support those who are about to fall, and of those who fall to the ground, all these are illustrated in many art works throughout Christendom.⁴⁵⁸⁶

Clement of Alex.: "There are various abodes, according to the worth of those who have believed,... which are three, [and] indicated by the numbers in the Gospel— the thirty, the sixty, the hundred. And the perfect inheritance belongs to those who attain to the 'perfect man,' according to the image of the Lord." (Eph. 4:12-13).⁴⁵⁸⁷

Clement made it clear, that deification and eternal life were the rewards of good works, and living a righteous life, calling this reward "eternal life and a blessed reward" for "that soul that at any time improved as regards the knowledge of virtue and increase in righteousness, should obtain an improved position in the universe, pressing onwards at every step to a passionless state, until it comes to a perfect man, a pre-eminence at once of knowledge and of inheritance."⁴⁵⁸⁸

"Clement of Alexandria... by knowing God he shall be made like unto him... man with whom the Logos [Christ] dwells... is made like God... That man becomes God, for God so wills it"; and "the Logos of God became man that from man you might learn how man may become God."⁴⁵⁸⁹

Clement notes a "scripture" that we don't have in our present day Bibles: "The saints of the Lord shall inherit the glory of God and His power."⁴⁵⁹⁰

145–220, TERTULLIAN: We shall be even gods, if we shall deserve to be among those of whom He declared, "I have said, Ye are gods," (Ps. 82:6) and, "God standeth in the congregation of the gods." (Ps. 82:1) But this comes about of His grace for it is not from any property in us that we become gods but rather because it is He alone who can make gods. In response to those who did not believe that Christ was the Son of God. He asked them to recall to their minds the passage where it is written, "I have said, Ye are gods, and ye are children of the Most High;" and again, "God standeth in the congregation of gods;" in order that, if the Scripture has not been afraid to designate as gods human beings, who have become sons of God by faith, you may be sure that the same Scripture has with greater propriety conferred the name of the Lord on the true and one-only Son of God." ANF 3:480 & 608, Tertullian, Against Hermogenes chap. 5; Against Praxeas 13. Tertullian wrote: "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life."⁴⁵⁹¹

185–230–254, ORIGEN'S DEFENSE OF DEIFICATION: In Origen work "De Principiis" (written about AD 230), he wrote that many philosophers defined the highest good as becoming like unto God as far as possible. They were not the first to discover this for they had derived it from Scripture. Moses taught it even before all other philosophers. The expression, "In the image of God created He him," means that man received the dignity of God's image at his first creation. The perfection of his likeness has been reserved for the consummation, which he might acquire for himself through his own diligence in the imitation of God. Perfection unto the divine likeness can be reached in the end by the fulfillment of the necessary works. Citing John, Origen points out that the deified shall appear to be like unto the Savior (1 John 3:2). John wrote of the hope of that which was still to come, how that they would appear in the same likeness to God. Christ also spoke of this too, & it would be brought about by His own intercession.⁴⁵⁹²

In the early centuries of Christianity, the doctrine of deification was not only believed & known among the early Christians, but many of the pagan nations had different apostate forms of the doctrine of deification. For in some cases they had believed that their emperors had been deified, such as in the case with the Roman emperors. While to the Egyptians their Pharaohs were considered "as deities."⁴⁵⁹³ It was because of these versions of deification were around in early Christian communities, that Celsus charges that early Christians' version of deification was an old worn out myth.⁴⁵⁹⁴ Celsus also mocks how the early Christians had taught children to leave their fathers, teachers, and follow the women, and their chums to the wooldresser's shop, etc., so that they "might learn how to be perfect."⁴⁵⁹⁵ Thus, Celsus rejected the Christian's versions of the doctrine of deification & perfection. He viewed the Christians as having exalted "the man" Jesus to divine rank above all the other nations' gods. He noted that the concepts of deification could be traced back into pre-Christian times, for it was known to the Greeks, Romans, Egyptians, & it was part of other nations' traditions, and pagan mythologies. For example, the Persians' conception of a "deified and universal monarch, enthroned beneath a domical cosmic tent," was what had "inspired Nero to present himself to the empire as the incarnation of the sun god and to build his Domus aurea in the form of a "sun palace."⁴⁵⁹⁶ Consequently, Celsus charged that the Christians believed in an old outworn myth. And yet, Celsus didn't seem to object to the idea in principle, but rather he seems to have objected to the Christians' versions of it.⁴⁵⁹⁷

Origen wrote many things in response to Celsus' charges & in defense of Christian perfection & deification. He wrote that we should flee with all power from being men and make haste to become gods. In Jesus Christ there began the union of the divine with the human nature, so that the human, by communion with the divine, might rise to be divine. In the resurrection, some will rise with divine, glorified and deified bodies to gain power, glory, thrones, dominions and perfection. Humans may eventually become like unto God's holy angels, for they are superior to men; so that men, when made perfect, become like them. In the arrangement of the universe there are different beings termed thrones, others dominions, others powers, and others principalities. Though the human family is now far inferior to these, we may entertain the hope that by living a virtuous life, etc., we may rise to a likeness with all these. Their deified bodies would reflect everlasting light and knowledge. But even though the brightness and glory of these newly resurrected persons would be like unto the glory and light of the Father of light. Such deified beings should not be worshiped as being in higher rank than that of God the Father, Jesus Christ, or the Holy Ghost. For the Father should be worshiped, next the Son, & next the Holy Ghost.

In the resurrection, their mortal bodies will eventually be clothed in immortality. The 2 ways or "two extremes" were path ways which would bring different members of the human family to two different opposite ends. One of which was that the righteous would be eventually deified, in that they would become like Christ & other divine beings. While on the other extreme those who choose to rebel against Christ, and God, would eventually become more and more like unto the fallen angels & the devil.

All those who have done their duties, and works will ascend to the assembly of righteous & blessed beings where they will enjoy the contemplation of celestial things. The "inner person" will be perfected like unto the "image of God" when they become perfect even as our Father in Heaven is perfect.⁴⁵⁹⁸

However, in Origen's views, which were a results of platonic hellenizational influences of the schools of his time, & some that he attended. He consequently tried to soften the impact that these earlier Christians' physical resurrection deification themes, must have had on anti-body Greek influenced readers, and the later Christians of his time, many of which, like him, were unfortunately tainted by Greek philosophy. Plus, the on going Christological controversy still going on, & that challenged the physical aspects of early to then Christians' Deity, & if there was or was not going to be a physical resurrection-deification.⁴⁵⁹⁹ Thus he points out how that in the eternities, "bodies will be dispensed with". And that we are to think of the "Trinity alone as existing incorporeally."⁴⁶⁰⁰ And so it seems that while Origen was defending the bodily birth of Christ, and the resurrection of the body against the attacks of Celsus, he was defending the earlier Christian beliefs, not so much the later ones of his time. He was going back to defending the beliefs that Celsus had attacked in writing against early Christians, about 170-80 A.D. For Origen seems to also not be defending as much the later Christological controversy's later ripple effects & consequences, that had influenced & tainted later views about what Christ & the Father were believed to be like. Which influenced also what the deified were believed would be like in becoming gods or goddesses. Add to this also how Origen's schooling in Greek philosophy's anti-body views of his time, about 185-254 A.D., also must have played a factor in his defense of earlier Christian physical resurrection-deification themes. This is another case in point, as noted earlier, where different controversies crashed into each other, & affected each other, like huge waves on the gospel-doctrine sea, during the storm of the Great Apostasy. The challenges created by these different controversies became apparent in how later Christians dealt with earlier beliefs. For earlier, there was the physical resurrection-deification themes, that put the deified into a physical body, when later, God the Father, for example, was suppose to be incorporeal? While Christ was corporeal, clothed in a physical body of a man. So logically, if these new gods & goddesses had glorified physical perfected bodies, the question must have been asked later, as to: How were they to be likened unto a "god" of the philosophies that didn't 'confine' god to a body, or parts & passions, but to some bodiless entity, a indescribable, & incomprehensible being? But then there was the physical Christ, what about him?

Origen must have struggled with all the physical descriptions about God, that Celsus had attacked, & that earlier Christians had defended. Especially, with all the physical types: The sacrament, baptism, garments, ascensions with their physical hand & wrist grasping deification resurrection symbolism, & testimonial witnesses to a physical resurrection given by New Testament witnesses. Despite these, it was the anti-matter Greek philosophical views that over powered the earlier, & these, of course affected the physical deification defenses that Origen & others, also had to deal with during their times later. As it was, with resurrection-physical-deification themes, Celsus had vilified the physical resurrection, earlier, with sensational imagery, making it sound like old rotten dead corpses would rise again, (playing on the anti-matter views to make the impact of his vilification even stronger).⁴⁶⁰¹ This is how it's made to sound if you don't pay attention to how Celsus had to admit that early Christians talk of a change that comes upon corpses, when physically resurrected. So Origen notes this & counters how that: "Our hope, then, is not "the hope of worms," nor does our soul long for a body that has seen corruption." In other words, they didn't hope to go back into a body that was rotten, & decayed after years of being in the earth. For that body would be changed in the resurrection to a body that would be perfected, glorified & deified. Origen notes how Celsus had used the half truth tactic to vilify the physical resurrection in order to create a negative picture in the minds of his readers. For although he hints to the change in the word "return," that will come upon the resurrected body. He questions how that any old rotten corpses could ever be changed, or, "...could return to its original nature or become the same as it was before it rotted away?" However, here he also left out the fact that early Christians had taught that those bodies wouldn't be exactly the same mortal bodies, as it had been while in mortal life, ones that grew old & could suffer diseases, or have defects, & handicaps, for they would be changed, perfected, & glorified! They also wouldn't look like zombies, with worms crawling throughout them, type of resurrection. But it wouldn't also be bodies of a different looking person, but would be ones that would be recognized as being the same persons' bodies. Christ was recognized as Christ, not as someone else. (It's only in later Christian lore of Christ's post-resurrection world wide treks, that he guises himself as different looking people, to test those whom he appears to, thus the purposes of the different guises. It's also in much later Christmas lore, that has him changing his shapes, sizes & looks to appear as different types of people. Although there are cases in the New Testament where his disciples failed to recognize him, at first, too, Luke 24:13-32).⁴⁶⁰² Despite those cases, the apostles knew & recognized Christ, as looking like himself, when he appeared to them and showed them he had a resurrected body. He also proved he was physical, when he ate fish with some of them. Then, like with Thomas, had them feel his hands, feet & side. They became his eye witnesses to testify that he was physical, & not just a spirit only.

As time went by, the physical-resurrection-deification doctrines and themes of earlier Christianity, were becoming more and more unpopular with many hellenized Christians. Origen's version of deification must therefore be contrasted & understood through his version of Christology, his anti-body Greek influenced version of incorporeality issues and controversies of those early centuries.⁴⁶⁰³ Just as later, when the Nicene Creed, Trinitarian controversy infected & tainted even more, the physical-resurrection-deification themes. With different later Christians' deification versions obviously having attempts to try to describe how the deified, under the pressures of conforming to the enforced creedal formulas, are then to become like the 1 God. Or how the deified, would somehow be blended into the bodiless, shapeless incorporeal, spiritual resurrection of the 3 in 1, 1 in 3 Godhead.

Thus, Origen, when defending against Celsus, who is attacking earlier Christians of the late 2nd century, about 170-80. We have to note that Origen had inherited a later version of Christianity under Clement of Alexandria, his teacher, late 2nd - mid 3rd century. By that time, Christianity was still dealing with the Christological controversy that included contentions over if Christ & other members of Deity had bodies or not. These controversies influenced deification themes of the times. However, despite this, & other things in Origen's writings we still see a rich support for deification in Origen's defense against Celsus. For Origen continues to say that the God of gods calls whom He pleases through Jesus to his inheritance. Christ instructs and brings near to God, all those who are striving to have pure thoughts, words, deeds, temperance, justice, wisdom, piety, & other virtues. They will live as citizens of heaven in the city of God, the heavenly Jerusalem with an innumerable company of angels in the general assembly & Church of the first-born. They will have been raised up with Christ, exalted & will sit with Him in heavenly places.⁴⁶⁰⁴

We are deified by participation in his Godhead, and thus should be strictly called "God" not "the God" or He who was the first born of all creation, for Christ, by being with God, was the first to gather godhood to himself. He therefore is more honored in every way than those who besides himself, are "gods". To these God the Lord of gods spoke and called the world. For it was through Christ's ministry that they became gods, for he drew divinity from God in order that they may be deified through his kindness generously shared with them. God then is the true God by which those through him are fashioned into gods and thus they are made copies of the prototype. The Father, then, is the one who is proclaimed as the one true God; but besides that true God are many gods who became gods by participating in God.⁴⁶⁰⁵

Like Plato & other philosophers, Origen believed that the approach to the divine was the supreme goal of human existence: "The highest good, [philosophers] say, is to become like to God as possible. But this definition I regard... as a view derived from holy Scripture...." And God said, Let Us make man in Our own image, and after Our likeness." ...Now the expression, "In the image of God created He him," without any mention of the word "likeness," conveys no other meaning than this, that man received the dignity of God's image at his first creation; but that the perfection of his likeness has been reserved for the consummation... the possibility of attaining to perfection being granted him at the beginning through the dignity of the divine image."⁴⁶⁰⁶

Origen, on those being deified: "From Him there began the union of the divine with the human nature, in order that the human, by communion with the divine, might rise to be divine, not in Jesus alone, but in all those who not only believe, but enter union the life which Jesus taught, and which elevates to friendship with God and communion with Him every one who lives according to the precepts of Jesus."⁴⁶⁰⁷

Origen continues expounding on those who become heirs and joint-heirs with Christ: "And thus the first-born of all creation, who is the first to be with God, and to attract to Himself divinity, is a being of more exalted rank than the other gods beside Him, of who God is the God, as it is written, "The God of gods, the Lord, hath spoken and called the earth." It was by the offices of the first-born that they became gods, for He drew from God in generous measures that they should be made gods, and He communicated it to them according to His own bounty. The true God, then, is, "The God," and those who are formed after Him are gods, images, as it were, of Him the prototype...." [Is the prototype Origen talking about the uncreated cause of all things, the incorporeal Father? Or the Son, called "the Word," who pre-existed with the Father, even the Christ who was incarnated & physically gloriously resurrected? But then how later, as Origen seems to have speculated, how we all are eventually have no need of a body in the eternities to come? ANF, 9:322-24, Commentary on John, Book 2:1-3]⁴⁶⁰⁸ Origen: Now it is possible that some may dislike what we have said representing the Father as the one true God, but admitting other beings besides the true God, who have become gods by having a share of God. They may fear that the glory of Him who surpasses all creation may be lowered to the level of those other being called gods. We drew this distinction between Him and them that we showed God the Word to be to all the other gods the minister of their divinity.... As then, there are many gods, but to us there is but one God the Father, and many Lords, but to us there is one Lord, Jesus Christ."⁴⁶⁰⁹

But we have to ask, even though Origen notes how other beings besides the true God, have become gods, by having a share of God. What type of a god will these newly made gods or goddesses be like? As noted in the earlier study about Origen's Christological views, his anti-matter Greek philosophy tainted views about the nature & type of being God the Father is, being "incorporeal," & what the Son was like, & now is. Plus, how Origen was getting talked out of some aspects of deification themes. We have to consider all these factors in asking what type of being did Origen have in mind when he said they'd become divine gods, (for the men), & goddesses, (for the women)? Would they be incorporeal? Would they have resurrected bodies at first, but then eventually get rid of their glorified perfected resurrected bodies? These newly divine beings, in having become exalted gods or goddesses, were according to their ranks as gods, the hierarchy of gods. So would the lesser in rank keep their bodies, or eventually also become incorporeal, like the Father? Like other early Christian Fathers, Origen tries to answer the concerns some have about if the Most High God the Father's glory will be surpassed by these lesser divine beings, but that will not be the case, for those who become divine will still honor the Father, as Christ does, & just as a Son, when he becomes a Father, still honors his Father, so in like manner those who become divine will worship the Father.⁴⁶¹⁰ For Origen, it seems, that it's as other church Fathers have suggested too, God the Father, in deifying others, it counts towards more of his glory, for he would rather that we be glorified & deified, than us become blackened like the Devil on the other extreme, that of demonification. Consequently, the deified will be ranked accordingly below the Godhead, in the hierarchy of gods & goddesses.⁴⁶¹¹

Dr. Hugu Nibley points out that even though Clement and Origen of Alexandria had "accepted the doctrine of eternal progression at first," they later "rejected it when the schoolmen finally talked them out of it. In Origen's universe there are more exalted beings who leave the less exalted beings further and further behind. He compares their advancements to a series of examinations and makes much of the three degrees of glory".⁴⁶¹²

Later, Origenist monks at Jerusalem were divided over the idea as to "whether all men would finally become like Christ or whether Christ was really a different creature."⁴⁶¹³

170–236, HIPPOLYTUS, bishop of Portus at the start of the 3rd century A.D. He was a disciple of Irenaeus, who was the disciple of Polycarp, who was the disciple of John. Hippolytus wrote that if man can become immortal, he will also be God. Referring probably to the word now found in 2 Pet.1:4, He mentions how we might be partakers of the divine nature. Concerning the idea of deification in the types and symbols of baptism: How that in becoming immortal, he will also be God, joint heirs with Christ, after the resurrection, (ANF, 5:237). Hippolytus then invites all nations, & kindreds to the immortality of baptism. The Christian, upon being a companion of the Deity, & a co-heir with Christ, would no longer be enslaved with lusts or passions, & never again wasted by disease, for thou has become God, deified & begotten unto immortality. He cites a proverb about 'Know thyself,' by discovering God within thyself, who has formed us after His image, (ANF, 5:153). If they obeyed God's solemn injunctions, & were to become a faithful follower of Him who is good, they would be deified and begotten unto immortality because that was God's promise to them who obey. They would resemble God, and would have honor conferred upon them by God. For the God by condescension doesn't diminish aught of the dignity of His divine perfection upon thus having made them even God, for it counts to His glory.⁴⁶¹⁴ Christ is the example for us to follow, for though some were first made mortal men and others mortal women, if we are desirous of also becoming a god, (and for the females a goddess,) we should obey Him that has created us, and resist not now, in order that, being found faithful in that which is small, we may be enabled to have entrusted unto us also that which is great. Hippolytus must have also noted that the Christians were not the only ones who had a doctrine of deification. For he notes that some of the pagans & Gnostics had their own versions of deification too.⁴⁶¹⁵

MANICHEANS: In some areas of the world, certain Christian doctrines were blended in with other nations' religious teachings and writings. Mani was born about A.D. 216 in Babylonia. His mother was of Parthian royal descent while his father was a member of the Elkesaites, a Gnostic baptist sect within the Jewish-Christian community. When he was 12, or about A.D. 228 he claimed to have had a vision and later claimed to have the prophetic gifts. Mani's teachings were "a rigorously dualistic form of Gnosticism", in which fragments of the doctrines of the pre-existence & deification were blended in with Mani's own ideas and the teachings as he presented in his own particular version of deification. They believed that they had come from the light as one of the gods, and had become a stranger on the earth, and would eventually return to the gods as a divine being. In a Manichean Psalm Book it says that they would put this world behind them, and would greet the Gods, and angels of glory, that dwell in the Land of Light. For them, other aspects of deification seem to have been, the return back to glory: "I have become divine again even as I was." And crowns of glory, or the "garland of glory"; being clothed in the "robe of light" as a prize of victory; & being exalted over all their enemies. Plus, the ascension into heaven to their Father in heaven, & the city of the Gods and angels.⁴⁶¹⁶ "To Manicheans, the world was essentially evil, but through effort and discipline, the individual could achieve perfection."⁴⁶¹⁷

200–258, THASCIUS CYPRIAN, was a convert to Christianity through the Carthaginian presbyter Caecilius in A.D. 246. He was ordained to the office of Bishop of Carthage around A.D. 248, where he remained until he suffered martyrdom in A.D. 258. In support of his own particular understanding of deification he cites Rev.21:6-7: "He that overcometh shall possess these things, and their inheritance; and I will be his God, and he shall be my son." Cyprian then cites portions from the 81 Psalm, (which now is 82, in many modern translations of the bible). After which he points out that if those who have obeyed the divine precepts and have lived righteously, if they may be called gods, how much more is Jesus Christ, the Son of God, God! Cyprian then follows this with a quote from John 10:34-38. Where Christ told some of the Jews of his time that the idea of deification was written in their own law.⁴⁶¹⁸

253–260, during Roman Emperor, Valerian's reign, one of the victims of the persecution of 257 was Cyprian. During these hard times, many early Christians must have been comforted by their belief in the doctrine of deification and perfection in martyrdom. For they believed that those who suffered martyrdom would be rewarded with great glory and deification in the after life. Because of these concepts, there were some Christians who even eagerly awaited martyrdom. Cyprian left a letter which tells of this.⁴⁶¹⁹

Christian ethics and promises of immortality began to attract the upper classes all over the empire. Many of them must have already accepted the idea of deification, in that they believed that the heads of state held divine ranks, and so when the Christians came along with their own particular versions of deification, this must have been a doctrine that they were willing to accept. However, those in the upper classes who began to show that they were leaning towards Christian beliefs & conversion were told to recant such attitudes or they would lose the rank they held, or their property, and even could suffer death in some cases.⁴⁶²⁰

210–280, NOVATIAN, ROMAN PRESBYTER wrote that Christ is not a mortal only, for if that were so he would not have been able to make us immortal, but because he is also immortal he can make us mortals immortal. Christ promised eternal life, salvation for ever, or eternal salvation which promise he wouldn't have been able bring to pass if he were a man only. But because He is God He was able to bring this about. He then cites John 10:27-8, 30, 35-6, to point out that if Christ was a man only he really shouldn't have said that He was one with the Father. And had even been sent by the Father into the world as the Father's Son. However, it was because He was the Son of God that He said this. And it was because of these claims that the Jews had rejected him and they had rushed forward to stone Him. He reminded them that their own scriptures called them gods to whom the word of God were given. So why should they say that he had blasphemed when he said that he was the Son of God? Now in these words he confirmed his own divinity. "For because, undoubtedly, they are said to be gods unto whom the words of God were given, much more is He God who is found to be superior to all these." But Christ also wished to be understood to be God, as the Son of God and not the Father Himself. Thus He said that he was sent, and thus he calls Himself the Son & not the Father.

Later on in his treatise, Novatian wrote that all heavenly, earthly, and under the earth things, and "even angels themselves, with all other creatures, as many as are subjected to Christ, are called gods, rightly also Christ is God. And if any angel at all subjected to Christ can be called God," and there is no blasphemy in this. How much more can Christ the Son of God, be called God. "For if an angel who is subjected to Christ is exalted as God," How much more consistently shall Christ, who has all angels subjected to him, be said to be God. Thus, if an angel is called God even though it is inferior to Christ, how much more is Christ God. Novatian cites what is now a portions of Psalms 82, and then reasons that if "they who are reproved and blamed seem even for any reason to attain this name without blasphemy, that they should be called gods, assuredly much more shall He be esteemed God, who not only is said to have stood as God in the synagogue of the gods, but moreover is revealed by the same authority of the reading as distinguishing and judging between gods. But even if they who "fall like one of the princes" are still called gods, much rather shall He be said to be God, who not only does not fall like one of the princes, but even overcomes both the author and prince of wickedness himself." Novatian may have believed as other Christians, that if those who are in lesser conditions, even fallen conditions should happen to repent and be eventually deified and are therefore called god. How so much more should Christ (who never did fall), be called God. ANF 6: intro. note p. 3 & 6; TN&PNF 5: p.502, n.4.

205–40–265, GREGORY THAUMATURGUS, native of Neo-Caesarea, the chief city of Pontus. He was born of pagan parents, but was later converted to Christianity under Origen at Caesarea about A.D. 234. 240 he was ordained bishop of Neo-Caesarea. The idea of deification must have been passed on to him from Origen.⁴⁶²¹

PURIFICATION, MORAL PERFECTION & DEIFICATION THEMES IN SUBSTITUTES FOR MARTYRDOM, BY SELF-TORTURE & PENANCE: Last half of 3rd century QUESTS FOR "CHRISTIAN PERFECTION"

An ever growing number of Christians sought solitude and the hermit's life out in the Egyptian desert, and later on, in many regions around the Mediterranean basin where they renounced both the world and the many of the things the Churches where doing and teaching and sought to live the "perfect Christian life" by following Christ's teaching as best as they could. One of the basic concepts of the monastic life was that men and women should try to bear witness to the perfection towards which Jesus commanded His followers to strive toward. And even though there are cases where monks were spoiled by power & wealth, despite this, "the monastic ideal endured through all the history of the Church, always at best seeking to set a life of Christian perfection and sacrificial service before men."⁴⁶²²

"In the beginning of monasticism, and long after, men did not become hermits and monks in response to a need of a society or of the church, but they were seeking something for themselves-safety, escaped from the world, moral and spiritual perfection.... In the monastic movement, there seemed to be the idea that suffering was good in itself, even when it served no purpose.... [Christ & his apostles didn't seek suffering, but they faced suffering as it was imposed upon them by others who tried to get them to abandon their mission, but rather than do so, they endured suffering.] ...They did not suffer imprisonment, beatings and martyrdom because these sufferings were an ideal, necessary for perfection, but because in the fulfilment of their mission, these evil things were forced upon them. When undergone to procure the welfare of others, or when it was impossible to avoid hardships and suffering without sacrificing principle, then sacrifice for others and enduring of privation and hardships were praiseworthy."⁴⁶²³ The early Christians were encouraged to not seek suffering, martyrdom, & weren't to purposely seek out situations of suffering & death. All life was precious & they were to do what they could to avoid such things, if possible. To love their enemies, to return love for receiving hate. To not mirror back negativity, but to forgive, endure, be longsuffering, patient, kind, & obedient, as Christ was, to his Father's will, to endure the crosses of the world. But still, despite these teachings, there were many who were attracted to the promises, glory, rewards & the wonderful descriptions of the afterlife for those who proved themselves willing to die for the cause. That of enjoying the bliss of paradise, of being perfected, & passing on towards perfection & deification. Thus, some did seek out suffering & a martyr's death, for they wanted to suffer death to obtain that martyr's reward, (often symbolized in art as crowns or white garments). When the church was no longer passing through eras of persecutions, & martyrdom, different ones thought that they could obtain a martyr's reward by self inflicted punishments & sufferings upon themselves, short of suicide. But again, this was for selfish reasons, because they sought their own personal salvation, perfection & deification, by secluding themselves away from the world, rather than over come worldly challenges, temptations, & difficult problems in being with people, family members, etc., & thus also help others with their own problems, & challenges. Some abandoned any contact, or as much as possible with other people, others, like some mothers, left their children, all filial ties were broken. Thus, others, later on, in the centuries that followed, in seeing these errors, many reformed their monastic policies to include service to others. Thus, good credits are due those monks who established monasteries of healing, the earlier hospitals, of feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, visiting the sick, etc., (Matt. 5 & 25). Thus many should be credited for the good they did in seeking moral Christian perfection by striving to improve themselves & others through developing Christ like traits, & abandoning the devilish traits, as much as they could.⁴⁶²⁴

Even though monasticism had begun to emerge during the 3rd century A.D., it was during the 4th century that it became one of the dominant movements in Christianity. Under Constantine's reign, persecutions died down against the Christians, and so did most of the zealous Christians' chances of winning a crown of glory in heaven by undergoing martyrdom were eliminated too. Thus, in some cases extreme hermit-like asceticism became a substitute for martyrdom.⁴⁶²⁵

249–252, during & immediately after the Decian persecutions, the Christian hermit life had its beginnings in Upper Egypt. Many who had sought for martyrdom, because of the belief that through martyrdom, they'd be deified, sought other ways to equal the challenges. Thus, self privations, self tortures & living a harsh live in seclusion, the Christian hermits thought such extremes would perfect them, & help them qualify for Christian moral perfection.⁴⁶²⁶

251–356, SAINT ANTHONY (Antony) OF EGYPT, was one of the first hermits in the desert who sought for moral Christian perfection. As a wealthy young man, he was so impressed by the passage of scripture where Jesus said to the rich ruler who claimed to have kept the commandments, that if he would "be perfect" he should sell all that he had and give it to the poor and come follow him, (Matthew 19:16-29). Early Christians sought to progress as far as they could in this life towards moral perfection. Anthony sought to follow Christ's call to the rich man to sale all he had and give it to the poor, if he wanted to be perfect. He did this, and joined others in their quests for moral perfection. He retired to the desert, & was later joined by like-minded men who lived as monks or hermits.⁴⁶²⁷ Ladders to heaven symbolized the monks' quest for "Christian perfection."⁴⁶²⁸

These early Christians began to establish moral codes in the hope of obtaining moral perfection. Others wrote and illustrated in art their quests for moral perfection. St. Antony stated that in the "monastic perfection" they needed 3 things: "stability, study of the Scriptures, and prayer."⁴⁶²⁹

When the days of persecutions faded out for a while, some Christians resorted to self inflicted inhuman and humiliating excesses while attempting to substitute the sufferings of martyrdom, thus attempting to thereby qualify, (so they seemed to believe) for a martyr's reward.⁴⁶³⁰ Thus, as the doctrine of perfection & deification in martyrdom passed on into later centuries, some hermit monks took it to an extreme and even perverted it by different extreme excesses in their monastic asceticism.⁴⁶³¹

4th c., onwards, as many in the churches became more immoral, fashionable, prideful, & sought the indulgences of the pleasures of the flesh. Others amongst the clergy, & those that followed them, opposed such things. Many of them went to the opposite extreme, surrendering all their worldly goods, dressing in the ragged robes of philosophers. Many forsook family life for celibacy & virginity, & sought to live in monasteries out in the desert, as places of salvation & refuge. With Greek thought having dominated over the prophets' writings, the physical body was viewed in asceticism, & by many others, as a prison for the spirit. Thus, many sought after martyrdom as not only being the crown of moral perfection, but of freeing themselves of the prison of the flesh. Consequently, their version of deification was tainted with Greek anti-body themes, for if they were to become like God in martyrdom, it would be a 'god' that was without body, parts, or passions!⁴⁶³² By then, & in these versions of asceticism & martyrdom, the earlier physical resurrection deification themes, that of being deified in God's image, as also earlier being created in God's image, which images are that of both male & female, (Elohim is plural for gods, that can be for both male & female deities).⁴⁶³³ By then, in some of the asceticism versions of deification themes, & in many of those seeking martyrdom, the earlier physical ritualistic symbolisms, & types that illustrated a physical deification-resurrection, in being deified in God the Father's image, as the Son is glorified in the Father's image, & thus the deified are deified in the physical resurrection image of Christ. Many of these things were rejected by many later Christians, or metaphoricalized into anti-anthropomorphic (or non physical versions of deification & perfection). Such attempts to distance themselves from the earliest physical deification themes, must have been a challenge. For there were such martyrdom-deification themes as fighting the good fight against the devil! Running the race to receive the price, or crown! Overcoming evil to be enthroned! Overcoming evil to be clothed in royal white robes, symbolic of the righteousness of the saints! Being willing to suffer persecution but not without some protection, having first put on the whole armor of God.⁴⁶³⁴ With deification-martyrdom symbols being crowns, hand clasps, white robes, ascensions, as such things were depicted in thousands of art works. Plus, as taught, practices, & defended earlier, to then later be rejected almost completely. Or metaphorically re-interpreted, or ignored just because they didn't like them, or were made fun of, by the Greek thinkers, was still a challenge for them to rid themselves of all the symbolism, ritualistic reminders, scriptures, & ancient church testimonials, but they did. They looked at all the earlier with dislike, & even considered the literal interpretations of it all as heretical, for "...the thought of such a substantial connection between God and man [deification in God's corporeal image, as held by the ancient Church, was later thus viewed] as the heresy, par excellence. We must remember here that for the Ancient Church salvation stood in direct correlation to embodiment..."⁴⁶³⁵ Thus, in these later cases, the very thought of the spirit being put back into their own physical body, (in physical resurrection deification), was for them, like being put-back into a prison for their flesh & spirit. (This was despite how earlier, the earliest Christian teachings testified of there being different types of resurrected bodies, different types of glory levels that the different resurrected bodies would shine as, some like the sun's glory like light, others, the moon level like light, others like the stars. Thus, contrasting the different rewards in the physical resurrection. These bodies would also be changed, wouldn't be like their former mortal bodies, for they wouldn't die again, have physical defects, etc., (1 Cor.15, Phil.3:10-21, Col.2:8-23, chap.3, Heb. chap.1, 2:9-10, 5:5-9, 1 John 3:1-3). Despite these earlier teachings, by these later centuries, the anti-body philosophy of the Greeks had tainted many asceticism views, & the views of those seeking martyrdom. Thus, many rejected all physical comforts, physical pleasures, in their disdain for the body, it being a form of punishment & spirit prison, a consequence of Adam's fall & transgression. The earlier defenses of a physical glorious resurrection was metaphorically re-interpreted into being only a spiritual resurrection. Plus, a spiritual heavenly coronation ceremony, symbolical crowning, symbolical enthronement. Moreover, the ritualistic physical covenants of the earlier Christian mysteries, put to art works, that of being pulled into the safety of heaven by the hand of God, or Christ, to receive the crown, or robe of deification, as seen in thousands of art works, must have by then, been re-interpreted as being all spiritual & not physical, because of how they rejected the earlier concept that God & Christ could have, each their own physical bodies. They had rejected Christ's physical resurrection, & settled for a God without body, parts or passions!

Some of these extremes: The purification of the soul by self-torture of the body. The greatest of self-privations of different types. They lived unwashed, clothed in rags, extreme solitudes, torturing their own body. Living in caves, in huts, & in the desert of Egypt & later the Syria areas. Some would move about by crawling, some were said to remain in a stooping position for 10 years, as a form of self torture. Others gave endless praise in song & prayer, (the Ascemetes, or those who never sleep). Some would go through long fasts, sometimes walled in a cell, chained to a rock, or on top of a column, (the Simeons, the Stylites).⁴⁶³⁶

Others hesitated to get married, but did because they felt they sided with Paul, agreeing that it was better to marry, if they couldn't control their sexual urges, than burn, like in hell for unrepentant illicit-sexual habits, outside the bonds of marriage. But also, "that marriage was an obstruction to those seeking perfection."⁴⁶³⁷

Thus, those who followed extreme Monastic perfection themes, sought celibacy, & lived the lives of Christian hermits, as marriage & children, eventually were considered too much of a distraction away from their extreme quests for Christian moral spiritual perfection.⁴⁶³⁸ Celibacy was therefore held up as "a counsel of perfection," while to wed was disparaged away.⁴⁶³⁹ This, despite marriage had its own deification & perfection symbolism, for it was understood, in the earliest church, that the deification of wedded couples, were part of the ritualistic types in the early Christian mysteries, of what was hoped would happen to the whole church, that they would remain united in agreement on doctrine & righteous practices, like wedded couples should try to be. Thus, the wedding ceremonies, with veils, white garments & robes kept spotless & clean, the joining, cleaving, of the couples' right hands, were used as types of what the apostles hoped would happen to the church, in being united, becoming one, cleaving together, rather than being divided by contention & schisms. For "neither is the man without the woman, neither the woman without the man, in the Lord" (1 Cor. 11:11). Eternal love was often symbolized in early to later centuries by hand clasps of married couples,⁴⁶⁴⁰ & its through keeping covenants made with God, remaining faithful to him, as couples should remain faithful to each other, that they are then deified & perfected together, raised to a glorious resurrection by hand & wrist grasping, according to other art works on resurrection-deification themes.⁴⁶⁴¹

Consequently, some thought that other things, family life, the pursuit of riches, or the accumulations of material possessions, etc., were also obstructions & distractions from them seeking perfection. Thus, many thought that they had to forsake every possible environment & place, amongst living with other people, if they were going to be able to progress towards perfection. They thought they had to sacrifice, or give up, forsake all worldly pleasures, & self-punish their bodies in order to purge out their sins to purify their souls. Thus, not wanting the members of the opposite sex around to tempt them, they sought to live in isolation, or as much as possible, so as to not be distracted by sexual temptations. All of which if they gave into, this, plus other temptations, would cause them to fall from their quests for "Christian moral perfection." Thus, during about the late 4th century onwards, far away & isolated monasteries began to be built, as did nunneries, & other religious orders developed, which would allow different ones to study how to become gods or goddesses.⁴⁶⁴²

In later centuries, the quest for moral perfection through trials, forsaking the things of the world, & pilgrimages, etc., were "called by many terms and described by many metaphors. Its greatest name was perfection."⁴⁶⁴³ Hence, in later centuries, it was seen as a form of cleansing, purification & suffering for Christ, who had promised that those who endured would be perfected and deified. "The imitation of Christ, however, was more than a radical interior change of motive and transvaluation of the paradoxical kind encouraged by the Master when he promises that "he that findeth his life shall lose it; and he that loseth his life shall save it." [Matt.10:30] Its very hardships recommended it as a means toward perfection."⁴⁶⁴⁴

As time went by, the "Church in the West as well as the East has always highly honored its hermits, monks, and nuns by calling them "the religious" because in their various orders they have followed the path to perfection in chastity, and obedience."⁴⁶⁴⁵

4TH CENTURY A.D.: Some of these extremes were in the ways in which some ascetic monks shunned women and refused to have any kind of contact with women at all because they believed that they might be too much of a temptation. Their beauty might cause them to fall away from their quests for moral and spiritual perfection into the lusts of the flesh. Sexual abstinence was one of the basic concepts of asceticism, and the most perfect men were expected to shun women.⁴⁶⁴⁶

260–312, METHODIUS, also called Eubulius, was bishop of Olympus and Patara, in Lycia. About 312 A.D., he was removed to the episcopal See of Tyre in Phoenicia, and eventually suffered martyrdom at Chalcis in Greece. This Greek father, said that Christ was made man that we might be made Gods. Aglaophon said that Christ said, when tempted by the Sadducees, that those who shall be resurrected shall then be as the angels, (Matthew 22:30). Methodius responded to this by suggesting that Christ proclaimed that the human nature, when it becomes immortal, it wouldn't be remolded or transformed into another nature, but rather, it will have been restored to what it was before the fall. Remaining in it's own proper place. Further on Methodius says that all the orders of immortal beings must be preserved by God, among them too is man. He then cites from the Book of Wisdom 2:23. "God created man to be immortal, and made him to be an image of His own eternity." Further on

Methodius interprets Matthew 22:30 as meaning that the resurrected are incorruptible. They will be near the angels in this respect, they who are then in paradise, will be like the angels in heaven, they will spend their time in seeing God and cultivating life, under Christ's direction. For Christ didn't say that they would be angels, but rather they would become like them, in being crowned with glory and honour. Thus, they would differ a little from the angels while being near to being angels, and approaching to the condition of angels. Further on Methodius says that Christ became man so that He might raise that body up, He being the first begotten from the dead by changing that earthly body into the heavenly, and that mortal body into an immortal one. So also would we be raised up by God to incorruption and immortality.⁴⁶⁴⁷

Methodius, the Greek father, 260–312, also called Eubulius, was bishop of Olympus and Patara, in Lycia. "every believer must, through participation in Christ, be born a Christ," [Also] "...He [Christ] was made man that we might be made Gods."⁴⁶⁴⁸

260–330, LACTANTIUS, 325, says that the chaste man will become identical in all respects with God.⁴⁶⁴⁹ Arnobius 260-330, summarized: "The gods were originally human beings who were deified upon death."⁴⁶⁵⁰

CHRISTIAN FATHERS DURING & AFTER NICENE CREED ERA: It seems that the doctrine of deification was preserved to a certain extent in the belief systems of many of the different Christian sects during these later centuries. However, the ways in which the doctrine of deification was interpreted by the different Christians should be understood in the light of how these later Christians understood what God was like and how they understood the nature of the Godhead to be.

260–337, EUSEBIUS OF CAESAREA, early church historian, in 325 he played a prominent part in the polemical situations and debates which eventually brought about the Nicene Creed. The ways in which he interpreted the doctrine of deification must have been influenced by these polemical situations during the Nicene Creed era. Despite this, he seems to have understood the symbolical types in some of the garments and crowns that were still seen as types and symbols of deification. For in his address to the bishops of Tyre he hints to these types: "You who are dressed in the sacred garment that reaches the feet, adorned with the celestial crowns of glory."⁴⁶⁵¹

Part of the basic concept of deification themes, as understood by the early Christians, was how those who were deified would advance in glory & be given the types of powers that God has. Earlier, Clement of Alexandria mentions a "scripture" not in present day Bibles: "The saints of the Lord shall inherit the glory of God and His power."⁴⁶⁵² But because there were rival counterfeit forms of deification qualities, & powers, there were also those who also tried to gain those powers from Satan & the fallen angels. For, according to the Book of Enoch, some of those powers & counterfeits are listed as coming from some of the fallen angels, & what they would teach unto the children of men, & the types of powers & black arts they'd teach. Thus, there arose different ones, like Faust, & Simon the Magician, who was called a "god" by those who couldn't discern between the divine & the counterfeits, because Simon was able to perform counterfeit miracles. Plus, there were those who misinterpreted the counterfeits as divine, while others vilified the divine as demonic. Christ's miracles were vilified as being done by the powers of Beelzebub, another name for the Devil. Moses & the miracles he performed, that rivaled the magicians of Egypt, his were misinterpreted as being done through magic too. After 325, when the Roman Emperor, Constantine helped later Christianity of his time to become a legal State Religion: "As soon as the Church became possessed of [state] power, it was at once bent on the suppression of magic and witchcraft. Constantine began the policy of threatening the severest punishment on all kinds of black art, allowing its applications only for curing diseases and preventing hail and rain storms during the harvest. And Constantine's successors did not fail to preserve the tradition.⁴⁶⁵³

298–373, ATHANASIUS, BISHOP OF ALEXANDRIA, defended his own particular views and opinions as to what had happened at the council of Nicaea, and the debates that eventually brought about the Nicene Creed. Even though he defended and taught the basic idea behind the doctrines of deification. It may be that some of the polemical arguments during his life time, some of which concerned the nature of God, may have influenced his interpretations of deification. For the way He understood God to be seems to be different than how many earlier Christians understood God to be. Despite this, he repeats a number of times the concept that Christ was made man that we might be made God. Christ manifested Himself by a body that we might receive the idea of the unseen Father. Christ endured the insolence of men that we might inherit immortality. The Christ was made flesh in order to offer up his body for all, and so that we upon partaking of His Spirit, might be deified. He was not lessened when He was made a man for us by taking upon himself a body, for He deified it and rendered it immortal. Writing against Arians, [356 and 360 A.D.], Athanasius says that Christ deified men by becoming Himself man. Christ put on the created body that God had created for Him so that in Christ we might be capable of being renewed and deified. Through him we might be introduced into the heavenly kingdom after His likeness. Salvation included being perfected in Christ. To become one with the Godhead is to also become perfected in spirit and body. Being redeemed from sin they are perfected and deified. In a letter to Adelphius, Bishop and Confessor: against the Arians, Athanasius again repeated the concept that Christ became a man that He might deify us in Himself. He also used a portion of what is now 2 Pet. 1:4 to support the doctrine of deification as he understood it to be. Thus in deification we become "partaker of the Divine Nature". Writing to Maximus 371, Athanasius says "we are deified not by partaking of the body of some man, but by receiving the Body of the Word [Christ] Himself." Christ is the Father's deifying & enlightening power, in which all things are deified. Christ is not alien in essence from the Father, but coessential, for we by partaking of Christ, we partake of the Father, the Word being the father's own.⁴⁶⁵⁴

Born about 331–335, died 395, GREGORY OF NYSSA was a native of Cappadocia, & was elected bishop of Nyssa in 372. On Virginity, 368 different aspects of virginity helped towards the deifying of those who share in her pure mysteries, so that they become partakers of the Lord's glory.

In: The Great Catechism, [A.D. 385], Christ had assumed a body which he deified. Baptism was a type of this, & that which was to come in the resurrection when they would be restored to a blessed and divine condition, separated from all shame and sorrow. If they weren't thoroughly cleansed from all stains arising from evil, they wouldn't be admitted amongst the heavenly company. Through Christ they would be able to escape the fire, & would be purified and deified. The sacramental meal was a type of the deification process too. For upon eating the sacramental meal, they were taking into themselves the same type of immortality as Christ's immortality.⁴⁶⁵⁵

318–386, S. CYRIL, ARCHBISHOP OF JERUSALEM. In their mysteries they are symbolically called 'Christs', they also learned of the faithfuls' return to glory, & how they would be deified. Thus, in being entitled a Christ, or other names of God. It may have been considered to be a type of that which was to come in the heavenly realms when the faithful would be entitled gods because they had been deified. In his lectures on the Mysteries, Cyril says that upon having been baptized into Christ and clothed with Christ, they had been shaped to the likeness of the Son of God. For God upon predestining them to be adopted as his sons, had also conformed them to the body of the glory of Christ. Being as partakers of Christ they are rightly called Christ's or anointed ones. They became Christ's by receiving the antetype of the Holy Spirit; everything had been wrought in them in like manner, because they are like him.⁴⁶⁵⁶

325–391, GREGORY OF NAZIANZUS was bishop of Constantinople. He says that Christ's inferior nature, the Humanity, became God, because it was united to God, and became One Person because the Higher Nature prevailed. They were to be made God so far as Christ was made Man. It was by the power of the incarnation that Christ makes us God.

Many Christians by this time believed that the earlier Christians who had died had passed on to glory, and deification. Gregory may have believed that his father had been deified for he closed an oration with a direct prayer to his dead father to make known to them the glory that he was at, & what light surrounds him in that glory. He also hoped that his father would soon receive him speedily to the same abode that he was then in.⁴⁶⁵⁷

4th century, APOLLINARIS OF LAODICEA. The Logos (Christ) became man for the purpose of our salvation, in order that we might receive the likeness of the Heavenly One and be made God after the likeness of the true Son of God according to nature and the Son of man according to the flesh, our Lord Jesus.⁴⁶⁵⁸

Apollinaris may have also believed in a version deification tainted by the controversies that fragmented off from the Nicene Creed controversy. The idea that Christ, as the Son of God, who had become a man, by taking upon himself a human body, was an issue that raged for centuries to come. Thus, different versions of what Christ was said to be like in his spiritual & physical nature, & human aspects, or as some suggested, appearing to be human, fell under the pressures of debates, & rivalrous polemics, & philosophical-word-games by different warring later Christian sects that came up with different formulas, terms, & unscriptural language to attempt to deal with Christ's physical, spiritual & human nature(s). The early Christian proverb that God became a man so man could learn how to become God(s), was thus tainted & its meaning varied, & was buried in the different terms & formulas that thus arose from numerous debates & councils that argued & sought to enforce their particular dogmas that attempted to explain how God could have become a man, or been incarnated. With this in mind, what aspects of the different versions of deification that also shined through during these later times were thus tainted by the Christological Controversy.⁴⁶⁵⁹

G. L. Prestige: Apollinaris on the Heavenly Man is quite normal & orthodox. "God and manhood had been united. Therefore inasmuch as God had become incarnate the two elements together are properly called man; and inasmuch as the manhood had been deified the two elements together are also properly called God (frag. 147 puts this point with the utmost clarity)."⁴⁶⁶⁰

316–330–379, BASIL THE GREAT, ARCHBISHOP OF CAESAREA, wrote De Spiritu Sancto or On the Spirit about 374 A.D. He wrote about what would happen to those who are purified from the shame of wickedness. Hinting to what might be the rites of passage hand clasp in the Christian mysteries he wrote that "the weak are held by the hand, and they who are advancing are brought to perfection. Shining upon those that are cleansed from every spot, He makes them spiritual by fellowship with Himself." Basil used a type to illustrate the type of glory which would shine from them that are purified, for it will be just as when a sunbeam falls on bright & transparent bodies, they in like manner become brilliant in glory and light too, for they shall shine forth with fresh brightness. Thus, the "souls wherein the Spirit dwells, illuminated by the Spirit, themselves become spiritual, and send forth their grace to others." Basil hints to how they had been ritualistically prepared to become heavenly citizens where they would join in the chorus of angels, and have joy without end through abiding in God, and even their "being made like to God." For they "who are perfect in virtue are deemed worthy of the title of God."⁴⁶⁶¹

LATER CHRISTIANS DEBATED OVER MEANING OF PERFECTION: In time, many of the earlier Christian doctrines began to become the subject of controversy. "The heated debates in Western Europe around the year 400 on the meaning of perfection had their roots in the uncertainty about what it meant to be a genuine Christian in a society of fashionable Christianity."⁴⁶⁶² The Christians quest for moral perfection was sought after by a number of Christians who sought to live the ascetic life style, and took vows of virginity, & poverty, etc. The British monk Pelagius hoped that all Christians would become dedicated to "an austere struggle with mediocrity, an arduous quest for perfection." Eventually, mainstream Christianity was infected with a attitude of "distrust towards bodily existence and sexuality. This permanent 'encratite' tendency was given powerful impetus in the debates about Christian perfection at the end of the fourth and the beginning of the fifth centuries."⁴⁶⁶³

SAINTS WORSHIP, A PERVERTED FORM OF DEIFICATION? It may be that as the doctrine of deification passed on into later centuries, the deified saints began to be prayed to & eventually "saint worship" became an acceptable practice with in a number of later Christian churches. Thus, saint worship seems to be a distorted apostate preservation of the doctrine of deification that had been paganized during the great apostasy. Earlier, Origen of Alexandria, 185-230-254, had warned that the undeified persons might be tempted to worship the glorious deified persons, should they appear to the undeified in their glorified conditions. If this was to ever happen, they were to resist the temptation to worship them because they should worship the Father, next the Son, and next the Holy Spirit, and not those who had been newly deified.⁴⁶⁶⁴ Valentinian I ruled in the West 364-375, the Roman believed that when Valentinian I died, he was deified.⁴⁶⁶⁵ As noted earlier, Gregory Nazianzen (A.D. 370), prayed to his dead father as if he had been deified.⁴⁶⁶⁶

As different martyrs, martyred saints, & saints became famous for their good works, miracles, & teachings, & as the doctrine of deification & perfection themes became more legendized amongst the common folks. Plus, as relic magic got blended together with these themes, in later centuries. Later Christians must have figured that enough time must have gone by, after the saints, or martyrs' deaths, for them to have been perfected, glorified, & deified as gods & goddesses. Consequently, many of them must have reasoned that if they had become divines: Then what harm would there be in worshipping them? Or calling upon them for help, protection, or to intercede in their behalf, or that of a dead relative, such as during prayers or masses, or liturgical rites for the living & the dead? Thus, though pictures & statues were not associated with worship of martyrs & saints in the earliest days of Christianity, they were as time went by and aged Christendom. As the practices became more popular, opposition grew to the use of pictures & statues for saint & martyr worship. Eusebius & Epiphanius opposed the practice, & around 600, so did Serenus of Marseilles. Some argued that the pictures or statues themselves were not worshiped, but whom they represented. In the Orient, the practice grew & became extensive. By the 8th century, the practice of image worship was increasingly opposed & condemned, such as in the East, by the Emperor Leo III, of the Isaurian Dynasty, (born 680, died 741, reigned 717-741). Though supported by some bishops, he was opposed by Germanus, Patriarch of Constantinople. While the empress-mother of Constantine VI approved image worship. In 787, at Nicea, a council was held that decided in favor of reverence for images, but it was defined as veneration, not true worship. Meanwhile, opposition came from the Franks, during the council of Frankfort, 794. They rejected the 2nd Nicene Council & forbade either the bestowal of an oration or the worshipping of images. For 30 years, Leo suppressed the adoration of images, but after his death, his wife, regent for her son, Constantine V, (born 718, died 775, reigned 741-775), restored images in the worship. The issue & practice was still a concern & was discussed in the council of Paris, in the West, 825, with diversity of opinions expressed about the practice. By these later centuries, the churches had been substituting saints for pagan gods in the hopes of in so adapting pagan customs, shrines, etc., it would give them Christian content & meaning. Somewhere in all these image controversies, & image worship were fragments of deification themes being turned further into legendized fragments, tainted with pagan customs, symbolism, & substitutions.⁴⁶⁶⁷

VIRGIN MARY AS DEIFIED QUEEN IN HEAVEN: Origen may have learned of saint worship already underway during his time, and thus warned against it. For the veneration for departed "saints" seems to have led to the adoration of the mother of Jesus, as the chief of the mediators. Early in the 4th c., Epiphanius claimed that Mary "never died," and there were some who began to worship her as a goddess, calling her the "queen of heaven." Art works of the virgin Mary show different events in her life on through to her assumption into heaven to where she passes through a heavenly coronation rite in which she is clothed in garments, robes, a crown, enthroned next to her Son, glorified & eventually deified.⁴⁶⁶⁸

Deification themes, from the earliest days of the church, included coronation type themes & ceremonial splendors, that would be preserved in later centuries, with the coronation ceremonies of later Christian Emperors, & Christian Kings & Queens, & or, those ascending to their thrones, or positions of royalties. For, like in earlier Christianity, they were believed to be, & those so coronated, believed & thought themselves as getting ready for their rewards of remaining faithful, of having endured hardships. Thus, like with martyrs' rewards, crowns & a white garment awaited them. In the case with later Christian royalty, they took this symbolism to advance themselves in the eyes of their subjects where were to look upon them, as they did, as being divine, or as "gods," or "goddesses," like the Roman Emperors often did. For examples, the Emperor, Justinian (527-565 A.D.), resorted to an awe inspiring ritual & pageantry whenever he appeared in public, or before foreign ambassadors, for: "He encouraged the Oriental conception of royalty as divine, applied the term sacred to his person and his property, and required those who came into his presence to kneel and kiss the hem of his purple robe, or the toes of his buskined feet. He had himself anointed and crowned by the patriarch of Constantinople, and wore a diadem of pearls."⁴⁶⁶⁹

Another example: Late 11th c., in English coronations of Priests & Kings, both them "are deified and sanctified,"

& thus were to be considered "...a God and a Christ of the Lord."⁴⁶⁷⁰ These later concepts & ceremonial splendors were developed from earliest Christian types & symbols of ritualistic deification themes: That of reigning with Christ, (2 Tim. 2:12). Being enthroned, (Rev.3:21). Of pressing for the prize, running the race to receive the crown, by enduring to the end. Of being watchful of those that might seek to take away the prize, thus keeping their garments, keeping them pure & spotless, (Phil.3:14, Rev. 3:4-5, 11, 18-21, 7:14, 16:15, 22:11-12. Jude 21-24, 1 Peter 5:4-10, Col.1:26-29, 3:4-14. James 1:27, 1 Tim. 6:12, 14, 2 Tim. 2:10-13, 4:7-8, Rom. 9:23). All these types were from ancient biblical coronation ceremonies, that were incorporated into earliest to later Christian coronations.⁴⁶⁷¹

In earlier centuries, the concept about the "Intercession of Mary and the Saints," they hints to the glorification of Mary: "Communicating with and honoring in the first place the memory of the ever-glorious Virgin Mary, Mother of our Lord and God Jesus Christ..."⁴⁶⁷²

As time went by the deified Virgin Mary was seen as one who could guide souls to Christ, rescue souls & act as a go between, one who souls could communicate to in order have her requests things from her Son. However, unlike other deified saints, she held a higher position of honor and glory for she was among those who the other deified saint would guide souls to also. Hence, "the saints were like celestial courtier—they had access to the King of Kings and the Queen Mother of heaven."⁴⁶⁷³

In historic Christendom, the virgin Mary passes through an after life ordinances, or a heavenly coronation ceremony. For example in the Lincoln Cathedral, there is a "visus of the Assumption and Coronation of the Virgin which in the fifteenth century was performed in the nave on the Feast of St. Anne. This ceremony or play, like other examples of the Assumption and Coronation drama, would have revealed the sight of a divine act in heaven, the reception of the Blessed Virgin Mary, who will be crowned Queen of Heaven."⁴⁶⁷⁴ She is taken by the hand & guided into heaven. There, coronated, robed, crowned, enthroned, & glorified as the Queen of Heaven. Some art works, she sits with the other members of the Godhead. She is given powers to rescue, raise or resurrect souls out of hades, limbo (or the spirit prison).⁴⁶⁷⁵

In some cases, the Trinity consisted of a divine unity of Father, Mother, & Christ-child, as amongst the Oriental Christians down to the rise of Mohammedanism. Thus, Mary is deified in these later versions of the Godhead, which is said to have Gnostic influences in it, for "...this Gnostic Trinity-conception is a natural ideal which in the further development of Christianity proved strong enough to influence the Roman Catholic Church in her devotion of Mary, the mother of Christ, whose personality was sometimes superadded to the Trinity, and sometimes even suffered to replace the Holy Ghost."⁴⁶⁷⁶

PERFECTION & DEIFICATION AS A REWARD FOR MARTYRDOM: During the different persecutions, the different Christians reacted in various ways. In North Africa a Christian militancy developed, and the supreme ambition for some was to be granted a martyr's crown. While in Numidia (southern Algeria) some Christians greeted each other with the wish 'May you gain your crown.'⁴⁶⁷⁷

Thus, there were many Christians who sought to be perfected and deified through suffering martyrdom. A number of early Christian writers of the 1st through the 3rd centuries even expounded upon the doctrine of the perfection and deification of those who had suffered martyrdom for cause of Christ. Some made martyrdom, "the supreme sacrifice of life, the height of a Christian's glory and his ideal of perfection."⁴⁶⁷⁸

Clement of Alexandria: The martyrs who had died for the cause of Christ had been deified & perfected as their reward from God. God stood in the congregation of the gods; He judgeth in the midst of the gods. (Psa.82:1), Who are they? Those that are superior to pleasure, passions, who are greater than the world. "I said, Ye are Gods; and all sons of the Highest." To whom speaks the Lord? To those who reject as far as possible all that is evil of the human family. ANF 2:374-76. For the highest perfection is in accordance with virtue, justice, holiness, & wisdom, etc. Becoming to the best of his power, becoming such as He is. Becoming to God's glory fellow-heirs with Christ.

Martyrdom was to be called perfection because the person had thereby exhibited the perfect work of love. ANF 2:411. As Christians, they were not to seek opportunities to become martyrs, like some over zealous heretics who had taken it to an extreme, for true Christians should do all they could to assure their own personal safety. But if martyrdom should come, they were not to worry for "the golden race is with the gods, who are in heaven, in the fixed sphere, who chiefly hold command in the providence exercised. And he who in the body has devoted himself to the good life, is being sent on to the state of immortality." ANF 2:412. Those who reach the right-hand path, make advances towards immortality. ANF 2:413-4, 416.

Citing from Romans 8:7-8, 10, 13, 17, 28-30, Clement points out scripturally that those who suffer for the cause of Christ are later glorified & are made joint-heirs with Christ in the afterlife. In these words, we see the martyrs' reward being taught. ANF 2:417.

Outsiders may view martyrs as being punished, while those who were suffering, their hope was full of immortality. (Wisdom 3:2-4.) Martyrdom was a glorious purification process like a refiner's fire. And in the time of their visitation they will shine forth like unto sparks of fire. For they shall judge the nations, rule over the peoples, and the Lord shall reign over them forever. (Wisdom 3:5-8). Those who resist evil & do good works are perfected. ANF 2:428-9.

DEIFICATION IN EARLY CHRISTIAN Gnostic SECTS: Nag Hammadi texts, Christ who has exalted man became like God, not that he might bring God down to man, but rather it was so that man might become like God.⁴⁶⁷⁹

Other documents says that the blessed end of those who have the knowledge is to "become God." The good choice- that of divine things- "deifies man". Hermas to Tat says: "You were born a god and a child of the One". Another says that the good end of those who have obtained knowledge, is to become God.⁴⁶⁸⁰ Other Christians of these early centuries argued against what they believed were heretical versions of the doctrine of deification.

APOCRYPHON OF JAMES, Christ says that if one happens to be oppressed & persecuted by the Devil, but should happen to do the Father's will, the Father will love them, and make them equal with Christ. In ASCELPIUS, the Father, the Lord of the universe, creates gods, man too in this way also himself creates gods, for not only is he god, be he also creates gods. 2ND TREATISE OF THE GREAT SETH & other documents: Since they weren't afraid before God, they will pass by every gate without fear & "be perfected in the third glory." The real significance of the 3rd Heaven is that it is where God makes whomsoever he wishes a father & whomever he wishes a god. It is the place which the Nag Hammadi books call the "pleroma", or "Heavenly Bridal Chamber", where the "spiritual" souls are reunited with Christ & reborn as members of the "True Race" as gods. EPISTULA APOSTOLORUM, Christ speaks of those who may become joint heirs with him in the kingdom of heaven of him who sent him.⁴⁶⁸¹

Early Christian Coptic version of deification? During Christ's world wide trek, when the Apostle Thomas had pulled his finger out of the wound in Christ's side, some of Christ's blood flowed down from Christ's side. Christ said that His blood had joined to their bodies, and thus, they themselves had become divine, even as Christ was divine.⁴⁶⁸²

Other sources seem to be in response to the interpretations of deification in "orthodoxy", for contrary to what "orthodoxy" says, God's power to lift his offspring is endless, for he makes whomever he wishes into a father god.⁴⁶⁸³

Late fourth to early fifth centuries, JOHN CHRYSOSTOM, died 407, he was the bishop of Constantinople, 398-404. He taught "Christ came to us, and took upon Him our nature and deified it." He also taught that "man can, by his own efforts, attain the likeness of God by mastering his passions."⁴⁶⁸⁴

CYRIL OF ALEXANDRIA, patriarch of Alexandria in 412. The meaning of the salvation for Cyril was defined as deification. Christ became a perfect man in order to deliver our earthly body from a foreign corruption, Christ had "dyed the soul of man with the stability & unchangeability of his own nature," thus making our body a participant in his impassible divinity. Cyril seems to have believed that the Holy Spirit helps to bring about the deification process too. "If to be able to 'deify' is a greater thing than a creature can do, and if the Spirit does 'deify' how can he be created or anything but God, seeing that he 'deifies'?"⁴⁶⁸⁵

345-420, JEROME, made a number of comments concerning what is now Palms 82. "I said: You are gods, all of you sons of the Most High." He says that we are gods is not so by nature, but by grace. God says: I made man for that purpose, that from men they may become gods. We are called gods and sons! God said that He made you gods just as Moses was made a god to Pharaoh, and after you are made gods, you may be made worthy to be sons of God. God did not say that you are gods to kings and princes only for all to whom God has given equally a body, soul, a spirit, He has given equally divinity and adoption. For we are all born equals. How could we be sons of the Most High God unless He Himself is the Most High? He said that all of you would be exalted as He is exalted. But, that you "shall fall like one of the princes." The reason being because we had been so elevated that we are said to have fallen. Jerome interpreted the words "Give thanks to the God of Gods" as referring to those gods mentioned in the Psalm, I said: "You are gods;" & again: "God arises in the divine assembly." Those who abandon the ways of vice and have become perfect, they cease to be mere men, because they are then gods, & sons of the Most High. Jerome avidly supported monasticism & was of the opinion that "the most perfect Christians were rigorous ascetics."⁴⁶⁸⁶

354-430, AUGUSTINE, consecrated bishop of Hippo, 395. He says that Christ "The word became what we are that we might attain what we are not. For we are not God; but we can see God with the mind and interior eye of the heart. To make those who were men "gods", he who was God was made man." God wishes to make us a god, not by nature, but through his gift & adoption. His humanity made him a partaker of our mortality, so that through exaltation we become a partaker of his immortality. He calls men gods, that are deified of His Grace, but not born of his Substance. He does deify those who are God through himself. But he himself that justifies also deifies, for by justifying he makes sons of God. 'For he has given them power to become the sons of God' [John 1:12]. If then we have been made sons of God, we also have been made gods through the effect of Grace adopting, not of nature generating. Those who are made gods are made so by his own Grace and they are not born of his Substance, that they may be the same as He, however by favor they should come to Him, and be fellow heirs with Jesus Christ. He as an Heir hath willed to have fellow heirs because of the love in Him. Christ isn't lessened in his inheritance in willing that we share in being heirs with him. For it is as great for many as it is for a few heirs, & it's as great for individuals as for all too. Augustine believed in the soul's return to glory. For "Augustine taught that humans should behave on earth as if they were travelers or "pilgrims," keeping their eyes at all times on their heavenly home & avoiding all materialistic concerns." In On the City of God, the doctrine of the "two ways", are mentioned for he suggests that the human family was, is, & will be composed of two warring societies, one being those who live according to man, and love themselves, while the other consists of those who live according to God. The former belong to the city of earth and they will be damned. While the blessed few who compose the city of God "will on Judgment Day put on the garments of immortality."⁴⁶⁸⁷

Augustine: "But He that justifieth doth Himself deify, in that by justifying He doth make sons of God. For he has given them power to become 'the sons of God.' [John 1:12]. If we have been made sons of God, we have also been made gods."⁴⁶⁸⁸

FRAGMENTS OF DEIFICATION IN LATER CENTURIES: As time went by into later centuries, we still can see hints of this doctrine among the scattered branches of Christianity, for fragments of the basic concepts of deification can be seen, to a certain extent, in saint worship & prayers to the Saints. And even though some Christians objected to saint worship, others thought that it was acceptable for them to pray to the Virgin Mary, or other Saints because they believed that their saints had gone through the heavenly coronations ceremonies, had been invested in heavenly robes, crowned, enthroned, glorified, & deified. Thus, later art works of heavenly coronations, with all the crowns, robes, thrones, & depictions of different saints in glory, such works document these later fragments and left over traces of the doctrine of deification. Other art works depict ladders to heaven, some of which were symbolic of the later Christians' quest for moral perfection.

About 418, moral Christian perfection was the concerns of Pelagius & Celestius, more so than opposing Augustine's speculations & inconsistencies, for: "...They were more concerned with the ethical side of Christianity than with the dogmatic; but their endeavor after moral perfection was based upon certain views of the natural powers of the will, and these views proved to be in conflict with anthropological principles which had been developed in the African church for the previous 10 years under the influence of Augustine."⁴⁶⁸⁹

493-525, a number of female martyrs were depicted in a mosaic from S. Apollinare Nuovo, Ravenna. Around their faces is a sort of saintly light in a circle, and they hold crowns on what could be garments.⁴⁶⁹⁰

480-544, ST BENEDICT OF NURSIA, was one of the monks who set foundations for the moral codes which many monks would follow in their quests for 'Christian perfection'. Thus, 72 injunctions were to be considered as tools which would help them in their own quests for perfection as they strived towards the full stature of perfection in Christ. St. Benedict's outline was derived in part from the scriptures, from Cassian who speaks of instruments which helped one in advancing in virtue, & from different texts, as the approved statements about the quest for perfection. From these he believed that he had given the monks the means by which the perfection of that society was to be attained. The main focus was the many different Christ-like traits: Faith, obedience, humility, patients, kindness, love, plus many others. They all were to work on these as they advanced through different degrees and grades which ascended towards the crown of perfection.

Benedict's Rule: "Wherefore brethren [he says] if we wish to attain the topmost height of humility and to come quickly to that heavenly excellence which in this present life we reach by humility, we must raise up— and by our acts we must ascend— that ladder which appeared to Jacob in his dream whereon he saw angels ascending and descending. This ascending and descending doubtless signify nothing else than an ascent by humility and a descent by pride. The ladder itself is our life on earth, raised up by God towards heaven for the humble in heart. The sides of the ladder we call our body and soul, and into these sides God has inserted steps of humility and discipline of our ascent."⁴⁶⁹¹

529, & afterwards, at Monte Cassino, Benedict demolished a pagan temple & founded a monastery. In time, the monastery, like others, followed the general rule of giving help to others, which was one of the things that were to perfect the giver, as well as the specific regulations of Benedict. "To these specific regulations Benedict added some general counsels of Christian perfection." He lists things like, love of God, self & one's neighbor. He goes on to encourage living the rules of conduct from the 10 commandments, then to honor all men, to chasten the body (self penance?). Plus, to love fasting, give relief to the poor, cloth the naked, visit the sick, (Matt. 25:31–46). Plus, don't do injuries to others & bear them patiently. Love one's enemies, don't talk too much, don't desire to be a saint, be one. After a disagreement, try to be reconciled before the sun goes down. Never despair of the mercy of God. If the monks lived these basic rules, & counsel, it would have helped perfect them, or at least got them on the right path towards ascending towards Christian moral perfection.⁴⁶⁹²

Different versions of ladders were also devised for teaching moral concepts, monastic rules & perfection themes. Different stages of this ascent were supposed to bring them into a union with God. St. Anselm introduced a new set of steps of Humility and made them stages in a logical spiritual progression. As with other versions of the ladder perfection themes, ladders were also a preservation of the doctrine of the two ways, for as different steps, 12, 4, or more rungs, stages, or steps of humility were depicted, so also its opposite, Pride, which caused Satan's fall from heaven.⁴⁶⁹³

Later art works depicted monks ascending ladders towards moral perfection, and towards the crown of perfection extending down from heaven in God's hand. Perfection was the promised reward which was looked upon only as an incentive to attract and inspire them to continue to follow Christ in doing good works and acts of love. Cassian, quotes Abbot Nesteros who after speaking of the many different arts and sciences in the world, he invites the reader to consider the spiritual science & their ascension towards moral perfection.⁴⁶⁹⁴

6TH CENTURY: PSEUDO DIONYSIUS THE AREOPAGITE [5TH OR 6TH CENTURY] God's word gives the title of 'gods' to those sacred men among us who are distinguished because of their love for God, thus, the title of 'gods' is not just given to those heavenly beings who are our superiors, for it is also given to those sacred men. Every being, endowed with intelligence, & reason, that eventually return to be united with God, being forever lifted towards his divine enlightenments, imitating God, deserves to be called divine.⁴⁶⁹⁵

7TH CENTURY: Heraclius ascended to the throne and became Emperor in A.D. 610, & was able to marshal Byzantine strength in a counteroffensive against the Persians. By this time, the Virgin Mary had already been considered by many to have been deified. This was a later view & belief which seems to have had its roots in the earlier doctrine of deification. Constantinople opposed a Persian fleet on the Asiatic side, & a great army of Slavs and Avars from the European shore. The Byzantines believed that they prevailed through the miraculous aid of the Virgin, which they believed was "their divine protectress, acting through the instrumentality of her holy icon, the Hodegetria."⁴⁶⁹⁶

Late 6th, early 7th, ST. JOHN CLIMACUS was Abbot of Mt. Sinai, in the 7th century, he wrote a treatise that presents some of the religious disciplines of the monks, & various ascetic exercises, the degrees of self-improvement, & penance leading to the attainment of moral perfection and the soul's ascent to heaven. The struggle towards moral perfection was depicted in art works of ladders to heaven. Though this image to describe the soul's progress to perfection was of pre-Christian origin, it was given particular popularity and authority for the Middle Ages by the Scala Paradisi of John Climacus.⁴⁶⁹⁷

7th c., MAXIMUS THE CONFESSOR, Died in 662. The sacramental meal was a type of deification and which was to deify those who eat it. The reason why Christ had become a man was to make men gods. To be saved in the ultimate sense was to be deified.⁴⁶⁹⁸

Many believed that redemption was achieved through the incarnation of Christ and the resurrection. But within this scheme, "the rising of the person of Christ himself is not an issue, while the deification of man through the defeat of Hades-Death is. The Anastasis fulfills this function admirably. Appropriately, the Myrophores are superseded and made to yield to the dynamism and tangibility of the message of the Anastasis as defined by the Christology of the Sixth Ecumenical Council." 680-81 A.D.⁴⁶⁹⁹

8TH, c., in some areas of Christendom, some of the different Christian sects began to worship the deified saints, as we have already seen earlier. In some cases it seems that some Christians, such as some of the Byzantines, went even a step further and began to not only worship different saints such as the Virgin Mary as divine, but also they began to worship their images & icons too. This must have been considered a heretical practice by other Christians who were not so willing to take the doctrine of deification to that extreme.⁴⁷⁰⁰

9TH c., from later 3rd-9th, & later, many Christians became monks in different monasteries which had eventually been built in different areas of Christendom. Christian "asceticism" seems to have preserved many of the basic earlier Christian doctrines concerning the Christians' ascent towards moral & spiritual perfection. Monastic perfection, became many monks,' later Christians' version of deification & perfection, & would for many centuries to come. And although some monks had taken their monastic practices to extremes in some cases, their quest for "Christian perfection" had kept alive, to a certain extent, the earlier Christian doctrines of deification and perfection.⁴⁷⁰¹

10TH c., SIMEON METAPHRASTUS "The body of God deifies me and feeds me; it deifies my spirit and it feeds my soul in an incomprehensible manner."⁴⁷⁰²

11TH c., MICHAEL PSELLUS "The ability to make man divine, to lead him out of the material realm, to deliver him from passions, and to endow him with the ability to deify another--this is the most perfect likeness."⁴⁷⁰³

Late 11th c., a quote attributed questionably to one 'Anonymous of York' tells of English coronations of Priests & Kings. Apparently, their coronation anointing ceremonies retained deification themes, in that Kings & Priests were believed to be anointed with oil, as an actual ascension towards deification and godhood, for: "Kings and Priests have a common unction of holy oil, a common spirit of sanctification, a common quality of benediction, the name and power (rem) of God and Christ in common... Both Kings and Priests are deified and sanctified by the grace of unction and by the consecration of their benediction... If therefore the King and the Priest are both, by grace, Gods and Christs of the Lord, whatever they do by virtue of this grace is not done by a man but by a God and a Christ of the Lord. And when the King gives a bishopric or a Priest a kingdom, it is not a man who gives them but a God and a Christ of the Lord."⁴⁷⁰⁴

St. Odilo of Cluny, (died 1049), on Christ's sufferings & being born into a body that was pierced on the cross: "Alas that I was not there to see the Lord of angels humbled to the companionship of men, that He might exalt men to the companionship of angels."⁴⁷⁰⁵

1073, Hilderbran, who had been a monk from Cluny, went to Rome & eventually became advisor to 5 popes & in 1073, was chosen pope, succeeding Gregory VII. He started advancing different deification themes by claiming that the Roman church was founded by God alone. He also constantly invokes, iustitia the divine right, & deified himself in his own mind, perhaps through the deification themes in coronation ceremonies, of that time, & other themes passed down from Roman traditions. Such as how Roman Emperors themselves, & the Roman people, thought their Emperors to be deified.⁴⁷⁰⁶ Thus, in thinking that he alone could use the imperial insignia, & his feet only shall be kissed by all princes & he may depose the emperors, he may have combined these 2 deification themes, & even others versions, still being taught in Christendom, & thus thought himself to be infallible & divine.⁴⁷⁰⁷

1095, Pope Urban II summoned the nobility from among the European nations to take up the Cross for the cause of Christ in order to reconquer the Holy Land. Soon after this, the Crusades began. Those went were promised the highest of spiritual rewards, remission of their sins, "with the assurance of the imperishable glory of the kingdom of Heaven."⁴⁷⁰⁸ What aspects of deification, if any, can be found in this incentive to go on a crusade, possibly suffer, & even possibly die on the way, or die there, is of interest here. Especially in light of earlier to later versions of deification in suffering martyrdom & suffering monastic penitents' versions of purification & suffering for the cause of Christ.⁴⁷⁰⁹

Monastic movements during the 11th–12th centuries attempted to reform the corruption that was in the Churches and if one monastic group failed to bring about change, another stricter order arose, however, "since all monks were mere men subject to the weaknesses of the flesh, many failed to achieve the perfect monastic life."⁴⁷¹⁰ In fact, the monastic quest for moral Christian perfection, plus, Christian hermits, secluding themselves, as much as possible from the temptations of the outside world. These were later forms of deification in their quests towards developing Christ like traits & thus eventually ascending the ladder of traits towards perfection, the reward symbolized by crowns, & welcoming hand & wrist clasps, as Christ welcomes those who make it to the top, & pulls them into the society of the newly-deified gods & goddesses.⁴⁷¹¹

12TH c., a depiction of the 40 martyrs shows the crowns that they are about to receive. Christ also extends down out of heaven to bless them. Another similar depiction dates back to 1105/6 A.D.⁴⁷¹²

One of the aspects of the legendization of some versions of later Christian deification is the deification of "the Mother of God," as such versions fragmented off the Christological Controversy of earlier centuries.⁴⁷¹³ In time, the Virgin Mary was venerated by many to the point where she was considered to have become part of the Godhead, & was believed to be an intercessor with her son for the salvation of human souls. A 12th century stone work at the cathedral of Notre Dame, Paris, depicts Christ blessing the Coronation of His Mother. She is crowned, and sits on a throne with Christ.⁴⁷¹⁴

Another of a ladder to heaven dates back to the 12th c., was inspired by a treatise of John Climacus 500 years earlier. The higher up one goes on the ladder, the further one is in their progress towards moral perfection. Demons attempt to cause different ones to fall off the ladder. Christ at the top, greets everyone with a hand clasp, to raise them to where He is.⁴⁷¹⁵

Another 12th century artwork, showed different ones attempting to climb up the ladder towards a hand that extends down with a crown. Some fall for the different temptations of the world seen below.⁴⁷¹⁶

In fact the struggle up the ladder of moral perfect was where the fight between the forces of darkness, and the angels of God took place, as noted in numerous art works that depict these battles. If the monk was not careful, he could get a sword or arrow in the back, or side, from a demon, and thus could fall off, symbolic of having lost the battle toward perfection, and of falling away.⁴⁷¹⁷ "Apart from the dominical "counsels of perfection," where are, of course, to monasticism, the images of the warrior and the athlete were to be found in the Pauline Epistles."⁴⁷¹⁸

12th century work, the Salzburg manuscript, now in Mantua, illustrates Psalm 1 & 3, and portrays "both the spiritual life of the good man and the Cross of Christ in whom the Virtues are perfected."⁴⁷¹⁹

A fragment of the doctrine of deification & working towards moral perfection may have been preserved in part & to a certain extent in the teaching of the Albigenses in southern France. They were Manichaeans & thus were consider to be more heretical than other sects. "They led such good lives that even orthodox clergymen were impressed. Their numbers grew rapidly, partly because they taught that only the leaders were excepted to be perfect; others should have faith & try to lead a good life, & they could be saved if they received the last rites from the perfect."⁴⁷²⁰

Joachim of Fiore, 1135–1202, Italian theologian and the founder of the monastic order of San Giovanni in Fiore, & founder of the Joachimites. He seems to hint to Christian perfection underway as by way of the trinity of ages, progressing towards different ages closer to perfection. The church was to soon be replaced and purified by spiritualised monks, but also that it would itself foster the change: "For just as old Simeon lifted the boy [Christ] in his arms, so the successors of Peter ... seeing this order following Christ's footsteps in spiritual virtue, will sustain it by [their] authority." Consequently, the older order will rejoice in its replacement: "Nor should it lament its own dissolution since it knows that it will remain in a better succession ... and ... what order can grieve that it lacks perfection in itself, when a universal perfection succeeds it?"⁴⁷²¹

1164, the Cathars' version of perfection is in how they were divided into simple believers, & Perfects. Gnostic influences shaped their version of perfection, with the anti-materialism of the physical world being all bad, in contrast to the bliss of the spiritual world, the two being linked by the slow ascension of purified souls to heaven.⁴⁷²² The two categories of Cathars, the perfecti and the credenti, are explained in this way: The perfecti were those who had attained a high level of not only initiation but purity. Having received the consolamentum, or the Cathari rite of spiritual baptism usually administered just before death making the candidate one of the perfecti. It was an immersion (or baptism) in the Holy Spirit. It implied reception of all spiritual gifts including absolution from sin, spiritual regeneration, and the power to reach an elevation to a higher plane of perfection. In their views, because matter was evil, and a satanic creation, their version of perfection was more spiritual than physical. The Cathars being considered heretical by other sects, met with polemical arguments against their versions of perfection, as: "Some were convinced that humanity was neither perfect nor perfectible."⁴⁷²³

1170–85, Peter Waldo, a wealthy merchant of Lyons, inspired by the story of saints selling their possessions & giving the proceeds to the poor, & thus seeking perfection through poverty. Waldo followed their example, 1173, & even formed a group, The Poor Men of Lyons, later called the Waldensian. Their version of perfection, must have also been inspired from such scriptures as Matthew 19:21. But they got in trouble for following such things in their newly translated French bible, & were excommunicated, labeled heretics by the thought policing that followed after the Third Lateran Council, March 1179.⁴⁷²⁴

12th–14th: The Cathari, or the Pure, also known as Cathar and The Good Men, thus Catharism, the pure ones, had their own version of deification & obtaining perfection. They thrived in some areas of Southern Europe, particularly northern Italy and southern France. Other Christians, like the Catholics, denounced them, such as the Cathar Consolamentum ritual, by which they were baptized and raised to the status of 'perfect'. Their beliefs in what God was said to be like, also must have influenced their version of what humans can become, in becoming perfected gods. Their idea of two Gods or principles, one being good and the other evil, the good God was the God of the New Testament, and the creator of the spiritual realm. In contrast, the evil god of the Old Testament, the creator of the physical world, was Satan. This was like some Gnostic anti-Matter views, & the earlier Marcionites. The Cathari's view was that all visible matter, including the human body, was created by this evil god, (Satan). Cathars thought human spirits were the genderless spirits of angels trapped within the physical creation (of physical bodies created by the evil god). They believed that they were cursed to be reincarnated until the Cathar faithful achieved salvation through the ritualistic perfection process, the consolamentum, said to help perfect them. This Consolamentum, or Consolation, could be taken only once, & involved a brief spiritual ceremony to remove all sin, to the purity level required of Perfecti, which sins were purified out of the believer as they were inducted to the next higher level as a perfect. To regain angelic status one had to renounce the material self completely. Until one was prepared to do so, they'd be stuck in a cycle of reincarnation, condemned to live on the corrupt physical (matter being evil) Earth. The Perfecti, thus, avoided eating physical meats of animals, except fish, & anything considered to be a by-product of sexual reproduction. The perfecti were the spiritual elite, trying to live a life of austerity and charity. According to the Albigenses & other Cathars, the consolamentum was an immersion (or baptism) in the Holy Spirit. It implied reception of all spiritual gifts including absolution from sin, spiritual regeneration, and the power to preach, and elevation to a higher plane of perfection. As Perfecti they were seen to be "equal unto the angels" and thus already semi-Divine.⁴⁷²⁵

13TH c.: Mechtild of Magdeburg seems to have combined the doctrine of the descent of Christ into the spirit world & deification. Some of the souls in purgatory, were those who would be able to escape through Christ and their help, they too would eventually be perfected.⁴⁷²⁶

1225–74, St. Thomas Aquinas, believed that in the after life, the human body would be glorified with the a supernatural splendor of light. "The bodies of the blessed will shine 7 times brighter than the sun." Aquinas also repeated what earlier Christians had said about how God became man, that man might become God. Aquinas was later considered by some to be a glorious saint who had entered into a glorious state of existence in the after life. The symbolic picture by Traini Francesco in St Catherine's Church, Pisa, represents the "Glorification of St Thomas."⁴⁷²⁷ Aquinas, borrowing from Greek philosopher, Aristotle, asked this about human law, if it can be changed or not, & if it had perfecting qualities to advance the human family towards higher levels of perfection, "...because human reason naturally moves step by step from the imperfect to the perfect. Whence we see in the speculative sciences that those who first philosophized handed down imperfect results which were afterwards made more perfect by their successors. Similarly in practical matters, those who first tried to find something useful for the human community, being unable to understand everything, introduced things in many ways deficient; but their successors replaced these with ones far less faulty."⁴⁷²⁸ When different monks of the Franciscan Order wanted to seek perfection through their oath or vow of poverty, Thomas adds to the polemics his own points of view. "When discussing voluntary poverty, Aquinas remarked that he who seeks to live virtuously with no means of his own and who depends on the generosity of others has a problem: ["] Freedom of the mind is most especially required for the attainment of perfect virtue, for, if this is weakened, men very easily become 'partakers of other men's sins' either by expressly agreeing, being adulatory or hiding their true feelings. Hence this way of living is prejudicial to freedom because there is no man who does not fear to offend him from whose kindness he lives.["] ...Aquinas's answer was that those who give themselves to voluntary poverty are of such perfection that they would not be suborned by 'the little' they need in order to live."⁴⁷²⁹

1200–80, Albertus Magnus, argued that the saints would receive different degrees of luminous glory based on their different degrees of merit. For a virtuous saint would shine brighter than someone who needs to be purified in purgatory before being able to enter into the final state of glory.⁴⁷³⁰

Mechtild of Hackeborn entered a convent when still a child in 1248, & later believed that we are saved not because there is a spark of divinity in us (as many different kinds of 14th c., mystics held) but because "our humanity is incorporated in Christ's, which is joined to divinity."⁴⁷³¹

13th cent., political theological texts of later Christianity, in some areas, there were ideologies that seem to have faded deification themes at the basis to them. It's as if a fragment of earlier deification themes, from a blend of earlier Christian deification themes, & those earlier ones, that of Roman Emperors' thought of as being divine, was passed down to later political theoretical settings in some areas of Christendom. At least, this might be what Peter's Excerpts, might suggest, in that: "What is sacred is partly human, like the laws, and partly divine, like the Church. Some priests are therefore divine... and others human..."⁴⁷³²

Before & about 1295, deification & perfection themes are found in the ways that different ones in the Catholic church looked upon their Popes & papal authorities as being divine like & near, if not like unto Christ. But this later form of deification themes included militant Christ aspects, forced Christianization themes too, in that if the popes were divine, or at least nearly divine, then as "gods" they ought to be obeyed! Even if obedience meant thought policing, spying on communities, & having paid informants spying out & secret witnessing against the alleged disobedient. Inquisitions' tactics of forced confessions, imprisonments, tortures of the most horrible types, burning the disobedient, & Crusades against non-Christians & “heretics!”⁴⁷³³ Consequently, this later corrupt version of deification themes, wasn’t the earliest form of the gentle persuasions of the New Testament Christ type. For, as earlier & later versions blended with deification themes of how pagans viewed their Emperors & Pharaohs, as divine “gods,” so also, it seems did the Roman church’s later versions of deification of the Papacy follow the militant pagan versions of deification too. For, unfortunately, 12th century Christianity, “was mired in the false tradition of force imposed after Constantine, having long since abandoned the inspired position of the New Testament Church: “He sent Him; as to men He sent Him; as a Savior He sent Him, and as seeking to persuade, not to compel us; for violence has not place in the character of God.” (Methetes to Diognetus, ca. 130, ANF 1:27.⁴⁷³⁴ Consequently, in this later militant version of deification is blended in later Militant Christ versions, that of marching forth to conquer the world during Christ’s post-resurrection world wide trek, as noted earlier. Thus, some of the views were how that the faithful Christians shouldn’t grumble about the yoke placed on them by the Church, but should look upon their servitude as liberty, having been redeemed by the Church from the power of the devil. In this distorted view of deification & perfection, some thought, like Giles of Rome, that the Christians ought to confess themselves to be slaves of the Church, for the faithful will be returned a hundred times over, and they will possess eternal life. The Church Militant was to be looked upon as not only an institution of divine foundation, but also a godlike one. Moreover, the Church must be feared & its commands obeyed, & the highest pontiff also feared & obeyed, because his powers are spiritual, celestial & divine. However, this vision of the popes as a quasi-God or ‘image of Christ,’ was not without objection & oppositions, for such views infuriated different ones like Marsiglio & Ockham. During this year, 1295, Olivi, a moderate defender of practical papal authority, remarked: “They say that he is uncreated, immense, impeccable, infallible and prescient in all things, like Christ, an opinion which no one would state or eve hint at, except a lunatic.” Giles tried to answer this objection by separating office and person, in that a truly spiritual man can judge all others and never be judged, and there are 2 kinds of spiritual men. One is spiritual because of “personal perfection.” The other, like the pope, because of office: “He who is spiritual according to his status and perfect in the highest degree according to the jurisdiction and plenitude of his power will be the spiritual man who judges all things and cannot be judged by anyone.” The Roman pontiffs were likening themselves unto the Roman Emperors & Caesars, who were thought also to be divine “gods,” who must be obeyed, even if by force of arms.⁴⁷³⁵

14TH c.: 1305, Francis of Assisi and his brethren tried to imitate the Savior or the apostles, believing how that “...the Holy Spirit showed the apostles that the perfection of the evangelical life was not at that time open to the multitude. Whence the apostles did not require perfection to be observed in the churches they ruled, that perfection they themselves accepted when imposed by Christ and which they fully followed.”⁴⁷³⁶ What became known as the Franciscans, was named after Francis who traveled about living the poor life, & in the village squares he “preached evangelical perfection, penance & peace.”⁴⁷³⁷

1313, Dante Alighieri, (1265 – 1321), was a major Italian poet of the Late Middle Ages, & in one of his works, On Monarchy, he defined humanity’s aims: “Unerring providence has ordained two objectives man must seek: the bliss of this life which consists in the use of his own powers and is figured by the terrestrial paradise, and the bliss of eternal life which consists in the enjoyment of the vision of God to which man’s own powers cannot ascend unless aided by divine illumination, and which is made understandable by the celestial paradise.”⁴⁷³⁸

13th c. through about 1325, onwards, as also earlier, versions of striving towards Christian moral perfection became mixed in with theoretical dogmas & policies, as controversies over having property, or not, in monastic rules & vows or oaths of poverty, were polemically discussed & argued over. The conflicts were not new, for they had continued on between Christian monks’ Orders, that sought for Christian moral perfection by forsaking worldly pleasures & goods, & by giving away their riches, if they had any, to the poor, to then live in solitude in monastic life styles out in secluded areas, or later monasteries.⁴⁷³⁹ These types of quests of seeking to perfect themselves, through Christ’s help, included, so they thought: Trying to avoid, as much as possible, contact with those in the world that might become a temptation of one sort or another! Such as being around beautiful women, who might cause temptations of lust to trouble their souls. Or contact with rich people, or holding property, etc., that might cause them to covet after riches, or accumulate worldly possession that would distract them from following their perfection quests & fulfilling their monastic vows. They were seeking to put off, like filthy rags & clothing, all the negative traits, & put on righteousness, by developing Christ like traits, as they ascended the stairs or ladder of Christ like traits towards the crown & ultimate deification reward of Christian moral perfection.⁴⁷⁴⁰ While on the other side of the controversy, in later centuries, when the Roman papacy gained all kinds of wealth, properties, built churches & cathedrals, there were those who believed & taught that material wealth was needed to help build up the church, & more Cathedrals, all in the name of having houses for instruction, devotion, & “holy” places to perform the sacraments that brought souls toward perfection too. Thus, many clerical leaders in the Catholic church & papacy sought to acquire more lands, more property, & materials, assets & the continual flows of revenues from tithing-taxes that they claimed & demanded that they needed to build their cathedrals, churches, & fund Crusades & Inquisitions’ heretic hunters & other papal-projects. Consequently, conflicts arose between different religious Christian Orders, like the Dominicans & Franciscans.⁴⁷⁴¹ Following St. Francis of Assisi’s quests for Christian perfection, the Franciscans believed & taught that in their oaths of poverty, & rules, they were becoming more perfected, for the “procedure outlined in the Secular Franciscan Rule is our path to Christian perfection.”⁴⁷⁴² While in contrast, others argued that glory awaited those who stayed true to the version of perfection offered through the Catholic sacraments, & in obedience to the papal & canon laws of the Popes. Thus the need for material churches, & Cathedrals, property & Crusades done in the name of getting back property taken, like the Holy Lands in Jerusalem.⁴⁷⁴³ Thus, Pope John XXII, (reign 1316–1334), following Thomas Aquinas thinking, asserted that ‘not poverty but charity or love was the basis of a perfect life.’ Cardinal John Colonna, said, after Francis had requested earlier of Pope Innocent III, that he had the right to be poor, that “...‘If anyone should say that the observance of evangelical perfection or the vow of this man [Francis of Assisi] is strange, irrational or impossible, he blasphemes against Christ, the author of the Gospel.’”⁴⁷⁴⁴ But even in the Franciscan Order, the Order of Friars Minor Conventual had different interpretations & ways of doing things than another Franciscan Order, the Spirituals. “...For many years it had been split between the Conventuals, who freely accepted Church discipline and observed a rule resembling those of other religious Orders, and the Spirituals who hankered after absolute poverty and mystical perfection in accordance with their founder's principles. The differences between the two groups came to a head in 1318, when the Pope [John XXII] condemned the Spirituals on the ground that obedience was a greater virtue than either poverty or chastity, and unleashed a vicious persecution against them. Many were sent to the stake for their ascetic aspirations. Scandalized by such brutality, the Conventuals too, headed by the General of the Order, resolved to adhere to the principle of poverty, only to be convicted by the Pope of heresy.⁴⁷⁴⁵ 1324, Louis the Bavarian sides with the Spirituals and accuses John XXII of heresy. In reply to the argument of his opponents that Nicholas III's bull Exiit qui seminavit was fixed and irrevocable, John XXII issued the bull Quia quorundam on 10 November 1324, declaring that it cannot be inferred from the words of the 1279 bull that Christ and the apostles had nothing, adding: "Indeed, it can be inferred rather that the Gospel life lived by Christ and the Apostles did not exclude some possessions in common, since living 'without property' does not require that those living thus should have nothing in common."⁴⁷⁴⁶ 1328, John of Anneux, after the time of the Exiit, defends the Pope by asking: How Francis could come up with a new way of living which many church doctors, Augustine, Gregory & other saints didn't know about? Moreover, & that "the church, lasting for a thousand years didn't have, which was then more perfect, just as the men of that time were a hundred times more perfect than they are now; nor can this Francis's way of life be lived except by hermits in the desert."⁴⁷⁴⁷ In his Ad conditorem canonum, John XXII argued again for love & charity as being what a monk or friar should have, for without it, they derived no spiritual advantage from his vow of poverty. In 1334, Ockham angrily responded: "This error opposes the religious who profess to live without their own property. According to it, if monks... are solicitous to acquire, conserve and dispense temporal goods after taking their vow of poverty... their [personal] surrender of goods... confers no advantage so far as [spiritual] perfection is concerned. From this error there follows a certain ancient error... namely, that it is not better to do good works with the vow than without it."⁴⁷⁴⁸ Thus, this later version of perfection, in deification themes, had become smothered over in this debate between those who sought perfection through their vow of poverty & those who sought to justify their own version that included gathering property, tithing-taxes & other sources of revenue to support papal agendas & church projects.

The Renaissance, is a period of time between about 1330 and 1530, give or take of few decades on each end. Pico's essay "On the Dignity of Man" seems to speak of the two extremes or two ways when he wrote that mankind is endowed with the freedom to either retrogress down to the level of the brute or to ascend and be reborn into the higher forms which are divine. The ascent is where they are united with divinity. "Roused by an ineffable love, full of divine power, we shall no longer be ourselves but shall become He Himself who made us." The end result is deification.⁴⁷⁴⁹

In some of the translations of Jewish & Christian apocryphal literature & legendary stories about Adam & Eve, (some translated during the 14th-15th centuries A.D.). Fragments of the doctrines of the pre-existence & deification are combined together in the return to glory dramas of Adam and Eve. Adam was told that while he was under God's command he had been one of His bright angels. The pre-existing Christ promised Adam that there was a way back to glory for them, for they would be able to be restored once again to their former state of glory if they would keep the covenant that they had made with God after the time that they had been banished from the garden. The way back into the garden, the abode of light was made possible because Christ would come into the world and would be born, would atone for the sins of the world, and after his death, he would descend into hell to rescue them and the souls of the righteous out of hell.

These stories often tell how Satan claimed that he would give to Adam and Eve their former state of glory, but what he really had in mind was to drag them down further to where they would become like him and his fallen angels.

References to garments as symbols of deification, prayer gestures with up-lifted hands, and rites of passage are mentioned in these narratives too, for God sent angelic messengers to teach Adam & Eve about their pre-existence & how they would be able to return to glory and become bright & glorious beings again. A garment of light and glory awaited them upon their return to glory where they would also be deified.⁴⁷⁵⁰

In thought & art works in France & the Netherlands in the 14th & 15th centuries, in later Christian perfection themes, some still seem to retain some aspects of the monastic concepts of being austere or lacking comforts, luxuries, or adornments, & living reclusive, or the living a solitary life, like the hermits, or those who tried to avoid much contact with other people who might be too much of a distraction or temptation to them. "Three different paths, at all times, have seemed to lead to the ideal life. Firstly, that of forsaking the world. The perfection of life here seems only to be reached beyond the domain of earthly labour and delight, by a loosening of all ties. The second path conducts to amelioration of the world itself, by consciously improving political, social and moral institutions and conditions. Now, in the Middle Ages, Christian faith had so strongly implanted in all minds the ideal of renunciation as the base of all personal and social perfection that there was scarcely any room left for entering upon this path of material and political progress...." Further on, concerning the hope of improvements & progress of this world, however slow, "...those who love the world too much to give up its delights, and who nevertheless cannot help aspiring to a better order of things, see nothing before them but a gulf. We will have to wait till the eighteenth century – for even the Renaissance does not truly bring the idea of progress – before men resolutely enter the path of social optimism; only then the perfectibility of man and society is raised to the rank of a central dogma, and the next century will only lose the naïveté of this belief, but not the courage and optimism which it inspired."⁴⁷⁵¹

14th–15th c. quests for perfection themes, are still detectable in chivalrous orders, that were founded in the professed hopes of striving towards moral perfection. The aspirations professed in founding them were always those of the very highest ethical, and political idealism. Unfortunately, some how the fragments of the earlier Christian mysteries & the ritualistic types of perfection & deification, became faded & almost lost in the political religious militant conquest ideologies of those who used the different Knightly Orders, or the later Christian military, for their own corrupt & wicked agendas, such as for thought policing. Plus, that of the long on going history during the Crusades, of forced Christianization of infidels, Jews, Moores, & on into the 16th century, of other cultures, such as those discovered in the Americas. These actions were obviously contradictory to its original ideals & vows of fidelity, charity, protection, hospitality, etc.⁴⁷⁵² Despite these aspects, a product of the Great Apostasy, some of the attempts at bringing in the good aspects of what was preserved from the earlier Christian mysteries were retained in part from what was mixed into Knighting ceremonies from monastic vow elements. Thus, in some chivalry settings, some of the monastic vows, with their quests for moral Christian perfection, were transformed into militant ones: "Philippe de Mézières, an unrivalled political dreamer, wishes to remedy all the evils of the century by a new order of chivalry, that of the Passion, which is to unite Christendom in a common effort to expel the Turks. Burgesses and labourers are to find a place in it, side by side with the nobles. The three monastic vows are to be modified for practical reasons: instead of celibacy he only requires conjugal fidelity. Mézières adds a fourth vow, unknown to preceding orders, that of individual, moral perfection, summa perfectio. He confided the task of propagating the Militia Passions Jhesu Christi to four messaiges de Dieu et de la chevalerie..."⁴⁷⁵³

In time, as the chivalry ideals came up against its own militant agendas, later intellectual progress, & other factors, that faded out further, the monastic elements that had once inspired the quest for Christian moral perfection. All the negative aspects mentioned above, that unfortunately did happen throughout Knight Orders' histories of forced Christianization, etc., these were in extreme contrast to the more loving, kinder, charitable & hospitable versions of Christianity also going on. Especially the positive saintly traits that were often found at many monasteries, & amongst Knight Hospitallers, or the different early to later Christian religious Orders. Though not perfect & without weaknesses & infested with corrupt individuals, from time to time, they still had those that sought to follow Matthew 25 hospitable policies.⁴⁷⁵⁴ With their deification & perfection themes of taking care of the sick, injured, poor & needy, & their climbs, or steps up the positive non-militant positive Christ like traits, symbolized as ladders, or stairs towards Christian moral perfection. Imagery, themes, & practices that would be passed down in Knightly types of the moral character building concepts of Freemasonry & Masonry.⁴⁷⁵⁵ But, before this, 14th–15th centuries, "...Chivalry, far from being completely disavowed, drops its affections of a quasi-religious perfection, and will be henceforth only a model of social life. The knight is transformed into the cavalier, who, though still keeping up a very severe code of honour and of glory, will no longer claim to be a defender of the Faith or a protector of the oppressed... The requirements of moral, aesthetic and the social perfection weighed too heavily on the knight." At least in areas of France & the Netherlands.⁴⁷⁵⁶

1390–1457, An angel descends out of heaven with a crown, in a depiction of the martyrdom of Saint Sebastian-Andrea Del Castagno. Florence.⁴⁷⁵⁷ To what extent does the aspect of the theme, deification through martyrdom, survived in historic Christendom in 14–15th century France & the Netherlands? The answer to this might be seen in how, in some cases, symbolism attributed to saints, & martyrs, includes: "The vision of white and red roses blooming among thorns [that] at once calls up a symbolic assimilation in the medieval mind: for example, that of virgins and martyrs, shining with glory, in the midst of their persecutors.... the colors of the roses, are also those of the virgins, their red colour that of the blood of the martyrs."⁴⁷⁵⁸ Thus, the aspect of martyrs said to shine with glory, seems to indicate possible fragments of deification themes that include the glorification of martyrs. Numbers were also symbolic, & held fragments of perfection themes in later blends of symbolism, that included later Christian symbolism, mixed in with aesthetic artistic elements to illustrate such things as the cycles of 150 Aves and of the 15 Paters, that Jean Gerson represented in his 'Brotherhood of the Rosary,' where each of the words of the Ave signifies one of the 15 "perfections of the Virgin" as in other cases of the steps towards Christian moral perfection, "the fifteen virtues," symbolized by steps of a staircase, or rungs in a ladder, where each rung symbolized Christ like traits, or virtues: Patience, piety, humility, perseverance, etc. While the vices, personified in different artistic ways, such as a lion for pride, a black dog, for envy, a beautiful women, for lust, a basket of gold, for other negative vices, all these & others types, a bed for idleness, all beckon below, tempting those ascending to fall for the different vices, to fall away from advancing towards deification, Christian moral perfection, often symbolized by a hand extending a crown, or a welcoming hand or wrist grasp from the extended hand, or from Christ, pulling, raising, welcoming the newly deified who have endured to the end, into the heavenly realm back into Christ's presence.⁴⁷⁵⁹

Romanesque art preserved the deification themes, such as that of Mary & her Son, Christ, as they were depicted with lavish colors so as to try to depict these "celestial beings."⁴⁷⁶⁰

15TH c: 1414, Mary, the Mother of Christ has been often depicted as being crowned queen of heaven during a heavenly coronation ceremony, in which Mary seems to have therefore reached divine rank. And her body had been glorified.⁴⁷⁶¹

Fra Angelico, 1387-1455, or Giovanni da Fiesole depicted Christ's descent into limbo. Some writers have noted that deification, perfection and glorification were what awaited those whom Christ raised up out of the pit, limbo, hades, or purgatory after their ascension up out of the lower regions.⁴⁷⁶² Another depiction of a ladder to paradise, depicts Christ up at the top, clasping the hand of a person about to be raised into paradise.⁴⁷⁶³ 1430–40, Fra's coronation of the Virgin, Christ is about to place a crown on her head.⁴⁷⁶⁴

Numerous art-works, 13-17th c., show Mary crowned, the dates to some of these are 1249, 1320-30, 1430s, & 1616, others shows her as if she is one of the members of the Godhead, for she is under going the coronation ceremony in heaven. One is 1453-4, another, 1516.⁴⁷⁶⁵

As discussed earlier, in martyrdom, the saints were considered to have been deified. Garments became one of the symbols for the resurrection and deification. In these later centuries, fragments of these concepts were passed down and preserved somewhat in the traditional ways in which some of the later Christians depicted martyrdom, and the ascent of the soul into heaven on a garment.⁴⁷⁶⁶ In some cases, the crowning ceremony in the after life, also includes the saints or martyrs as being clothed in a royal robe, or a garment, or investment of some kind.⁴⁷⁶⁷

1463–1494, Giovanni Pico della Mirandola, a Renaissance philosopher, known for his Oratio de hominis dignitate, (Oration on the Dignity of Man), presents deification themes of his own, with human being called the "intimate of the gods," men and women too, are "unaware of the body and confined to the inner reaches of the mind.... neither an earthly nor a heavenly being; he is more reverend divinity vested with human flesh." These seeds of divinity were rooted in a god-like capacity to reason.⁴⁷⁶⁸

1-2-1480, what fragments of possible deification themes just might have been retained, to a certain degree, if any, in the Friar Hernando de Talavera's comments to Isabella, Queen Isabella of Castile (1451–1504), reigned: 1474–1504? The Queen was to set a high standard of moral-example: "Regard the level to which you were born, Your Majesty, and why you were placed at the peak of honors," he said. "You must aspire to perfection in your position. If you are Queen, you ought to have a model and an inspiration to your subjects in the service of God."⁴⁷⁶⁹

1494, in The Ladder of Perfection, by Walter Hilton, an English Mystic, we read about how monks believed that they were to become like the trinity in their quest for moral Christian perfection. Thus, a case where the earlier centuries of controversy over the Godhead &

Christological issues influenced later versions of deification: "The third grade unites the two previous ones, and knows and loves God perfectly; the soul experiences an ecstatic union with God, and is conformed to the likeness of the Trinity." Further on we read: "Humility and charity will not only fashion us to the likeness of his humanity, but 'at length transform us to the true likeness of Jesus in his Godhead'."⁴⁷⁷⁰ There is also reference to being restored to the likeness⁴⁷⁷¹ of the Trinity, and the "likeness of Christ."⁴⁷⁷² "Meanwhile the soul is mounting the spiritual ladder rung by rung until it reaches perfection."⁴⁷⁷²

"I do not say that you may in this life recover such entire and perfect purity and innocence, knowledge and love of God, as you had at first or shall have in the life to come. . . . But if you may not entirely overcome them, strive to reduce them somewhat, and come as near to purity of soul as you can."⁴⁷⁷³ Speaking of the deified, he wrote: "This glory is incomparably greater than all the glories of this world, and if you could see it, you would not exchange it for all the glory of the world even if you could enjoy it without sin. . . ."⁴⁷⁷⁴ Good works was part of the quest toward moral Christian perfection too, for those who do them will eventually be "restored to the likeness of God."⁴⁷⁷⁵ The righteous soul "will view humanity in the Person of Jesus, exalted above the angels and united to the Godhead. . . . Man's body also will be glorified, for it will receive the precious gift of immortality with all its blessings." God has predestined a certain number of souls to salvation, for he "reserved the perfect reformation of man's soul until the Last Day."⁴⁷⁷⁶ "Dear friends, while we live on earth we are the sons of God, for we are restored to His likeness by faith in Christ: but what we shall be is not yet revealed, and remains unknown. But we know for certain that when our Lord shall appear at the Last Day, we shall appear with Him, and be like Him in everlasting joy." (1 John 3:2).⁴⁷⁷⁷ Perfection can only be attained by constant effort & by purification of the desires.⁴⁷⁷⁸

In Russian Illumination Manuscripts, the first third of the 15th century: A ladder to paradise, depicts Christ at the top, clasping the hand of a person about to be raised into paradise.⁴⁷⁷⁹ 16TH CENTURY: Before the Reformation got really started by Martin Luther, the Dominican friar, Johann (John) Tetzel, c. 1464–1519), who traveling about, gave some elaborate sales pitches to scare people, & guilt-trip them into buying indulgences for themselves & their dead kin, "suffering" & frying in purgatory. He also may have blended in deification themes as an incentive to get contributions from his audiences. After descriptions of the pains of purgatory, he promised them if they pay, right away, their souls, & their dead relatives' & friends' souls suffering in purgatory, would get immediate relief & release. Going from being burnt black with flames & sins, to being purified, becoming spotless of sins, glorified as promised, as they become divine on their way towards the gates of paradise! So it seems that some of Tetzel's sermons threw in the incentives of paying indulgences for a two for the price of one type deal, for their dead relatives, & themselves! For not only would the living be able to go right to paradise, & escape the torments, but their dead relatives were going to experience immediate relief! But then, experience the promised glory, deification, that was going to also be their rewards for being cleansed of all sins & taken over into paradise.

Tetzel: "'Won't you part with even a farthing to buy this letter? It won't bring you money but rather a divine and immortal soul, whole and secure in the Kingdom of Heaven."⁴⁷⁸⁰ Indulgence would restore them "...to that innocence and purity which you possessed at baptism... so that when you die the gates of punishment shall be shut, and the gates of the paradise of delight shall be opened..."⁴⁷⁸¹ In another sermon, Tetzel: "Listen now, God and St. Peter call you. Consider the salvation of your souls and those of your loved ones departed.... Will you let us lie here in flames? will you delay our promised glory?..."⁴⁷⁸² (He then gives the final jingle). From "Instructions" given to those who were to proclaim indulgences in Germany, amongst other promises, the contributors would be remitted of all their sins and the pains of purgatory, "completely blotted out".⁴⁷⁸³ In other areas of early to later Christianity, deification themes are sometimes connected with souls being released from the pit, the underworld, & in the post-descent into hades, resurrection, Anastasis.⁴⁷⁸⁴

John Calvin, 1509-1564, rejected the practices of the different monks' who sought to work their way towards moral perfection, for he said that: "No moral achievement can ever give any claim upon God, and no ascending of the ladder of the chain of being can ever unite man with God and make him into God. The very notion of the deification of humanity was to Calvin blasphemous."⁴⁷⁸⁵ Calvin must have known of the numerous depictions of monks ascending up towards deification, while ascending ladders of Christ like traits. But while Calvin, as a Reformer, rejected Catholic versions of deification, he may have had his own Augustine influenced Protestant version, that included man's depravity & the doctrine of predestination: God created mankind pure & holy, but with free-will mankind sinned, like Adam, who became a slave to sin, & lost his freedom. As did also the whole human race, they fell with him, & is justified condemned to everlasting death. But, God in his sovereign mercy, elects part of this mass of corruption to everlasting life. (Only the predestined will be perfected & gain everlasting life). This even without moral merit, God converts the elect (the predestined) "...by irresistible grace, justifies, sanctifies, and perfects them, and thus displays in them the riches of His grace; while in His inscrutable, yet just and adorable counsel, He leaves the rest of mankind in their inherited state of condemnation, and reveals in the everlasting punishment of the wicked the glory of his awful justice."⁴⁷⁸⁶

Another depictions dates back to the first half of the 16th century A.D., & it shows the Virgin Mary with the Christ child seated on a throne surrounded by angels, etc. Another portion shows what seems to be a heavenly prayer circle of saints around Mary and the Christ child. This icon consists of scenes that correspond "to a verse from the hymn "Glory unto Thee," dedicated to the Virgin."⁴⁷⁸⁷

1560s, in the chapel of the Assembly of the Virgin in the Cathedral of the Annunciation, Moscow Russia, is a depiction of the "Virgin and Child in the "circles" of glory", the lower portion shows groups of people, some of which depict "monks praising the Virgin."⁴⁷⁸⁸

1589, another depicts "the Virgin Enthroned with the Child".⁴⁷⁹⁰

17TH CENTURY: 1614–1687, Henry More, poet, Cambridge Platonist, influenced by Platonic & Hellenistic deification & preexistence themes, blends Plato in with Christian deification concepts. 2 Peter & Plato's counsel how "we ought to fly away from earth... to become like God," More is reported to have a version of return to glory theme, this mixes preexistence themes with deification themes, in that there is the hope of a return to pristine purity, to attain a state of moral perfection, & thus reflect & resemble the glory of the soul's Creator. This is the task of the soul on earth, "the perfecting of the Humane nature by participation of the divine."⁴⁷⁹¹

1674, John Milton, in Paradise Lost, though he wrote of pre-existence themes, also may have echoed some of the world views of his time, that rejected many deification themes. Some, like he seems to do, is attributed the thought of “becoming gods,” to what Satan sought after, when he tried to take over God’s throne for himself, & which resulted in him being thrust out of heaven & falling down to become a fallen angel & demonified “god,” or at least the Prince of Darkness that reigns in hell. Whatever might be the case with Milton, he wrote: “Man hath offended the majesty of God by aspiring to Godhead.” Milton also has Satan presenting the argument for godhood in a dream to Eve, claiming that the divine pursuit is contrary to God’s plan. “Forbidden here, it seems, as only fit[.] For gods, yet able to make gods of men!”⁴⁷⁹²

1609–1683, Benjamin Whichcote, British Establishment, Puritan divine, Provost of King’s College, Cambridge, leader of Cambridge Platonists. He with other Platonists at Cambridge, promoted a type of Hellenic idea of deification, injecting into Christian thought humanistic blends with neo-platonic influences in their versions of deification. “Do not stumble at the use of the Word [deification],” writes Whichcote in a sermon devoted on the topic. “For, we have Authority for the use of it, Scripture. 2 Pet. 1.4. Being made Partakers of the Divine Nature; which is in effect our Deification.”⁴⁷⁹³

1617–1688, Ralph Cudworth, English classicist, theologian & philosopher, a leading figure among the Cambridge Platonists, also promoted Hellenic deification ideas inserting a blend of Christianity, citing Athanasius: “God was therefore incarnated and made man, that he might Deifie us.” To these Cambridge Platonists, then, deification and human preexistence were mutually reinforcing, if equally heretical, notions.⁴⁷⁹⁴

17TH– 19TH CENTURIES A.D.: As mentioned earlier, many ascension into heaven depictions seem to have preserved in some cases some aspects of the doctrine of deification. During these later centuries, as earlier, artists depicted hand clasping rites of passage, heavenly coronations, investments, crownings, enthronements, and the glorifications of the different saints, martyrs, and the ascending souls into heaven. The basic concepts, and doctrinal roots for many of these go back to the early Christian mysteries and the doctrine of deification.⁴⁷⁹⁵ Though these aspects of deification were still visible in some areas of Christendom, in other areas the doctrine had almost faded out of the picture, or was lost, or was bitterly rejected.

19TH CENTURY: In some areas of England and in Rome, the Virgin Mary was still believed to have been deified, and raised up to divine rank even to the point where she was still being worshiped as a partaker of the Godhead. In December 1854, “bishops from all parts of Christendom, and representatives from the ends of the earth, met in Rome; and with only four dissentient voices, it was decreed that Mary, the mother of God,... should henceforth be worshipped as the Immaculate Virgin, “conceived and born without sin.”⁴⁷⁹⁶

1867–1939, Walter Leslie Wilmschurst, mason & mystic, presents a later version of moral perfection & deification as it was becoming more & more fraternal in the symbolism of fraternities of Freemasonry. The symbols & types of Freemasonry were about self-perfecting through putting off the old dark traits, like old clothing, & putting on white vestments, symbolic of purity, & advancing towards moral perfection & deification. Each advancement in the different degrees or levels of Freemasonry had visible symbols, clothing, & steps upwards towards becoming more God-like. Advancing meant that the initiate had to also get rid of negative characteristics in their own life, & the old garment themes of historic Christian mysteries, & other mystery religions were also handed down in the fraternal

Orders of Freemasonry. Thus, removing clothing were types of taking off bad habits, worldly thoughts, & other black or dark traits, that would keep them from advancing up the stair way, or ladder towards the path of light. Or the whiteness of having become clean, symbolic of putting on purity, perfection & the realization of their own divine potential. Like in early to later Christian mysteries, they were to symbolically die as to the old man of sin, die as to darkness, blackness of negative traits, & advance step by step towards their new life in living in the light, & being guided by the light, going through self purification to whitened themselves. Thus, the dying & resurrecting types, & the descent into the coffin of death, symbolic of dying, as to negative traits of darkness to be resurrected, raised to the rays of light from the dark west to the light east in having transformed to being a better, more purified-person. White & black checker squares, were like the two ways in historic Christianity, the broad road, or the narrow path. The dark left-hand path that demonizes, while the white bright path leads toward purification, perfection & divinity. All the building tools of masonry were types of building the soul from the rough materials towards building a temple of perfection in character. Like in ladders to heaven in early Christianity, with hand & wrist grips done at the top, thus reaching moral Christian perfection. So also in Freemasonry, the step by step towards more love, kindness, selflessness, purification, enlightenment, self-discipline, symbolical cleansing, stripping of negative traits, becoming stainless, & having clean hands, so as to not symbolically stain the white clothing, & white gloves to be gripped in different ways. To also learn to have control of the mind, clean thoughts, etc., these were all like each rung in the ladder of Christ like traits, or steps along the right-hand path, & the path of light that led towards the ultimate knowledge, the secrets of the mysteries of the ages, a Master Mason’s evolution forwards, to be transformed degree by degree to self-perfecting more god-like qualities. Because it was by choosing freely, rather than by force, it was self-perfecting, choosing the light over the dark. So as they advanced degree by degree, they learn more about the genuine secrets, the true knowledge of themselves, the “conscious realization of our divine potentialities.” Like the old early Christian mystery types in color symbolism, & light & dark symbolism, in Freemasonry, the East is where the light comes from, the West is darkness from which they travel from to get to the East, or from darkness to light. The old cryptic symbolism of graves, death, dying & descent & resurrection types in the early Christian mysteries, is here too in Freemasonry. Dramatized like old mystery plays, with ceremonial & symbolical dying as to the old ways of sin, putting off the old man of sin to be born innocent like a child to a new life of positive innocent purity & a fresh start, being raised with the white gloves, to the resurrection of purity, perfection & cleanliness, for no unclean thing had advance further unless they symbolically die as to all the black negative traits of the former ways. Those dark ways were buried, stripped away to then be clothed in white purity, such as the white garment, like in the early Christian mysteries. Plus, the white lamb skin apron, all symbolic, like with the white gloves & hand grips of being raised from symbolical death to the East & light side of one’s own character that has been purified, with whiter desires, whiter thoughts, whiter actions, having stripped away the blacker traits that demonize the soul. “In theological language, God has become man, and man has become divinized, in virtue of this descent and union.... A Master Mason, then, in the full sense of the term, is no longer an ordinary man, but a divinized man; in whom the Universal and the personal consciousness have come into union. Obviously the quality of life and consciousness of such an one must differ vastly from that of other men.” With Masons of old having been builders, the Freemasons then are soul-builders with the tools of their trade, symbolic of helping to shape, measure & transforms the soul to exactness, perfection & deification. Their ceremonies are like in Christendom, ceremonies of exaltation.⁴⁷⁹⁷

Many aspects of the early to later Christian mysteries were fraternalized in Freemasonry, as noted, the black & white garment color symbolism, representing the doctrine of the two ways, black or evil choices demonizes, while white or good choices advances towards deification. Thus, the black & white shirts, with black ties, or black suits. The black & white checkered floor designs. Both color symbolisms suggests that freemasonry has kept in remembrance the old doctrine of the 2 ways, the 2 extremes, deification (white), in contrast to demonification (black).⁴⁷⁹⁸ Knocking on the door in Freemasonry, reminds us of the door to door hand clasping rites of passage of Christ at the doors or gates to heaven, & also at the doors or gates to hell, hades, limbo, purgatory. The door knocking during Easter, Pascha, or Paschal candle lighting ceremony, the rapping on the doors symbolizing Christ's Descent into Hades to bring in the light, (lit candles representing the light of Christ), to light up the dark underworld, & whole world.⁴⁷⁹⁹ Or souls being greeted, with hand & wrist grips, at the doors or gates to paradise by Peter, angels, & Christ. Also the later Christian door knocking, during Easter candle lighting dramas. The doors or gates knocking of Christ, or the Christ-child, guised at times in different guises during Christ's world wide treks, on down to door to door knocking Christmas traditions. Many of which include hand & wrist clasping greetings, already mentioned earlier. Freemasons' ladders & steps up stairs are like the ladders & stairs towards Christian moral perfection, with hand & wrist clasping at the top. Those at the top are pulled into safety away from the dark or black color demons attempting to get the monks, or those ascending to fall off to the temptations seen below. Freemasonry seems to have kept in remembrance, these same types. Some art work of freemasonry show a ladder leaned up against a pillar, which in early to later Christian art is where hand & wrist grasping, & hand symbols are also found, such as on pillars that support curtains with angle symbols on them, plus, at tops of ladders, & hand clasping around pillars. Symbolic of covenant making, realm travels, deification, & safety for the ascending souls.⁴⁸⁰⁰ Freemasonry often vilified by faulty conspiracy theorists, like in early anti-Christian attacks, hardly credit the Masons for their hospitality & good works. Their charitable acts of feeding the poor, hospitals, other selfless acts. The guiding hand clasp in guiding the initiates in Masonic rituals is like the hand & wrist clasping angelic guides in early to later Christian art works of souls being raised & guided into paradise, or the heavenly temple. Oaths on the bible, or holy book is like the oaths taken in early to later Christianity, where one hand is raised, such as the right hand on the bible, & the left is raised up to swear an oath, or vow. The up-lifted hand gestures reminds us of thousands of art works of early to later Christian orants, praying with up-lifted hands. Symbols on white garments in Masonry are like the symbols to remind the initiated Christian to do good, angle symbols, etc., on early Christian robes & curtains. The pillars in Masonry are like the pillars in early Christian art that include hand symbols & hand clasping around the pillars. Thousands of stone carvings that show different types of hand & wrist grips, such as Christ's descent into hell, etc., to free the captive souls there, to resurrect. Thousands of tomb or grave stone markers showing hand & wrist grasping, those seen in the cathedrals' stone works are like the stone mason works, which Freemasonry gets its name from, working with stone. The later Masons & Freemasons learned the different hand & wrist clasping by carving them in stone for the different cathedrals, & other stone works all over historic Christendom. The same with works showing the Anastasis, or resurrection, the hand & wrist grasping in iconography symbolic of Adam & humanity being raised by Christ to deification. Thus, it's no wonder that these death, descent & resurrection types, & rituals, & advancing by degrees towards deification, all these symbolical types were later fraternalized in Masonry. The white gloves that the clergy wear, with symbols on them in the middle of the hand, & the hand & wrist grasping they do are like those done in Freemasonry. The hand symbols, where just the hand of God extends down to give the knowledge, or to clasp the hands or wrists of those ascending into heaven in early to later Christian art is like the hand & wrist clasping done in Freemasonry. Washing, anointing & putting on white garments in historic Christendom, are like the purification rituals & symbols in Freemasonry. The hand & wrist grasping & apron symbols in historic Christian creation of Adam & Eve art works, & lectures on the Mysteries by Cyril of Jerusalem, Gregory of Nyssa, etc., are like the white aprons & hand & wrist grasping done in Freemasonry. The symbolism for the initiates to do good, to advanced towards perfection & deification are common too. Hand clasps & hand clasping rings in wedding settings in historic Christendom, are like those in Freemasonry.⁴⁸⁰¹

1893, As mentioned earlier, many ascension into heaven depictions seem to have preserved in some cases some aspects of the doctrine of deification. This may have also been the case in even later depictions too. For Bailey upon commenting on a painting of Christ's ascension into heaven, painted about 1893, by Uhde, Fritz von, says that Christ is depicted as reaching with one hand in blessing towards those whom he is about to leave behind, "while with the other he reaches up to clasp the Father's hand." Bailey also comments on the ascension as being "a parable of the infinite progression of man toward the divine".⁴⁸⁰²

20TH CENTURY: In 1954, the Roman Catholic scholar, Giovanni Papini noted and respected the idea of deification in Palms 82:6; John 10:34-35 & Matthew 5:48.⁴⁸⁰³

1956, the Christian scholar G. L. Prestige wrote that "the ancient Christians taught that the destiny of man was to become like God, and even to become deified."⁴⁸⁰⁴

1958, a monk at Downside Abbey, England named Dom Hubert Van Zeller, [born in Suez, Egypt] wrote, The Holy Rule which was based on the comments & writings of St. Benedict. He talks about the monk's quest for Christian perfection.⁴⁸⁰⁵

1940s–early 1960s, Clive Staples Lewis, (1898-1963), a famous Christian writer, seems to also have believed in the concept that humans can one day become gods and goddesses. "It is a serious thing to live in a society of possible gods and goddesses, to remember that the dullest and most uninteresting person you can talk to may one day be a creature which, if you sa[w] it now, you would be strongly tempted to worship."⁴⁸⁰⁶

Lewis, in The Joyful Christian, again testifies, that God is serious about the deification process for men & women! "Make no mistake," He, our Lord says, "if you let Me, I will make you perfect. The moment you put yourself in My hands, that is what you are in for. Nothing less, or other, than that." He points out that the Lord is not going to force us, but allows free will in choosing to let him deify us. Moreover, that the Lord will work on us, if we let him, until we are "literally perfect," until the Father can also say, as he did to the Lord, that He is well pleased with us too. Thus, the goal that the Lord is guiding us towards is "absolute perfection."⁴⁸⁰⁷

Lewis also, upon commenting on Matt.5:48, about Christ saying that we should 'be perfect,' even as our Father in heaven is 'perfect,' says that this is no idealistic gas, nor a command to do the impossible. He also notes the wording of scriptures the Christ cites, that we were "gods," & that He would make good His words. This god-making process might take a long time, & in part, very painful, but that's what we're in for. "Those who put themselves in His hands will become perfect, as He is perfect – perfect in love, wisdom, joy, beauty, and immortality."⁴⁸⁰⁸

To summarize some of the other points Lewis makes, he also testified that Christ became a man in order to spread around his kind of life, & that every Christian is to become a little Christ: "THE SON OF GOD became a man to enable men to become sons of God." (This includes deifying the women too). The 2nd person in God, the Son, became human Himself, was born into the world, as an actual fetus inside a Women's body, was an actual baby that grew to be a man, a real man of particular height, hair color, speaking language, & weight. Even though before this he was the Eternal Being that had created the whole universe, & knows everything. To further summarize, Lewis tells how Christ became a man so that he could be about the business of "infecting" us with a "good infection," that would, if we would but catch it from him, make it so that we would live the kind of life he has. By becoming a man, Christ did many things for us that we couldn't do ourselves, such as the atonement, dying for our sins, defeating death, etc. But in Christ becoming a man, even the Son of God, who is a man, just like you men, and God, just like His Father, we should be paying attention to what our consciences are telling us. For they, tell us what to do, & what not to do, if we are seriously dressing up as Christ, & seriously trying to be like Christ. He also wrote about how the Christian is to "put on" Christ. (Fragments of earlier garment types? Col.2:9-17, 3:1-15, Eph.4:22-24, 5:25-27, 6:10-19, 1 Pet.5:5-10, Rom. 13:14). Lewis goes on with this deification process going on, how that this real Son of God, at our side, is beginning to turn us into the same kind of thing as Himself, & inject His kind of life & thought. Further on, being "born again," & "putting on Christ," as the New Testament says, & Christ "being formed in us," we are arriving to "have the mind of Christ." Christ, the real Person, a living Man, still as much a man as you, & still as much God as He was when he created the world, changes the old self, or "killing the old natural self in you and replacing it with the kind of self He [Christ] has." (Compare: 1 Cor. 15:52-57, 2 Cor. 3:18, 4:10-11, 5:1-17, Gal.3:26-29, Eph. 4:22-25). Further on, Lewis again repeats the point that Christ became a man, because the higher being can raise the lower up to his higher level. (This is what Christ did).⁴⁸⁰⁹ For despite our present negative traits of different types, God sees our potential, & looks upon us as if we were a little Christ, & Christ stands besides us to turn us into one. Still further on, Lewis again how Christ talked about that we are to "Be perfect," & that this was no idealistic gas, but that he meant it! How that Christ exists for nothing else but to draw men into Christ, to make them little Christs. Further on Lewis expounds more on the perfecting theme in his deification discussion, & would have us to realize that perfection, nothing less, is what is in store for the Christians. Moreover, that God guides us to it. Further on, Lewis testified that the command to be perfect is not idealistic gas, nor is it impossible, for He is going to make us into creatures that can obey that command. "He said (in the Bible) that we were "gods" and He is going to make good His words. If we let Him— for we can prevent Him, if we choose— He will make the feeblest and filthiest of us into a god or goddess, dazzling, radiant, immortal creatures, pulsating all through with such energy and joy and wisdom and love as we cannot now imagine, a bright stainless mirror which reflects back to God perfectly (though of course, on a smaller scale) His own boundless power and delight and goodness. The process will be long and in part very painful; but that is what we are in for. Nothing less. He meant what He said." In fact, Lewis also notes that this deification process: "The job will not be completed in his life: but He means to get us as far as possible before death."⁴⁸¹⁰

Lewis also wrote how God didn't become one of us, just to die, be tortured & to produce candidates for Limbo, 'failed' humans. Instead, God wanted to "make Saints; gods; things like Himself."⁴⁸¹¹

1974, Jaroslav Pelikan wrote that salvation was defined as deification and this was a theme of the Christian faith and it is a biblical message, as mentioned in a number of passages.⁴⁸¹²

1976, John Ferguson notes that some Christians cite from John 17:21 & 2 Peter 1:4 in support for deification.⁴⁸¹³

1978, a Protestant scholar, Cleveland Cox, and editor of the American edition of The Ante-Nicene Fathers, says this about a statement by the early Christian Hippolytus [170-236 A.D.], who said that through Christ men could be deified and "become God." He wrote that this startling expression is justified by such texts as 2 Peter 1:4 compared with John 17:22-23, & Revelation 3:21. Thus Christ overcomes the Tempter (Genesis 3:5) and gives more than was promised by the "Fathers of Lies." (TANF) Grand Rapids: Eerdmans 1978, 5:153).

Ernst Benz, German Protestant church historian, noted the similarities between Joseph Smith's doctrine of progressive deification & that of the early Christians.⁴⁸¹⁴

1978, George G. Ritchie wrote in Return From Tomorrow, how he saw in his near death experience, during world war 2, a city of light where bright beings of light & love lived in the after life. These glorious beings were like unto Jesus Christ who had been his guide during his experience. To his surprise he noted that these beings seemed to have become like unto Christ in glory and perfect love.⁴⁸¹⁵ On "K-talk" (KTKK 630 AM Radio, Utah), Nov. 12, 1989, Martin Tanner as the talk show host for "Religion On the Line", interviewed George G. Ritchie. Ritchie said that he could discern & see the beings in this city of light & love. And "the most amazing thing was that they were glowing in the light that they admitted, like unto this being [the Christ]. I think that for the first time, I then understood what the Bible says when Jesus made the statement: I'm the first fruit of men that all could follow."

In his book: My Life After Dying, Ritchie wrote how Christ "...showed me in the highest realm, beings who were growing like Him in appearance. We forget that He pointed out our ultimate destiny when He said, "You must become whole (wrongly translated perfect), even as your Heavenly Father is whole." (Matt.5:48).

He also wrote: "Our Father, God, showed us that there is an ultimate destiny for all who would surrender to His will & leadership, as Jesus did. Even physical death couldn't stop this destiny, which leads to a realm where there exist truth, love, & life on a level that we don't comprehend until we have seen it." Ritchie also wrote: "It is my belief, both from living in this life & from seeing the realms which He [the Christ] showed me existed in life after death, that He incarnated to teach & show us what man could become when reunited with Our Older Brother & our Father.... Jesus came teaching good news. Quoting Psalms 82:6, He asked, "Is it not written in your law, I said, you are Gods?" And did he not teach us to pray "Our Father" & tell us that He was our older brother? If God is our Father & Jesus is our brother, then we also have to be gods & not lowly worms. St. Irenaeus stated that God became a human being in order that human beings might become God. I would chance what he said only to the degree that I would say that Jesus showed us the God that GOD, OUR FATHER created us to be....The churches have not explained our potential as gods, with our God-given creative power, & how necessary it is for us to be under the guidance of the Holy Spirit of God when we use this power. Instead they lead us to believe that the church was given the authority to decide who was going to heaven, & that those who didn't join their particular denomination were going to hell. This is incongruous with the teachings of Jesus, The Christ, who told us the tale of the prodigal son not only to help us understand that the Prodigal Son is the cosmic tale of each & every human being. We have all forgotten that we are sons & daughters of the most high God; that our spiritual side, the soul of man, needs to return & have total fellowship with the Father." Ritchie suggests that our "Ultimate Destiny," [is] "to reach out & begin to communicate with The Christ, so that He can lead us back to being alive: i.e. into that perfect union with our Father, & let Him pass His love & thinking through us to one another. We must come to know the living resurrected Christ within us, & depend on passing his love to one another & to God, because our human love isn't enough....I can say from the Risen Christ's having conducted me through 4 realms of life after death, that in the highest realm, He showed me beings who had followed his teachings & were now resurrected into spiritual beings who were like Him when it comes to the love, light & life they put forth."

Ritchie: Christ set the example for us to follow, & Christ showed us what could happen to us if we would follow after His way of life. "He surrendered his will to God our Father, who, He showed, is pure LOVE. Our destiny is to do the same thing in order to survive & change our world. His commission wasn't just to teach & show us how to reach the highest realm, heaven, but rather how to create heaven on earth."⁴⁸¹⁶

1980, Father Richard P. McBrien wrote a number of works on Catholicism. He "states that a fundamental principle of orthodoxy in the patristic period was to see "the history of the universe as the history of divinization and salvation." As a result the Fathers concluded, that "because the Spirit is truly God, we are truly divinized by the presence of the Spirit."⁴⁸¹⁷

During 1983, & in The Westminster Dictionary of Christian Theology, it says that deification is to be the goal of every Christian. We were made in God's image as the Bible says and it is possible for us "to become like God, to become deified, to become god by grace."⁴⁸¹⁸ Robert Tilton, a Texas evangelist said that man is "a God kind of creature. Originally you were designed to be as a god in this world." His own particular concept of deification was mentioned later and rejected by other Christian scholars during the 1990s on The Bible Answer Man radio show.⁴⁸¹⁹

In 1984, Georgios I. Mantazaridis, a Greek Orthodox scholar suggests that the idea of deification has been the innermost longing for the human family even from the beginning. "Adam, in attempting to appropriate it by transgressing God's command, failed, and in place of deification met with corruption and death. The love of God, however, through His Son's incarnation, restored to man the possibility of deification: "Adam of old was deceived wanting to be God he failed to be God. God becomes man, so that he may make Adam god."⁴⁸²⁰

1985, Atheist, until after his Near Death Experience, later Rev. Howard Storm, learned that the human family is not alone in the universe, & that those who follow Christ & God will eventually become deified gods & goddesses, co-creators with the gods throughout the universe. That we can either regress down to becoming like the demons, or can choose to progress & become like the angels, on different levels, who are progressing to become like the gods. Thus, the two extremes, like also taught in earlier Christianity.

Clement presents a few things about the two extremes,-- deification, & what I have called "demonification." "...For so is the truth, that perfection is with the Lord, who is always teaching, and infancy and childishness with us, who are always learning. Thus prophecy hath honoured perfection, by applying to it the appellation man...." [On the other hand, in fact, that very expression "on the other hand" is an expression that we now use to speak of things that are opposite from each other. Such an expression may have it's roots in the doctrine of the "two ways," the 2 extremes, or "the right hand path" and it's opposite, "the left hand path." What ever might be the case.] In the case with the ancient writings of Clement, Clement wrote that the devil is called a man who is "...perfect in wickedness. And the Lord is called man, because He is perfect in righteousness...." ANF 2:213, & 227.

Clement showed the 2 extremes which are on opposite sides of the scale from each other. The devil being so wicked that he has retrogressed to the most negative side of the scale, to the complete opposite end away from righteousness into complete & total wicked perfection. While on the complete extreme & opposite side, on the positive side, the Lord is perfect in righteousness. One of Clement's students, Origen, would later also write about the 2 extremes ANF 4:593-4.

Howard Storm, a former atheist, learned, based on his NDE, that the same sort of divine ultimate destiny for the human family is with in our reach, for he said that: "This world is full of divine beings becoming more divine moment by moment day by day. This is like a huge garden full of divine beings, & that's what we are. We're divine & we're growing up; & we're growing up into realizing our divinity." In a K-Talk interview, July 15, 1990, Howard Storms presented the concept that many early Christians have taught, & that is deification, (or become a divine being,-- becoming gods or goddess. But also he seemed to suggest another opposite extreme, & negative path way that a person could go down, in opposition to the other extreme, or path way towards light, love & deification. The retrogression pathway towards demonification, (becoming like unto a demonic being of hate & sin). This is another concept that we find in early Christianity, such as in the writings of Clement of Alexandria, & Origen Against Celsus, ANF, 2:451, 502, 573-4, 584-5, & 4:434, 475, 509, 547, 551, 592-595, 641, & 646-7.

Howard Storm says that one of the things that he had learned during his Near Death Experience was that the human family does not stay stationary. For you can go towards one extreme or the other. The human family can either advance towards becoming like unto the angelic beings, & even towards becoming like God. Or they can regress down towards becoming like unto the demonic beings that had tormented him in the darkness. The beings in the fog & darkness seemed to be "trapped" & where retrogressing away from any light & love that they once might have known at some time in their existences. Thus, the human family can go towards one extreme or the other, & may be found at different points between these two extremes, either progressing or retrogressing.

Storm responded to the following question: "(Question: Before the angel of light came to you, who were the beings, & why were they nasty & mean?) I'm quite sure that they were people who had died, & they were very loveless & cruel, & they were living in a spiritual realm. They didn't want to have anything to do with the light. They didn't want to believe in God. God's not going to force Himself on anyone who doesn't want Him. He's not going to make you love Him. If a person is cruel & loveless throughout this world & they die & go in the spiritual, where are they going to go? Are they just suddenly going to be transformed into loving, higher angelic beings? No, that's not who they are, so they get to do what? They get to live that out." [Until they outgrow it, or get sick of their own hate]. God allows cruel people to live in a world of darkness & cruelty & separateness from God, & theoretically sometimes they are going to outgrow that. How long will that take? How long does God have? They can be there a billion, trillion, zillion years. He'll wait. And the minute they say, "I'm tired of hurt. I'm tired of hate. I'm tired of loneliness. I need someone to love me." God is going to be right there with an angelic being of light whose going to pick him up in his arms, just like he did me, & take him home.... I don't know about God finding someone so unworthy that He would have to never let him back. That's inconceivable. It doesn't fit into my system. It's possible, because God can do whatever He wants us to do. But I think sooner or later, everyone's going to find their way back to Him -- hopefully. Someone told me everyone will get to Heaven, some kicking & screaming, but everyone will get to Heaven." (See also: Psalm 3:3, 14:1-5, 16:8-11, 82:1-8, 88:2-18; Isa.24:21-22; 42:6-7; 49:8-9. Matt.6:19-24, 7:13-14; Acts 9:3-7, 7:55-60).

"(Question "What did they tell you about the 2nd Coming of Christ?") Storm said that he was not religious enough at the time of his experience, & didn't get to that question. However, "...I've done a lot of exploration since then & what I'm very convinced of is that we are all called to become sons of God, not just children of God. Not lesser, but sons & daughters, co-equal with God, to be truly like God. God will still be God, but we will be like God & with God, & with Christ, meaning that Anointed One. As Jesus of Nazareth became both fully human & fully divine, we're all called to follow in His footsteps. The Second Coming is when we all become Christlike--not to be silly...I don't mean that we have to wear sandals & have beards & stuff like that. What we're supposed to do is become as fully human & fully divine as we can possibly be...." [Mr. Storm seems to believe that the 2nd coming was not so much a physical take over of the world, by Christ.] "...What He invited us to do was become like Him, to have that kind of communion, or oneness with God. To be Biblical, you could say, "Father, not my will, but Thy will"--& know the will of the Father. Jesus could talk to God & God talked to him, & he heard what He was saying. I'm trying to be like that, but sometimes I'm not. My ambition is to more & more be like that. That's a subject I feel really strongly about. To hope someone else will do it for you: "Send the magic men down & make it all right for me & absolve me of all responsibility." They want us to do it. They want us to become Christ-like...."

He was asked the question: "What do angels do all day?" He answered: "...The universe is constantly being created new, & I don't mean just quantitatively, but more importantly, qualitatively. In other words, the reason why you exist & why I exist is because nothing like it has ever been before.... The thing that God needs to grow & nurture slowly is more things with their unique will, with their own unique identities. The way that God increases His Beingness & His creativity qualitatively is by increasing experience. So what does He do? He multiplies the creative spirits in new & ever-changing forms all over the whole universe. That's what we are. When we go into this reality of this existence, which is what happens when we die... Although this is like reality, it is like a little playpen-reality & I'm talking about the real reality, & we begin to see the real nature of time & space & our being in relationship to all other beings. We can really, really participate in that creation, & like on a lower echelon type of job, there is learning, participation, observation, & experience. Like, for example, you might become an angel who comes back to a world like this world & just watches & learns & experiences what's going on. A greater responsibility would be an angel who had the power to discern when to intervene & when not to intervene, how to generally nourish this person & nudge that person, & allow that person to go down the slippery slope into chaos, if that's what they need to do. Some people need to feel chaos for awhile, so that they can ultimately evolve out of it. You've got to know when to let a person destroy himself & when to keep a person from doing it. That takes a real strong sense of discernment, & that would be a higher power. On another level, on another higher echelon, you might be an angel watching over a whole planetary system. On a higher level you might be an angel watching over a whole dimension. On an even higher level you may be creating new dimensions & new realities- anything you can comprehend. The higher you go in your evolution, the more god-like you become. Going right back to Genesis, we were created in the image of God--that's what we are. Not in a physical sense, but that we are god-like & we were called to become like God & with God & one with God. In time we'll have a sense of what we were & who we were; we'll be nearer to God...."

Storm seems to suggest here what the Bible & many early Christians have shown. The doctrine of deification, becoming like god, & even progressing towards perfection & godhood. That's the ultimate end of the journey. The human family can become divine. Thus God & the other holy angelic beings gain fellowship with additional beings that have returned home. The heavenly beings of light & love would rather see us become more like them, or become truly & fully god-like & divine. Than they would in seeing us retrogress into becoming like unto the fallen angels, & the demonic beings. Many of the early to later Christian Fathers, & writers believed that deification would be the results of human family first having been created, then come into the bodies of flesh, then having grown & learned in those bodies to one day set them aside in death. Then to go on into other realms depending on how we had lived, whether it was good or evil. The righteous would, in the resurrection, they would be clothed in glorified bodies that shined as bright or like unto the sun. Like unto Christ's resurrected & glorified body. They would be receive the robes of righteousness & would be crowned & deified as gods or goddesses under the other divine beings. They would not take over the Most High God's position, nor that of Christ's, but they believed that they would become heirs with Christ & would share in His glory. And would thus have shown that they could be trusted, & were faithful in a few things, & thus they would be made ruler over many things. Even some Jewish writings talk about the deified as inheriting a number of worlds. Other ancient documents speak of the deified person being able to have their "seed" (descendants or children), scattered throughout the universe. Suggesting to us that the ancients may have believed they already had the answers for the purpose of life & the origins, & reasons for the creation of the universe. It was created for the purpose of being filled with the creations & children of the Gods of the deified souls. Or by those who had also passed through this school (or earth life), & had graduated to higher levels of intelligences, until they had even obtained godhood, or become divine beings. What a wonderful & glorious thought. I believe that deification is a true doctrine. And that it is possible for all those who follow Christ's example, to be deified.⁴⁸²¹

that was forgotten by too many modern Christians, though the beliefs of becoming gods, human divinization, theosis, was historic Christians' doctrine of salvation, that was part of first millennium Christianity. He goes on to cite Irenaeus, Polycarp, Athanasius of Alexandria, & others as examples. He concludes his thesis by noting that many modern Christians have departed from the early Christian beliefs of deification. Moreover, for their theological beliefs about salvation to not accommodate a doctrine of human divinization, they would be rejecting the heritage of the early Christian church, and will have departed from the faith of the 1st millennium Christianity.⁴⁸²²

LEGENDIZATION OF DEIFICATION IN LATER CENTURIES

153–193–217, Clement of Alexandria mentions a scripture that we don't have in our present day Bibles: "The saints of the Lord shall inherit the glory of God and His power."⁴⁸²³ If the saints of God shall inherit the glory of God, & his power, then, what type of glory, what type of power? What types of gifts of power did some of the saints throughout history, were known to have?

SAINTS' POWERS, GIFTS, ABILITIES, MIRACLES & DEIFICATION LORE: Numerous saints throughout Christendom's history, shows us what is believed is possible, or made possible through faith & divine powers at work. Some of these stories perhaps have been embellished as the legendization process tainted the stories with faith promoting aspects. The stories tell what is hoped for in the human family that progresses towards deification.

Powers over life & death?: The award for this one has to go to the wandering Christ-child, called in later centuries, Santa Claus, or Saint Claus, like in the Strand Magazine, Jan. 1891. This, you might remember is only after the doctrine of Christ's world wide treks had become fables about Santa Claus, making his annual frosty Christmas rounds.⁴⁸²⁴ Add to this the earlier lore, some created by early anti-Christians, about Christ's early childhood, his family's activities, which are from alleged sources & stories, & you'll get some alleged strange uses, & misuses of deification powers at work.⁴⁸²⁵ These tales were used to vilify Christ, & his family, & was hardly ever accepted by later Christians, as completely authentic. However, for the early critics, they were the types of tales that were spread to create a negative picture of Christ & his alleged abuses of his divine powers, which they claimed were demonic. They didn't ever give him credit for any good miracles he did, but vilified them, ignored them, or alleged that the good ones were done by the powers of the Beelzebub-devil, (Matt. 12:24, Luke 11:14–20). These early Childhood stories were used by some to try to fill in the gaps in Christ's life, but not all the gaps. There's the 17 missing years, when we last heard of Christ at 12 years old, to when he starts preaching at 30 years old. What was he doing during those years? Where did he go? What did he do? Who trained & taught him? Or was he out teaching & being taught? Is there any record of what happened beyond what's been claimed so far? As to the early Christ-child tales, they make him sound like he was not the mild-mannered youth, but somewhat mischievous, & almost even devilish, for he does things that one might expect a little demon of lore might do with their powers. Consequently in the Infancy Gospels, the Christ-child's super-boy powers have him sliding down sun beams, hanging water pitchers on sunbeams. Christ is thus a super-boy, like in the Smallville super-man movie series, where Clark Kent, as a child does some amazing things, to the point where different ones try to tempt him into making himself "a god," to the people of earth, rather than just a good hero, who still makes all kinds of human types of mistakes & thus knows he's limited in his powers & is not perfect in many different ways, but is trying hard to make a good difference in a world where many others are discovering they have their own gifts, & powers.⁴⁸²⁶

In the Christ-child's case, however, lore has him sometimes doing things that we might expect an immature child might do, when given special divine powers, perhaps too soon. However, he's credited for also doing good things with his powers, while in other cases not so much so. He mends things broken, fits pieces of wood together by blessing them. He's also a hard worker, in helping Joseph the carpenter. In Egypt, the young Jesus, at age three, brought a dead fish to life. At age 8, he went into a cave where a lioness had a pair of cubs, & at this everyone was terrified, but no harm came to him. Dragons obey him, & all the desert animals accompany them in their wanderings. Trees of an oasis bow to Mary, & water bursts forth at their feet. But lore says the Christ-child can wither away bullies on the spot, with a word. If the other kids, perhaps scared of his powers, don't want to play, he turns them into goats. His teachers, should they dare to scold him, or tweak his ear, they are struck blind, or dead, so he has powers over life & death, that often get him in trouble with the locals. The Christ-child always seems to out shine the knowledge levels of his teachers too. But, because of these deification powers at work, the family has to always move soon after the young Christ does something that gets him & his family noticed. After which those who start to fight against him, also start to spread scandal-stories about him & different members of the family, seeking to vilify his powers as not divine, but demonic. These stories they try to back up with evidences & witness statements, or documents, especially when he is reported to have killed someone, or learned magical tricks while in Egypt. Which, according to rumors, start up & grow wilder in their tellings, especially when he becomes the target of the envy of his fellows too, who alleged to have seen the Christ-child do all kinds of questionable feats of "magic."⁴⁸²⁷

Deification themes legendized, that of the use of deification powers, are seen in much later Christmas lore about what happens to different ones, different towns, or people, when the wandering Christ-child, disguised as a poor looking beggar, or other guises, is rejected by those who should have been practicing Christian-charity. Especially during the Christmas season, when it was the custom to be more charitable than during the other holiday seasons. In some of these cases, the Christ-child, (later Santa Claus, Christkindl), his/her legendized tales of deification powers over life & death, seem harsh, seem to have been misused, & unlike what we might expect Christ to do at times. But, again these are traditions, so what else might we expect? Thus, in the story about town in Holland, Been, the wandering Christ went in amongst them in the guise of a poor looking beggar. He's rejected by the wicked people there who wouldn't give him food or shelter. In thus not passing the test of charity, great waves covered the whole town. In that place, one can still hear, so the legend goes, the church bells ringing, from time to time, but they are muffled because they're still underwater.⁴⁸²⁸

The power to levitate, float & hover in the air: Some more notable Saints said to be able to do such things were: St Benedict Joseph Labre, St. Angela of Brescia, St. Antoinette of Florence, St. Arey, St. Peter Celestine, St. Colette, St. Margaret of Hungary, St. Stephen of Hungary, St. Mary of Egypt, St. Joseph Oriol, Bl. Bentivolio Buoni, St. Francis of Paola, St. John of St. Facond and St. Martin de Porres.⁴⁸²⁹

St. Joseph of Cupertino, 1603–1663, is said to be known for healing the sick, & other acts of devotion. "He stopped short of perfection, however, for he had a seemingly inability to stop himself levitating, which irritated his masters so much that they packed him off to obscure monasteries where no one would see him.”⁴⁸³⁰

Power to ward off evil things? Abbán móccu Corbmaic (d. 520?), also Eibbán or Moabba, is a saint in Irish tradition. In Italy, Abbán's saintly powers proved to be of much use in warding off any danger presented by men, monsters and supernatural phenomena. In Lives, Abbán can be seen demonstrating his powers, exercising special authority over rivers and seas.⁴⁸³¹

Powers to lift & set down mountains? 10th century, Pope Abraham of Alexandria, 62nd Pope of Alexandria & Patriarch of the See of St. Mark. 975. He is considered a Saint by the Coptic Orthodox Church, died 12-3-978. One time when Abraham celebrated mass and the multitude chanted after him kyrie layson (Coptic for "Lord have mercy"), they knelt down three times as the Pope made the sign of the cross with a sweeping gesture extending from one end of the mountain to the other. The mountain shook violently as if a strong earthquake had hit the land. Then it began moving upwards, every time the worshippers rose from their prayers, the mountain lifted itself upwards, then down when they knelt, three times.⁴⁸³²

Aided by a large serpent? Abuna Aregawi (also called Za-Mika'el 'Aragawi) was a sixth-century Syrian monk. According to legend, God provided a large snake to aid him in climbing the amba, or steep-sided mountain. This was so that he could build the Debre Damo monastery. When he came to the cliff, a great serpent appeared, & as St Michael stood by to give directions, the serpent folded Abba Arawi in his coils and drew him to the top of the mountain.⁴⁸³³

Miraculous modes of travel? The Apostles of Christ were said to be able to travel to the different areas of the world that they were sent to, and then also gather to be at the bed side of Mary, Christ's mother, when she died. The way they were gathered together from all over was, according to traditions, by miraculous modes of travel.⁴⁸³⁴

During the Middle Ages, different saints & holy martyrs were venerated, some having special privileges above others: 'O God, who as distinguished Thy chosen saints, George, etc., with special privileges before all others, that all those who in their need invoke their help, shall obtain the salutary fulfilment of their prayer, according to the promises of Thy grace.' So there had been a formal delegation of divine omnipotence.... [thus, the saints] seemed to be exercising divine power by virtue of a power of attorney.... The terrors of the plague called for more than one saintly protector; Saint Sebastian, Saint Roch, Saint Giles, Saint Christopher, Saint Valentine, Saint Adrian, were all honoured in this capacity by offices, processions and fraternities.”⁴⁸³⁵

18th century onwards, the fraternalizing of deification & perfection themes of early to later Christianity, in Freemasonry, has not only been vilified by some conspiracy theorists. But also praised by others that note the good that Freemasonry does in hospital settings, etc. The “bad” that good masons are accused of, & the alleged bad amongst some of them, or those that don't live up to the moral commitments & oaths to improve their character. These types of individual cases, as with many organizations, might give Freemasonry a bad name. At least in the minds of those who don't credit the good other Freemasons, & Mason Orders do. While other critics grudgingly acknowledge their good efforts, they then often turn around & vilify the different fraternal Orders as seeking to take over the whole world. But even some Masons themselves, have admitted that they've been infiltrated by those who do seek to use Freemasonry for their own political & conspiratorial gains, & thus warn against such factions in their ranks.⁴⁸³⁶

character building types: The 13th degree- Royal Arch of Solomon, represents & concerns the difficulty & hardships in their “striving for perfection.” Their building of different buildings, as types of building different positive (light, white), characteristics in their lives. This is in opposition & contrast to the negative (dark, black) traits, that they are to abandon. To also reject, get rid of in their changing, shaping, & building their moral own personal character, & the collective characters of their Order, as they all advance through the degrees towards moral & spiritual perfection. Different symbols remind them of how they are on a path towards “self-perfecting” qualities: White symbolic of being stainless, spotless, pure & clean. Ladders symbolic of being led upwards to the spiritual light towards Godlike virtue, & perfection. White lambskin aprons, purity & innocence. The black & white checkered floor, black suits & white shirts, symbolic of the 2 ways, the 2 extremes, for them to choose the ways of light (whiteness), not the dark (blackness), or negative traits. Thus, they are to follow the light (white) traits towards building their character towards becoming more God-like, perfected, & deified. Thus, there are symbols & types of purification, cleansing, stripping off the old clothing, to be clothed in purity, stainlessness, where by their hands, hearts, & characters have been rid of all those things that defile & stain their characters. Symbolical death & resurrection types in their ceremonies, also are about them dying unto the old negative character, & being lifted up, raised or resurrected to the new character more enlightened, more educated, more purified, more perfected. Thus, squares, levels, aprons, compasses, & other symbols & tools, along with sacred texts, like the Bible, are symbols & tools to be used in helping to shape their characters towards moral, physical & spiritual perfection. For they are to “aspire to perfect their own nature and transform it into a more god-like quality.” Thereby gaining a true knowledge of themselves, the conscious “realization of our divine potentialities.” They are to turn from the darkness to the light, understanding the dangers that living in a state of moral unfitness can cause in their lives & communities. For in the light they can see more clearly the dangers of the path, while in the dark, there are unseen dangers, pitfalls & other dangers that can cause them to fall & experience spiritual blackening. Darkness is ignorance, light is knowledge, positive educational traits that should be sought after. Thus, the Mason is brought from darkness into the light of understanding of their symbols, of the Masonic tools, positive traits, & character building, that they need to help them reach their divine potential, as they advance by degrees towards perfection. Their physical body is a type of Temple that they weren't to defile & shame with bad qualities, bad actions, & unwanted bad habits. Having on the wrong type of clothing, not the traditional Masonic white shirt & black suit, was symbolic of them being unclean, defiled, & not in the proper attire, & thus they'd be barred from entering the lodge meetings, a type of how no unclean thing can also enter the Temple, thus, the heavenly realms. Thus, they are to leave behind the garments that belong to the fashion of the outer world whose ideals they are desirous of relinquishing, & should enter the lodge clad in white as emblematic of the blamelessness of their thought and the purification of their lives. The pillars were types of perfect integrity of body & soul, such being essential to achieving “spiritual perfection.” The “height” of the Lodge, implies the range of consciousness possible, when they have developed their potentialities to the full, which is infinite, for they are as yet to complete their evolution by becoming a god-like being and unifying their consciousness with the Omniscient. The ladder is symbolic of scaling from the lower to the higher principles, especially the 3 main ones,

Faith, Hope & Charity. The 3 grand pillars are types of: Wisdom, Strength & Beauty. The floor, with its black & white squares in a “chequer-work” or checkers pattern, black & white squares, denotes the dual quality of everything connected with terrestrial life & the physical groundwork of human nature. Or the physical body and its appetites & affections. The opposites experienced in mortal life, good & evil, light & shade, joy & sorrow, positive & negative. The light of his positive character developed, or the darkness that his negative choices that make up his negative character, for we throw off, or radiate an ethereal or “covering” like in the art works of aureoles or haloes, that either show saintly characters, or unsaintly that lacks them, to distinguish them as more ordinary than from those more saintly. Thus, the more brighter the aureoles or haloes, the more their “aura” glows forth their levels of advancing towards being more mentally clean, of having their passions & emotions under control, in contrast to those who don’t. In Masonry, the equivalent of the aureole is the symbolic clothing worn by Provincial & Grand Lodge Officers. Other types & symbols of perfection, deification & advancing towards becoming more god-like are found preserved in Freemasonry, seemingly still keeping in remembrance many earlier to later Christian mystery deification & perfection themes.⁴⁸³⁷

The square, resting upon the sacred volume, is the symbol of the human soul, created “square” perfect, “very good,” when first created by the Creator’s hand, though invested with free-agency, & thus can choose error. The Compasses interlaced with the square are types of opposites, a negative quantity unbalanced by a positive opposite. Thus, a good or evil force, depending on what choices are made that shapes it.⁴⁸³⁸ Other symbols hint to building on the deification & perfection themes, with the possibilities of choosing the demonification path of darkness that should be avoided, in building carefully with the different Masonic building tools, one’s character. The signs, tokens, words, symbols, communicate to the Initiate, the language of the gods, for “...the Square and Circle constitute the eternal language of the gods, the same in all worlds, from all eternity. They have had neither beginning of years nor end of days. They are contemporary with time and with eternity. They are the Word of God, the Divine Logos, articulate and expressed in forms of language.”⁴⁸³⁹ Which is why the knowledge is secret & for those found fit & good for such knowledge, otherwise it could become a power of evil instead of a power of good, if given to those unfit, unfaithful, untuned to be exposed to the mysteries. Consequently, like in early Christianity, the Guard at the door that is knocked on, is there to test those knocking to see if they are worthy, & know the “secret signs” and pass words, before admission was granted. In early to later Christians’ fragments of the mysteries that survived in art, like also in Freemasonry, hand & wrist grips are part of the admission process. At least the art works of historic Christianity have Peter, Christ, or an angel, at the door or gate to paradise, to greet, by said grips, the worthy, in some cases dressed in symbolical white, before they enter.⁴⁸⁴⁰ In these rites of passage symbolism, the hand & wrist grasps are symbols, of deification & perfection, in historic Christianity. Consequently, they must have been passed down amongst the guilds of the trade, & became familiar with the arts, as Masonic guilds must have been, as they shaped, formed & carved them in stone works, as part of their crafts, in building & making the countless early to later Christian monuments & art works.⁴⁸⁴¹

As in historic Christianity, so also in Freemasonry, the clothing symbolism, winding stair cases, are also types of deification & perfection, as well as demonification. Being clothed, partly in black or descending down the stair case, was a reminder to masons, that the souls could choose to debase, defile & (blacken), their souls. But only if by choosing the dark path, rather than what they should, in choosing the path of light, the path of purification, enlightenment, worthiness, perfection & become more god-like, rather than more demonic-like.

The whole point of the early to later Christian mysteries, as in later Freemasonry, was to help towards the realization that in making the right choices, the will be “divinized,” “exalted,” degree by degree, “perfected,” step by step, “clothed in immortality,” by taking off the clothing symbolic of negative traits, & putting on the clothing, symbolic of building the positive traits. “In theological language, God has become man, and man has become divinized, in virtue of this descent and union.... A Master Mason, then, in the full sense of the term, is no longer an ordinary man, but a divinized man; one in whom the Universal and the personal consciousness have come into union.”⁴⁸⁴³

Like in early to later Christian mysteries, the mysteries of Freemasonry also have types in planting, to grow up into their divine potential. In Freemasonry, there is the “Ceremony of Exaltation,” as with early Christianity’s types of being planted likened unto Christ’s death, & raised likened unto his glorious resurrection.⁴⁸⁴⁴ Of the Entered Apprentice, an ignorant beginner in the mysteries of Freemasonry, they’re making efforts to go from a state of darkness towards the light of divine knowledge & become “divinized.” They are in the process of learning to be strengthened in that strength that could be perfected out of weakness by struggle & good efforts. Like a watered seed planted, not always in good soil, but of which struggles & pushes up from the darkness towards the light, so also is this type found in early Christianity & later in Freemasonry, in their later fragments of deification & perfection themes. In historic Christianity, Christ on the cross is likened unto him on a tree, & underneath him is the traditional grave of Adam, or the place called Golgotha, the place of the skull, often symbolized by a skull, in some cases a skull with crossed bones.⁴⁸⁴⁵ Were the carry over of this in Freemasonry’s types in the sprig, a small stem bearing leaves or flowers, taken from a bush or plant, that is likened unto the grave of the Masonic Grand Master, and prototype of Hiram Abiff? The grave is likened unto the candidate’s soul, the sprig is likened unto a “divine germ” planted in soil and waiting to become quickened into the activity of their intelligence. As the sprig sprouts & blooms into further understanding of the mystery of Golgotha, the mystery of the death of Hiram, & the Royal Arch ceremony of exaltation, there awakens more spiritual consciousness like light that increases, & as the darkness decreases. The light is what nourishes growth, like in plants. Or the efflorescence (or begins to bloom), that reaches an optimum stage of development. Or begins to reach out towards the most favorable conditions for growth in opening up, like plants & flowers do, to be nourished by the rays of the sun. So also of the human intelligence in conscious association with the Universal and Omniscient Mind. Thus, the cranium or skull is given prominence in the Master Mason’s Degree.⁴⁸⁴⁶

While in historic Christianity, the place of Adam’s grave is symbolized by his remains, a skull, or in other cases, a skull & cross bones, under Christ crucified on Golgotha. It is there, under the cross, that some art works show a hand extending down into the dark cavern, to be clasped in descent into hell & resurrection symbolism. Consequently, with the hand clasping in Freemasonry’s resurrection types, we might wonder about possible carry overs of this into Freemasonry, from historic Christianity’s symbolism here. For in Christendom’s traditions, Adam is thus lift up from the darkness into the light & his glorification & deification in the resurrection is underway. As a light shines forth from Adam glorified, so also are those in the graves of the underworld, that are being resurrected to deification too. These deification & perfection themes, inherited by Freemasons, are symbolized by hand & wrist grasping, in being raised from the darkness of the underworld, into the light of Christ's descent & ascent.⁴⁸⁴⁷

As in historic Christianity's deification & perfection themes, the Freemasons' symbolism, the initiates were thought of as risen to an exalted state, of passing, or stepping away from darkness, into the light to attain perfection. They were undergoing stages of the soul's evolution & progression away from the passional wild-beast stage to one which, while still sensuous and animal, is docile and disciplined for service, that like the eagle, is in upward-soaring spirituality. The deification garment types are there too, in that they were clothed in radiance, with light as with a garment. Clothed in white, as in purity, and the "perfecting process." Cleansing the thoughts & desires of the aspirant to make them "white within and without even as the modern candidate for the Craft is clothed in white." Thus, as in the Roman Church, & other branches of Christendom, so also in Freemasonry: "Each is right in its insistence, for in the system of each is enshrined the age-old doctrine of regeneration and divinization of the human soul, obscured in the one case by theological and other accretions foreign to the main purpose of religion, and unperceived in the other because its symbolism remains uninterpreted. To clear vision, Christian and Masonic doctrine are identical in intention though different in method."⁴⁸⁴⁸

2 EXTREMES: DEIFICATION AGAINST DEMONIFICATION, EVIL DEMON-MAKERS FIGHTING AGAINST GOOD GOD-MAKERS, & ON GOING WAR BETWEEN GOOD & EVIL

The mystery religions of the world, including early to later Christian mysteries, the doctrine of the "two ways," right-hand-path, & left-hand-path. The two opposites, often illustrated in light or darkness. Historically illustrated in color garment symbolism, white garments, robes, blankets, flags, or black robes, black flags, black clothing items, etc. Also in oppositions in music, uplifting types, in contrast to dark satanic types. Plus, ritualistic covenants to do good, moral rituals with good moral reminders, including symbols to remind those going through the rituals to live good, clean, moral lives. These in the worship of the Devil being reversed to their opposite extremes. The quests for self improvement through reaching goals to acquire better living conditions, acquire new inventions, gadgets, tools, software, & other things, that helps the human family overcome difficulties, solve problems & improves health. The on going quests to acquire somehow even superhuman powers, abilities, gifts, knowledge & how such things can be used for good, to up-lift, improve one's self. While seeking to also benefit the human family in its growth & progress in sciences, religion, education, etc. Or of which all could also be corrupted, abused, perverted, & thus used to destroy others, or cause them harm, or even to demonize one self, & others. Thus, sometimes resulting in the ultimate fall, & destructions of ancient to modern civilizations through the misuse of good inventions thus weaponized. Plus, the rise of satanic secret combinations that infiltrate societies & their quests to enslave, harms, depopulate, gain power over others, & reigns as demon-type-'gods.' In contrast to those who seek to use their knowledge, inventions, religious beliefs, music, rituals, to advance towards moral perfection. All these, are just some of the things to study in understanding different themes of deification in opposition to demonification, or the two extremes themes throughout early to later Christian history, on up to modern times. Plus, their eventual turning to fables, & legendization of these themes in literature, fictional books, science fiction & horror movies, good & bad music. Plus, in comic books' villain bad guys against Super-human good guys, each who use their specialized powers & abilities, in the on going war of good against evil, & evil against good.

Origen, third century, presents the concept of deification as one extreme on the righteous choices side, & demonification on the wrong choices side extreme, in between these two extremes are different grades, & places for different types of either progressing or retrogressing towards one extreme or the other. For some are advancing towards, or "make progress and advance to higher degrees of perfection." While those who deprave themselves by their own wicked choices, are those who have "...sinned deeply and become daemons, others less and became angels; others still less and became archangels; and thus each in turn received the reward for his individual sin. But there remained some souls who had not sinned so greatly as to become daemons, nor on the other hand so very lightly as to become angels. God therefore made the present world and bound the soul to the body as punishment."⁴⁸⁴⁹

Origen believed that people were created spiritually before physically. With free will, we can either choose to imitate God, or become complacent and thus limit our own progress. How we use that free will to our advantage, or disadvantage will determine our eternal rewards.⁴⁸⁵⁰

The two extremes, the two ways, deification in contrast to demonification, were part of ladder to heaven themes in early to later Christendom. Or as in other ladders, in earlier or later centuries, different rungs for ascending were symbolic of different positive Christ-like traits, while rungs heading down, descending, were symbolic of negative Satanic traits. Thus, the retrogression theme of demonification in contrast to progression towards deification, were still being retained in these later ladder perfection themes & illustrations in art, that also included the opposite themes, what might cause one to fall off the ladder, the Satanic Temptations that can retrogress those who give in to them, to fall & became like the Satan & his fallen angels. For not only is there pride, but other things are personified in the art works as negative traits that tempt those ascending towards perfection to fall for: Lust, greed, vanity, gluttony, adultery, fornication, the lure of city life, precious garments, military powers, worldly comforts, money, laziness, even the joy of gardening. These types of things were seen during the Middle Ages, as some of the distractions that can lure different ones away from the quest for perfection to fall towards demonification.⁴⁸⁵¹

St Bernard, when writing about the stages of humility in ladder perfection themes, is not just interested in the means of arriving at the state of perfection, but in all the negative hindrances, distractions, & temptations that drew people away from reaching perfection. The 'curiositas, levitas jactantia, singularitas, and many other states of mind, that St. Benedict's Rule is silent on.'⁴⁸⁵²

CHRIST'S ORDER VRS SATAN'S ORDER, DEMONIFICATION, IN OPPOSITION TO DEIFICATION: Part of the doctrines of the "left hand path" in opposition to that of "the right hand path," is that on the left, those who take that road⁴⁸⁵³ will eventually experience the reversal of deification, and will become more and more like the devil, when they are blackened symbolic of being demonified.⁴⁸⁵⁴ This also shows up in the art works and writings of early to later Christendom. For some art works show how the fallen angels lost their bright nature & retrogressed towards darker colors,⁴⁸⁵⁵ symbolic of their fall from righteousness to wickedness. Plus, how they fell from purity to impurity and all other things in opposition against God. Thus, those who go down the left-hand path of the fallen angels, will retrogress into becoming like unto them.⁴⁸⁵⁶

As we shall see, this is one of the main purposes and points in the modern music produced by a web of secret societies attempting to gain control over the whole world. The reversal process is also what's turning rock music records backwards as revealed during the late 1960s on into the 1990s. For along with numerous anti-Christ messages, & invitations to the listener to join them. There is also the reversal of deification, in how some encouraged their listeners to become like unto the demons,⁴⁸⁵⁷ and encourage their listeners to develop satanic traits. The process by which one becomes more like the devil and his fallen angels, I have called demonification, because it is the reversal & on the opposite side of the scale in contrast to deification. It's in complete opposition, and is the reversal of the early Christians' doctrine of deification, where you become more like Christ.

"...Satanism was involved its essential ingredients being the worship of the Devil and the reversal of Christian values. A Satanist was one who renounced Christ and his Church, and blasphemously maltreated its sacred objects, symbols & ceremonies..."⁴⁸⁵⁸

"The rituals of ceremonial magic are not always healthy, as stories of Satanist sects, black sorcery and sadistic practices attest. Evidences of diabolism can be seen in the wrecking of Christian symbols, the desecration of cemeteries and occasional ritual murders."⁴⁸⁵⁹

They mock Christ, & his rituals and "think that the powers of evil can be invoked by the simple process of standing Christian morality and ritual upon its head."⁴⁸⁶⁰

"Typically, all aspects of the ceremony were done in reverse, since Satan is the reverse of God. Crosses were held upside down & then trampled, pacts were written backwards, the initiates signed their names with their left hands & the Devil made his mark on the left side of the body."⁴⁸⁶¹

Medieval plays & comic theaters depicted different legendary aspects of what the Devil & demons were doing. Hell was a place where "all values are inverted: every praise is a curse, every song a cacophony."⁴⁸⁶² Thus, later Christians depicted this reversal process in their mystery plays which depicted hell as the place where, "all values are inverted".⁴⁸⁶³

In devil-lore: "The Devil was believed to hold court and to celebrate witches' sabbaths, on which occasions homage was paid to him and the Christian sacraments were travestied with diabolical magic."⁴⁸⁶⁴

Throughout the Middle Ages, heavy lids, & chained locks were placed over large baptismal fonts, & the consecrated water was changed sometimes weekly. It was feared that the hallowed water might be stolen for the purposes of witchcraft. Some Anglo-Saxons were said to use the water as an ingredient in their medicinal draughts and love potions, and for fumigations they burned herbs dipped in it. Also, the mockery and reversal process of taking something consider holy & consecrated to God & reversing it for evil purposes, is seen in how some believed the baptismal water was being sought after for the practice of black magic. Thus, baptismal water was stolen so that a wax image would be baptized in the name of the man or woman who was to be destroyed by the melting or stabbing of the effigy doll. As a results, in 1220 at a council in Durham, Bishop Richard Marisco ordered that the font should be kept locked on account of sorcery. Edmund Rich, 1236, issued a similar order.⁴⁸⁶⁵

14th century, sculptures on the main entrance of the Cathedral at Bourges, France, shows the Last Judgment scenes. On the right-hand path, clothed souls are being judged & their deeds weighed on the scales. On the left-hand path, naked souls are being judged & thrust down to hell by demons.⁴⁸⁶⁶

1617, An English Protestant, Thomas Cooper, wrote how the witches would renounce God. They would infiltrate a house of God, take a solemn oath & covenant, and there, make open testimony of their subjection unto the Devil by renouncing their former covenants with the Lord.⁴⁸⁶⁷ However, some modern witches have claimed that these types of things are folklore.⁴⁸⁶⁸

The reversal process also shows up in so-called pacts⁴⁸⁶⁹ with the devil, for the pact is said to be written from right to left, since the devils did most things in reverse, to show their opposition to Christianity. 16th–17th century reversal processes, thought to be done by those in league-with-devils, were parts of witch-hunting lore, but such superstitious beliefs also found their way into witch-hunting cases, & was used as "evidences" against those accused of being involved in witchcraft, or who were alleged to be possessed of satanic powers. Hence, pacts with the devil documents, if found in the papers of defendants, or perhaps documents as manufactured evidence produced by the corrupt prosecuting side, were said had to be read in a mirror, because they were "mirror writing," written backwards. One such case, where this type of witch hunting "evidence" might have been manufactured, is that of Urban Grandier. He was a priest, who was accused by the Ursuline nuns at Loudin in Western France, of having used Satanic powers on their minds. However, the Archbishops of Bordeaux noted the malicious hostility & hysterical bitterness that the nuns spewed forth in witnessing against the preacher, during his first trial. There were many contradictions in the witnesses' statements, & taking these things into consideration, the Archbishop dismissed the case. Upon further reports of M. De Laubordemont, a cousin of the prioress, while attending to French Government business in London, who'd heard what had happened, & reported to Cardinal Richelieu, his own colorful stories. Further inquisitorial tactics renewed & a second trial was done against Grandier, where Laubordemont was judge. He allowed & accepted the most ridiculous evidence to be used against Grandier. For devils' testimonies were accepted, as they were believed to have spoken through the mouths of the obsessed angered nuns. Two documents were produced which were purported to be the original pact of Grandier with Satan, one signed by him, the other said to have 6 devils' signatures & the authenticity was vouched for by Baalbarith, the Secretary of his Satanic Majesty, with a script written in "mirror writing," or written backwards.⁴⁸⁷⁰ But who was being satanic? For, although Grandier wasn't the most moral priest, as many others of his time weren't also. Was he for real, guilty of these other charges of the use of satanic powers? Guilty to the point of being subjected to a satanic justice system of cruel torture & execution?

1634, the reversal process also shows in the way the Black (in opposition to White) Masses of the Catholic Church were defiantly said in reverse or backwards. Crosses were also inverted, and black vestments were worn in opposition to white robes which Christian priest wore.⁴⁸⁷¹ Because of this reversal process,⁴⁸⁷² it was believed in later Christendom, that the Devil & his followers "ride animals backward."⁴⁸⁷³

Demonification is the Reversal of Deification: The reversal of Whitesunday, to Black Sabbath, the reversing of white baptismal robes to black hooded robes, worn by some devil-worshippers today.⁴⁸⁷⁴ The reversal of the early Christian white garment types, & reversing good symbolical meanings, to being clothed in black, the reversal of the good traits, to put on the black evil traits of the demons. This seems to be the whole point of modern Satanic rock & roll music.⁴⁸⁷⁵ The reversal of what the early Christians symbolically believed they were being clothed in. For while the early Christians would symbolically remove the spiritual clothing of pride, the demons were believed, like during the 16th century, to be clothing people who gave into their temptations, in the symbolical clothing of conceit. Thus, there's a demon of conceit, depicted in art, riding the tail end of a dress of a woman, dressed in conceit.⁴⁸⁷⁶ While the early Christians would take off other negative traits, like old filthy rags, symbolic of their former life of sins. In contrast, the demon of fads & fashions, tempted people to be lifted-up in their own minds as being better than others around them. The negative trait of pride, which caused the Devil to fall, if acquired by humans on earth, would also make them fall. Thus, they wouldn't be deified, they'd go towards deification's opposite extreme, for they'd be demonified. Thus, pride & conceit were sometimes symbolized by expensive clothing, for those who do put on such clothing might go beyond the sometimes dressing up for special occasions, into dressing up & giving into the temptations of starting to look haughtily down upon others. Especially those who might not be able to afford to buy or put on fancy expensive clothing, but might be dressed looking-poor & ragged. This was what the ancient lore & writings say happened to Lucifer, who was once clothed in brightness & glory, as were the other angels before their fall. Thus, they were stripped of their brightness that turned to darkness, when they gave into pride, & thus fell.⁴⁸⁷⁷ Thus, in different cultures, as in early to later Christianity, clothing often symbolized the levels of different classes of people. Their ranks of offices, ranks in educational degrees, different levels in mystery religions, if the young women were still virgins, if they weren't but had been marked with a scarlet letter A on their clothing, for example. There was also symbolical-white-clothing, or blankets for morality, & martyrs. Plus, in political & civil clothing symbolism, elite status, wealth, royalty, & position of upper class status. Plus, on down the clothing symbol levels to poor, beggars, criminals, heretics, & those considered out laws, out casts, or who were under going penance, or going through the penal-systems. Plus, clothing with different symbols on them, representing military-ranks, others as reminders to do good & keep-covenants sworn to in mystery religious settings, or military settings. Plus, failures to do so, stripping of rank insignias, accusations of heresies, etc.⁴⁸⁷⁸ The symbols & colors in clothing became part of later clerical & civic customs, lore & traditions. Some depictions of ladders to moral Christian perfection, have different ones on different levels of them, with each rung representing Christ like traits, humility, charity, etc. Plus, they show black demons attempting to get those on it, to fall off. Thus, falling by allowing themselves to be distracted by riches, & expensive clothing, & other satanic temptations depicted below. Thus, they fall to the sin & negative traits of the demons that will also blacken their souls, as pride did with the Devil & demons. In falling they've shamed themselves, as the demon of fads has the fallen clothed in 'the latest fad in clothes pilloried,' or in clothing which offenders were formerly imprisoned and exposed to public abuse.⁴⁸⁷⁹ Somewhere in all these traditions, customs, & lore are fragments of the symbolical clothing representing dressing up for deification, like in the early Christian mysteries. Or the stripping down of the deification clothing, for its reversal, to be clothed in black, or clothed in demonification, like in Satanic lore, & the reversal of Christian mysteries in the Black Mass, Black Sabbaths, & modern satanic rock music.⁴⁸⁸⁰

In some cases, witches some time perform their dances in a left to right or clockwise direction, believed by them to be considered essential in their magic for social or helpful kinds. However, on some occasions, when the witches reverse the process; this is not to be taken lightly because they believe that evil spirits' services must be paid for by some forfeiture or loss. Thus, white magic for good results, and black magic for bad, which is dangerous because of how many witches believe that black magic rebounds threefold upon the spellbinder.⁴⁸⁸¹

To understand about later rock music lyrics and the occult propaganda indoctrination tactics. Plus, the world wide web of secret societies' push to spread satanic doctrines, immorality, drug addiction, and rebellion against Christ. We also need to understand the historical roots behind the path which they encourage in their music for people to go down. That path is the left-hand path at the "cross roads" or the "two ways."⁴⁸⁸² During the 16th century, legendized accounts of Faust's pact with the devil made up magical lore & legend. Faust is said to have made this pact at the "cross roads."⁴⁸⁸³ In some cases, pacts with the devil were written backwards, or in reverse.⁴⁸⁸⁴ This idea of going to the crossroads to make a pact with the devil, shows up centuries later in the lyrics of blues, & rock & roll music.⁴⁸⁸⁵ In the art works of early to later Christendom, Christ holds up his right hand to bless those who are going up the right-hand path, while his left hand is down on those who go towards hell down the left-hand path.⁴⁸⁸⁶

The reversal process towards the left-hand path, also includes reversing commandments, this is done by the demon-inspired who fall for into doing completely the opposite of good, deluded by demonic revelations into thinking that the evil they do is for the greater good. Thou shalt not kill, is reversed to thou shalt. Throw in a lot of superstitions, & other dark blends of apostate craziness, & perverted cruelty, & what might the black cauldrons of wicked practices produce? Many dark acts even done in the name of "Christianity!" Cases in points: "The practice [of burying people alive, or entombing them inside buildings] is here regarded as Christian and it is apparent that there are instances in which Christian authorities were sufficiently ignorant to sanction it, for even the erection of churches was supposed to require the same cruel sacrifice; and there were cases in which, according to the special sanctity of the place, it was deemed necessary to bury a priest, because children or women were not regarded as sufficient."⁴⁸⁸⁷

Numerous other heavy metal and satanic rock groups have spewed forth their anti-Christ, anti-America, anti-God, pro-drug abuse, pro-wickedness themes upon the masses, to get their listeners & followers to go down left-hand path.

THE CROSS ROADS: What Satan offers are the temporary riches of this earth which he knows will be lost at the time of the person's death. Cain was tempted by Satan to get gain through conspiracy & murder. "The exchange of eternal life for worldly success is in fact the essence of the classic Pact with the Devil, in which the hero (Faust, Jabez Stone, even Jesus) is offered everything that the wealth of the earth can buy in return for subjection to Satan hereafter."⁴⁸⁸⁸

Satan is depicted at the left hand of God with the goats,-- symbolic of being the first apostates with all his followers who also became apostates against God. For they had forsaken their heavenly divine ranks to become guides down the left-hand path towards destruction & damnation. They are sinners against the heavens & have helped to cause the human race to sin against the divine laws of God. They turn the things of God backwards and bring about the reversal of all holy things into darkness, and perverted evils.⁴⁸⁸⁹

Part of the doctrines of the "left hand path" in opposition to that of "the right hand path", is that those on the left will eventually be demonified. Early to later Christian writings, scriptures, and art works show how the fallen angels lost their bright nature & retrogressed towards darker colors. This was a symbol of how they had fallen from righteousness & goodness into wickedness & opposition against God. Thus, those who go down the left-hand path of the fallen angels, will retrogress into becoming like unto them.⁴⁸⁹⁰

In France & French demon lore & fables, the fairies, Fée Esterelle, was one that was sacrificed to. In the Fadas the belief still lingers in the Provence & adjoining districts. On December 31 says Du Mege, the "Fées (Hadas) enters the dwelling of the worshipers. They bear good-luck in their right, ill-luck in their left-hand."⁴⁸⁹¹

The left side in Jewish and Christian thought, in some cases, was symbolic of not being in a favorable position, upon being judged. This concept was illustrated in early to later Christian art works. For example, 6th c. mosaic shows Christ separating the sheep from the goats. The Devil is portrayed sitting on "Christ's left hand with the goats, while the good angel sits at the Lord's right hand with the sheep."⁴⁸⁹²

The symbolical association of goats with demons also shows up in later satanic rock music. Plus, after the record player was invented, the age old practice of turning back, inverting, & saying things backwards⁴⁸⁹³ began to show up in the rock music of the late 1960s—1990s. Deicide has what could be the sound of goats in the background of one of their satanic songs. The very name "Deicide" hints to murdering god, for the first part "dei" seems to be derived from deity (a god or goddess). The other portion "cide" means "killer of", thus, it seems that this group's name could mean what they also sing about, and that is the death of god; or being killers of god.⁴⁸⁹⁴

In Deicide's Legion, song BEHEAD THE PROPHET (NO LORD SHALL LIVE), some of the lyric satanically preach to deny the resurrection, and behead the nazarene son. In other words, they are singing about killing Christ. Furthermore, anti-Christ symbols are depicted on the cover of Legion, as is also a picture of the four members of this satanic rock music band. The group have satanic-anti-Christ symbols on them, such as the goat-heads, pentagram & inverted crosses. One member has a inverted cross symbol scar in his forehead.

1929, an art work show the devil with his left hand raised up while his right hand is down. This is a reversal of Last Judgement depictions that show Christ's right hand up while his left hand is down. Thus, this gesture in the "black Mass" may symbolically represent the left hand path.⁴⁸⁹⁵

In the 1971, Led Zeppelin, in their album 4, side 1, song #4: Stairway to Heaven, mentions the "two ways" or that there are "two paths". "Yes there are 2-paths you can go by, but in the long run, there's still time to change the road your on." This portion says, when the records is reversed: "Here's to my sweet Satan, the one little path towards Satan is there, whose power is Satan." In occult lore, traditions, & rituals—the left-side is symbolic, in some cases, of the "left hand path" that leads to Satan's realm. This concept also shows up in some of the modern rock music.

The Doors, who encourage you to Break On Through⁴⁸⁹⁶ to the other side, the left hand path.⁴⁸⁹⁷

Motley Crue invites their listeners to Take a walk on the wild side, by doing all kinds of evils, including "murder-rape." The cover of one of their album says that they backmasked messages in their songs. Their song: "Shout at the Devil" has a portion when played backwards it says: "Backward mask where ever you are, oh, lost in error, Satan"⁴⁸⁹⁸

Summer, 1985, Southern California, Richard Ramirez, who often dressed in black & was called the "Night Stalker", went on a murderous satanic inspired killing spree with the lyrics of AC/DC's "Night Prowler" pounding in his brain as he sneaked into peoples' homes to spray-paint satanic pentagrams on their walls, & slaughter the inhabitants there.⁴⁸⁹⁹ The ACDC band members were sad that Ramirez had perverted & misinterpreted their lyrics for evil purposes. Preachers kept pointing out the satanic references in their songs to vilified them & their band name.

In early Christian art works, the "right-hand path" goes up to the doors or gates of paradise, where Peter, or Christ, or an angel is there to clasp the hands of those who have made it there. The ultimate end of the "right hand path" is deification. On the other hand, the "left hand path" those descends down, and those who travel that path become more and more like the fallen angels until they are demonified. Thus, this opposite extreme is what I have called demonification.

Venom's album cover says that they demand the death of Christ, how they spit on the virgin Catholics worship, and sit at the Lord "Satan's left hand." This, of course, is a clear reference to how they have chosen to go down the left hand path.

Rock singer, Ozzy Osbourne says their music is a training tool for their young heavy metal music fans that "choose the left-hand path of Satanism."⁴⁹⁰⁰ Other degrading & negative satanic messages are found in some of the modern rock music which promotes the doctrines of the left hand path that leads to the realm of the fallen angels & the arch-demon.⁴⁹⁰¹

Today, some of the people who dabble in "Satanism wear inverted crosses, Black magic is called 'the Left-Hand Path'".⁴⁹⁰²

"All these religious rites and representations--initiation, sacrifice, prayer, hymns, myth, scripture- are frequently burlesqued, done backwards or otherwise travestied, because magic has its own aims which are always somewhat illicit & often hostile to religion."⁴⁹⁰³

Magic borrows from old religions, modern religions, dead religions, & from other sources, etc. It borrows everything, rituals, symbols, doctrines, prayers, methods, reversing them, & turning them backwards, it mocks God & Christ.

"All these religious rites and representations--initiation, sacrifice, prayer, hymns, myth, scripture-- are frequently burlesqued, done backwards or otherwise travestied, because magic has its own aims which are always somewhat illicit and often hostile to religion."⁴⁹⁰⁴

Thus, modern Black Magic borrows from old religions, modern religions, dead religions, & from rituals, symbols, doctrines, prayers, methods, etc., & upon reversing them, & turning them backwards, it mocks God & Christ.⁴⁹⁰⁵

In the late 19th century on into the 20th century, Edward Alexander Crowley [1875-1947] was one Occultist who set the standard for which later occultists would follow. He may have influenced different ones to learn how to speak backwards, this occult method may have been the basis for the later back-masking messages in some rock music. The Beatles liked & admired him enough to include his face among many others in their Sergeant Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band, album.⁴⁹⁰⁶

In the late 19th century on into the 20th century, Edward Alexander Crowley, A.D., 1875-1947, was one Occultist who set the standard for which later occultist would follow, in that he may have influenced different ones to learn how to speak backwards. This occult practice is the basis for the later "backmasking" or reverse satanic, and anti-Christ messages in late 1960s— 1990s rock music. The Beatles admired Crowley enough to include his face among many others on their Sergeant Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band, Album.⁴⁹⁰⁷ With the inventions of record players, & other inventions. This age old practice of turning back, inverting, & saying things backwards began to show up in the rock music of the late 1960s—1990s. For example, the rock music group: Cheap Trick's album: Heaven Tonight, has the Lord's prayer backwards.⁴⁹⁰⁸ In the fables of the Slaves, Russia, the Vends believe in a demon type being to watch out for. For "...a Vend knows that when he converses with her [the demon] for an hour together about flax and the preparation of it, if he always contradicts her, or says the paternoster backwards without stopping, he is secure."⁴⁹⁰⁹ Paternoster in the Roman Catholic Church, is the Lord's Prayer, especially in Latin pater noster 'our father', the first words of the Lord's Prayer. Thus, in this fable & in some rock music, the Lord's Prayer is said in reverse.

The occult guitarist rock musician Jimmy Page of Led Zeppelin, was a devout follower of the teachings of occultist Aleister Crowley. He bought & lived in Crowley's mansion known as the "Boleskine House". When the album cover to Stairway to Heaven is opened, you see an old man holding a lantern. He is said to be the Hermit in tarot cards, which represents wisdom from above, silent council, prudence, an encounter with one who will guide you to material or spiritual goals. Ozzy Osbourne paid tribute to Crowley in his album, Blizzard of Ozz, & in the song Mr. Crowley.⁴⁹¹⁰

To continue their fight against Christ, in this realm, the fallen angels spread forth anti-Christ messages through human agents in the flesh. These messages are found in some cases, in modern rock music. Subliminal messages were first used,⁴⁹¹¹ but then as the music degraded into the "heavy metal" & "death-metal." Types of satanic music which screeches anti-Christ, anti-life, satanic messages to all who hear. Subliminal messages, are messages that are hidden in the background sound effects of music. Such a method, has been used for good, in that some have healing tapes with positive messages. There is some debate over how such a thing can affect a person, being either for good or bad. Despite this, some have believed in it enough to also use subliminal messages for evil purposes.⁴⁹¹²

The rock-music group: Areosmith's "Sweet Emotion" has a portion at the first of the song that seems to say: "Don't believe in the Christ". Backward message called "Backward Masking" or "Backmasking" are messages that based on old occult method of learning out to say something that can mean something forward & also something backward. Thus, when the record is played or turned backward, "backmasked" messages can be heard.⁴⁹¹³

The Door's lead singer Jim Morrison's input became his out-put. The different fragments of the negative literature, which he read, showed up in the lyrics to the songs he wrote. He sang about barbaric murders, hinted to sexual acts, etc. He went through an occult marriage-rite which he didn't take too serious, while his partner involved did.⁴⁹¹⁴

The song Stairway to Heaven was written as Robert Plant listened to Jimmy Page on the guitar in 1970. The lyrics reflect Robert Plant's readings of Spenser's Faerie Queen, Robert Graves' White Goddess, & every other Celtic heroine-- the Lady of the Lake, Morgan La Fay, Diana of the Fields Greene, Rhiannon the Nightmare, and The May Queen. "Robert had been poring through the works of the British antiquarian Lewis Spence." He later cited Spence's Magic Arts in Celtic Britain as one of the sources for the lyrics to Stairway to Heaven. The song seemed like "an invitation to abandon the new traditions and follow the old gods."⁴⁹¹⁵

Led Zeppelin's Stairway to Heaven:

Forward: "The Piper's [or devil⁴⁹¹⁶ is] calling you to join him."

Backwards: "Accept the offer."

Led Zeppelin's 1971, album 4, side 1, song #4, Stairway to Heaven:

Forward: "Your stairway lies on the whisperen wind"

Backwards: "I sing because I live with Satan."

Forwards: "The Piper's calling you to join him."

Backwards: Accept the offer."

Forwards: "And it makes me wonder."

Backwards: "There's no escaping it."

Forwards: "Yes there are 2 paths you can go by, but in the long run, there's still time to change the road you're on."

Backwards: "Here's to my sweet Satan, the one little path towards Satan is there who's power is Satan."

Forwards: "It's just a sprinkling for the May Queen."

Backwards: "He will give you 666."⁴⁹¹⁷

Forwards: "For you know sometimes words have 2 meanings." In The Song Remains the Same, a video of their concert at Madison Square Garden in New York, 1973. While Robert Plant was singing Stairway to Heaven,⁴⁹¹⁸ he made a gesture with his hand when he came to these words. Holding up two fingers he turned his hand back and forth, hinting perhaps that words can have two meanings forwards & backwards.⁴⁹¹⁹

April 1982, a committee in California assembled to confirm the charges made by religionist who charged that when Led Zeppelin's Stairway to Heaven, backwards. "Sure enough... some members said they could clearly hear the ominous, slurry bone-chilling words: "Here's to my sweet Satan."⁴⁹²⁰

Led Zeppelin's 4th album, side 2, song 1, Misty Mountain Hop:

Forwards: "Mountains were spirits go now, over the hills where the spirits fly."

Backwards: "Spirits are unbelievable,... It's spiritual."

F: "So I decided what I going to do now."

B: "We are sinners."

Led Zeppelin's album, Houses of the Holy, backwards: "Satan is really lord."⁴⁹²¹ The band was alleged to have "indulged in everything from secret devil message", they said wasn't there.⁴⁹²²

Pat Benitar's Hell is for Children, backwards: "Christ is dead".

The Rolling Stones' Sympathy for the Devil, backwards: "Satan is the one"? or "Son it's a war"? Another portion backwards: "He is invincible".

The Rolling Stones, Painted Black, backwards "Help us, God Help us!" The fact that this is backwards suggest that it may be a prayer to their god, the devil.

E. L. O. It's Over, Album: Out of the Blue, backward portion: "Help assist us in the (anti-Christ?) kingdom."

AC/DC, Back in Black, (are they making reference to the black vestments worn in some satanic black masses? The early Christians were clothed in white garments, or robes after baptism. The traditions behind white garments in later Christendom, is called the White Sunday.⁴⁹²³ The reversal of this is the black robes or black clothing in Satanism during their black sundays. Perhaps the rock music group Black Sabbath named themselves after the Black satanic mass. In contrast, the early Christian Clement of Alexandria, third century, wrote that the early Christians, in their mysteries had "...put aside the old man, and stripped off the garment of wickedness, and put on the immortality of Christ..." The garment of wickedness could have been symbolized by a black garment, in contrast to white garments worn by early Christians, (TANF) 2: p.217).⁴⁹²⁴

Ozzy Osbourne's Suicide Solution, is charged with having inspired a youth to commit suicide.⁴⁹²⁵

Judas Priest's music is said to have inspired 2 youths in Sparks, Nevada to shoot themselves.⁴⁹²⁶

In Ozzy Osbourne's War Pigs, he sings about occult masses, like witches & black masses. He says their music is for training young heavy metal fans that choose to go down "the left-hand path of Satanism."⁴⁹²⁷ Other degrading & negative satanic messages are found in some of the modern rock music which promotes the doctrines of the left hand path which leads to the realm of the fallen angels & the arch-demon.⁴⁹²⁸ Thus, to continue their fight against Christ, in this realm, the fallen angels spread forth anti-Christ messages through human agents in the flesh.

Helstar's, Noseferatu, side 1, the first 2 songs: Rhapsody in Black, & Baptized in Blood, preaches satanic occult rituals. In Jay's Journal, an occult ritual: baptizing in blood, is described.⁴⁹²⁹

Later Christian traditions place the burial for Adam's body underneath the cross that Christ died on. Thus, Adam's remains were baptized in blood, as the blood of Christ showered down in upon his remains under Golgotha.⁴⁹³⁰ Early art works shows Satan rebaptizing young sorcerers. Another shows a Sorcerer exchanging the Gospels for a book of black magic.⁴⁹³¹

Styx, (named after the legendary river that surrounds Satan's kingdom),⁴⁹³² in on of their albums, they have a picture of the group standing on a black rock'd river bed. In their song Snow Blind, a backwards portion says: "Satan move in our voices."

The Eagles' Hotel California hints to gathering in the master chambers to kill the beast by stabbing it with their knives. A backward portion says: "Oh yes, Satan... organized his own religion." In side the album cover, it shows a hotel; in the upper floor area is a person which some have suggest looks like Anton Szandor LaVey, the organizer of the "Church of Satan" during the 1960's. In a house painted black on California Street in San Francisco, California, LaVey held Satanic black masses and rituals in his church of Satan. The Eagles manager, Larry Salter, has admitted that members of the group had dealings with members of the satanic church.⁴⁹³³

Twisted Sister, album Stay Hungry, side 2, song #5, S.M.F. has portion forward that says: "Your walking wonder," backwards: "I know what power is!"

Prince's Purple Rain backwards mocks Christ's 2nd coming.

Quiet Riot's Metal Health, backwards: "Serve beast for money."

The Rolling Stones' Tattoo, backwards: "I love you, said the devil."

Venom uses pentagrams with the goat's head in it.⁴⁹³⁴ A portion of their Welcome to Hell has a backwards quote from Milton: "It's better to reign in hell than to serve in heaven."⁴⁹³⁵

Queen's Another one bites the dust, backwards: "Start to smoke marijuana."

Slayer did a publicity shot of band members leaning over the bloody body of a woman, with gore oozing out of their mouths. They also use satanic symbolism on the album covers, and their music is full of satanic themes.

King Diamond ignites a large crucifix, with satanic lyrics speaking of satanic rites, and themes. He credits different satanic-devil worshippers for helping him in the production of his music. As the whole point of Christian music is to sing praises to Christ & encourage good deeds, which eventually help people become more Christ like. In contrast, a lot of the rock music of the 1960s through to the present, encourages the opposite, & his in praise or sympathy for the devil, & encourages the listener to regress towards the demonic traits of demonification. To help preach these dark traits of demonification, a number of rock and roll groups, plus more arose, that don't hide their anti-Christ, Satanic messages anymore in their music, but scream them out, some of the names of these bands are: Judas Priest, Iron

Maiden, Satan, Sex Pistols, Southern Death Cults, Agnostic Front, Bad Religion, Alien Sex, Fiend, Battalion of Saints, Corpse Grinders, Criminal Youth, Christian Death, Castration Squad, Crucifix, Condemned to Death, Child Molesters, Crown of Thorns, D.O.A., The Damned, Dayglow Abortions, Flesheater, Fall of Christianity, Graven Image, Icons of Filth, Leather Nun, Millions of Dead Cops, Mob Vengeance, Slaughter Christ, Suicidal Tendencies, Shattered Faith, The Cult, Septic Death, Stillborn Christians, Satan's Cheerleaders, Sex Gang Children, Some Weird Sin, Skulls, Violent Children, Voodoo, Ratt, WASP, KISS, Deicide, Cannibal Corpse, & many others.⁴⁹³⁶ One satanic murderer said that Satan "spoke to me through the music."⁴⁹³⁷

If the occult has reversed the symbols, rituals, doctrines, morals, and mysteries of early to later Christianity. And if one of those doctrines which is reversed is deification, an early Christian doctrine ritualistically depicted in the early Christian mysteries, in which the Christian believed that they would eventually reach perfection and even godhood.⁴⁹³⁸ If this is reversed in Satanism, and other earlier secret societies, then, instead of becoming more like Christ, they believe that they will become more like Satan & the devils, or if they don't believe in their existence, at least some claim freedoms to "do what thou wilt," even if that means quests to develop negative traits. Thus, from early to later Christians' perspectives, such ones as these have been considered throughout history to be descending down into hell with the negative dark traits of that left-hand path, on Christ's left hand in Last Judgment scenes.⁴⁹³⁹ Not surprising then should be how other symbols of deification, (different types of hand & wrist grasps), would be reversed in demonification.

Devil-Contracts, are also part of pre-existence themes-lore, in that they are the post-war in heaven, post-fall from heaven activities of the Devil & his fallen-angel-demons. But they are also part of the Devil's counterfeits of deification lore in the demonification of those that follow his counterfeit mysteries & dark rituals, in opposition to, & the reversal of Christ's saving rituals. Continually at war with God, the Devil fights with God for the possession of the human family, by offering us counterfeit temporary forms of "happiness," in carnal-pleasures through drugs, illicit sex perversions out side of the traditional marriage contracts, & by tempting us with counterfeit deification abilities, powers & granted wishes. According to popular lore, sometimes acted out in theaters, plays, & movies, they show one of the Devil's methods of collecting souls, are through counterfeit mysteries, & blood contracts, counterfeiting the concepts & Christ-types of cross-wounding symbolism, through blood oath covenants & counterfeit hand clasping rituals. Because people often seek to get riches, power, counterfeit deification abilities, & fame, the fast way. Or wish for things they ought not to, by increasing their devilish abilities to satisfy their lusts for all the negative traits, in opposition & the reversal of the positive Christ-like traits. The Devil is willing to use his counterfeit dark priesthood powers to grant those wishes, & evil desires & temptations, but always with a high price to be paid! They have to sacrifice others, &, or promise their souls to be the Devil's, for time & eternity. Thus, inasmuch as the traditional early to later Christian hand & wrist clasps in marriages, are also contracts, that symbolized the bride & groom being joined together by God for life, & with the promise & symbol that their love can be eternal, & will continue to bring them together in the afterlife. The Devil has counterfeited this, & other Christ like contractual symbolism, according to traditions, art works & popular lore, in the Devil-Contracts' hand clasp, often said to be done left hand to left hand, but not always depicted in this way. But, when done with left hands, this is supposed to be symbolic of the left hand path towards demonification, the reversal of & counterfeit of Christ's deification. The Devil-Contract might also include some dark occult rituals that are believed, in popular lore, to also void out even Christ's atonement upon the dark ritually contracted. After this, the contracted are said to experience, for a while, counterfeit deification abilities, obtain riches, powers, & other things wished for, but then ends up paying the ultimate price, when the Devil comes to collect their souls in the end.⁴⁹⁴⁰

Stories of pacts with the devil go back into ancient times, for example, the 5th century story of the pact is in story of Saint Basil. Another dates back to the 6th century in the story about Theophilus of Cilicia.⁴⁹⁴¹ Theophilus performs an oath to be loyal to Lucifer, signs a contract to live wickedly, but later repents and calls upon the Virgin Mary for help. She descends into hell, snatches the contract and takes it back to Theophilus, who destroys it.⁴⁹⁴² 1500, Erasmus of Rotterdam, published a letter in which he spoke of devil-contracts as an invention made by the witch-prosecutors; however, his satire had no effect; for, in the meantime, the fires that burned alleged witches were constantly going all over Europe during that time. 1563, Protestant physician, Johannes Weier, (born at Grave, 1515), in his six books, De praestigiis Dæmonum et incantationibus ac Veneficiis, though he still believed in the Devil and in magic, he rejected the possibility of witchcraft and compacts with the Devil.⁴⁹⁴³ Earlier, a 12th century artwork depicts Theophilus making a pact with the devil. Theophilus has "his hands between Satan's in the sign of feudal homage."⁴⁹⁴⁴ This is similar to the Christian rites of passage hand and wrist grips made during feudal homage oaths done by Nobles with Christian kings.⁴⁹⁴⁵ Therefore, even Satan has counterfeited this later retrogressed fragments of the earlier Christian mysteries. At any rate, the same types of feudal homage hand grasping, and the kiss of peace, which includes a hand clasp,⁴⁹⁴⁶ as it is seen in depictions of Christ's descent into hell.⁴⁹⁴⁷ Plus, the hand grips which were carried over into the wandering-Christ traditions, in which monks would greet, with a hand clasping kiss of peace,⁴⁹⁴⁸ wanderers, pilgrims, and others, whom they believed were Christ in different guises. These same types of hand & wrist grips, found so often in historic Christendom, must have also been counterfeited and blended into the traditional pacts with Satan.⁴⁹⁴⁹

Whatever might be the case, it's interesting how that in a fictional series about English magic, the Harry Potter series, vol. 7, Harry Potter and the Half-Blood Prince, (by Joanne "Jo" Rowling, published in the UK, US & other English speaking countries on 16th July 2005, & later the movie by the same name, a 2009 British-American fantasy film directed by David Yates and distributed by Warner Bros. Pictures). In the movie, it shows a wrist grasp between Severus Snape making an Unbreakable Vow with Narcissa Malfoy, the wife of Lucius Malfoy. Their Bonder was Bellatrix Lestrange, Narcissa's sister and a Death Eater dressed in black. In Brittany's fables, white is often the color worn by priests, (while black is often associated with death, & thus a funerary color for mourning loved ones passed on).⁴⁹⁵⁰ Severus thus vows to protect Draco Malfoy from harm and guide him whilst he attempted to perform the task the Dark Lord (Voldemort, also often dressed in black),⁴⁹⁵¹ had asked him to do. That dark deed was to kill Albus Dumbledore, the head master of Hogwarts School of Witchcraft and Wizardry, shortened Hogwarts, a fictional British school of magic for students aged eleven to eighteen.⁴⁹⁵² What might have inspired or been the source, if any, for J. K. Rowling's wrist clasping "Unbreakable Vow," in English versions of magic? Could she have done research & known of such things as the blood covenants in history?⁴⁹⁵³

Part of the symbolism of one becoming an apostate from God is to have the person depicted "falling away," or in some cases, falling off ladders to heaven, where the ascender doesn't make it to the top to clasp the hand, or have their wrist or hand gripped by Christ, waiting at the top. Instead, dark colored demons, grasp at them, shoot arrows at them, or get them to be distracted to see the temptations, lusts, greed, & other negative distractions below the ladders to heaven, & upon taking their focus off of Christ, & not holding to the rungs, they let go, or allow themselves to be grasped & pulled off the ladder by said demons.⁴⁹⁵⁴ In other cases, Christ also draws (by hand & wrist clasping), souls to himself, to help keep them from falling, slipping, or tripping. Thus, the hand & wrist grasps are symbols of protection from the dark evil forces, as is depictions of souls in the palm or hand of God.⁴⁹⁵⁵ While in contrast, there is no protection, so it would seem, when Death comes to take the soul of all types of people, ages, Kings, Nobles, etc. So also in the early to later Christian concept of having demons, or the devil, even a personified death, as in "The Dance of Death," art works, that shows different types of hold, hand grips, wrist grips, with right & left hands, in some cases, grasping hold to cause to fall, or take the soul away. In some cases, Death is clothed in a white shroud.⁴⁹⁵⁶

In the rock & roll group, Blue Öyster Cult's song about not fearing death, or the Grim Reaper, often depicted as a skeleton in a black hooded robe, sometimes holding a reaper farm tool used to cut down wheat, etc. Thus: Don't Fear The Reaper, is a song by the American rock band from their 1976 album, Agents of Fortune. It was written and sung by the band's lead guitarist, Donald "Buck Dharma" Roeser and was produced by David Lucas, Murray Krugman, and Sandy Pearlman. During the song, as if Donald knew or seen the art works, they sing about not being afraid to take death's hand, or take hold of the Reaper's hand to thus fly off with the Reaper.⁴⁹⁵⁷

Matthew 24:5, 9-11, warns of counterfeit Christs, or "false Christs" that will deceive many. "Then shall many be offended" (24:10). The world offended is used to translate the Greek skandalizō, which means to "trip." In a religious context such as this, it means to "give up one's faith": "many will turn away from the faith" (NIV), or "many will fall from their faith" (REB). And "many false prophets shall rise, and shall deceive many" (24:11)... Acts 20:29-31. "Grievous wolves" will "enter in among" the Church, and they will not spare the flock (20:29). "Of your own selves" men will arise, teaching "perverse things" so they can "draw away disciples after them" (20:30), or "in order to get the disciples to break away and follow them" (REB)... 2 Peter 2:1-3. Thus they will "make merchandise of you" with false doctrine (2:3): "feigned words" (KJV)... "sheer fabrications" (REB).⁴⁹⁵⁸

To "trip," be "draw away," & to "break away," or turn from the right hand path to be thus grasped by counterfeit hand & wrist grips, is to apostatize away from the true mysteries of Christ, to the dark fallen counterfeit variable types of mysteries of Satan, as given in the secret societies, secret combinations & the occult. "Grievous wolves," in sheep's clothing, (Matthew 7:15-16; Romans 16:17-27. Acts 20:28-31), is still a symbol of counterfeiting, pretending to be someone, or to be something that one is not. Thus, also the counterfeit ropes, once white, blacked by sins to black robes. To fabricate means to make something up, perhaps to counterfeit of something. I wonder if part of the "fabric" part of the word "FABRICate, has historical roots in counterfeit garment themes? Thus, to have counterfeit teachers to put off, or take off clothing, to stand naked before those in the ritual who see, (but for lustful purposes). Unlike in early Christian mysteries, where supposedly, in some cases there were precautions made for them being naked, such as a veil to separate those of the opposite sex, who might see, & thus cause wandering eyes, & wandering distracting thoughts).⁴⁹⁵⁹ If naked, would they then be clothed in ritualistic black counterfeit garments of the false mysteries of Satan?⁴⁹⁶⁰ For as the “mystery of iniquity” was already at work in the counterfeit mysteries of the pagans in Paul’s day, teaching counterfeit deification, (2 Thessalonians 2:1-12), so also in the mystery of iniquity alive in modern Satanism & the occultic secret societies.⁴⁹⁶¹

As the early Christians had “secret teachings,” the mysteries, so also do Satan & his followers, in his & their counterfeits of those “secret teachings,” that reversed the good into evil. “Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness....” (Isaiah 5:20). In the occult lore, “the secret teachings,” & lists of their characteristics, have made their way into the magic traditions, some eventually to end up in English fairy tales as the contents of the magician’s “one big book bound in black calf and clasped with iron, and with iron corners.”⁴⁹⁶² Color symbolism from the Middle Ages has black, for envy, as personified as “a black dog” a negative virtue, in deification themes of symbolism about those seeking to avoid that negative trait, & others, while they acquire the numerous positive virtues, in their quests for perfection.⁴⁹⁶³

As colors symbolism of white & black, used by both early to later Christians, & by those in the occult & the “dark arts,” faded off into legends, later traditions, fairy tales, & myths. Many hints to ritualistic garment color symbolism show up in the legendization process that turns the symbolism further into some of the themes in later fables. “It may further be observed, that not unfrequently a change of religious faith has invested with dark and malignant attributes beings once the objects of love, confidence, and veneration.”⁴⁹⁶⁴ Aspects of the doctrines of deification & demonification, with white as a symbol for deification (white robes symbolizing the type of glorious resurrected body the deified body will clothe the deified spirit in). In contrast to the reversal of white to black, symbolic of demonification, (black robes sometimes associated with the dark arts, black magic, the occult & left hand path, where those who go down it become more & more like the devil & his demons, or develop the negative traits). Such aspects also shows up in the later fables, that includes the different traits the deified or demonified are believed to be able to do, such as fairies giving the gift of penetrating the thoughts of men, and of transporting himself and others from place to place with a wish. Raising, or removing castles, palaces, gardens, banquets, & such like abilities.⁴⁹⁶⁵ But also, the garment themes of spots, unspotted, purity, impurity, & other opposites. For example, amongst “false fairies,” such as a being as Belphebe, whose “whole creation did her shew Pure and unspotted from all loathly crime, That is ingenerate in fleshly slime, was born of a Fairie.”⁴⁹⁶⁶

Black & White Colors & Clothing in later Legendized Stories, Plays, Movies & The Use of Modern Color Symbolism: “The light of the body is the eye: therefore when thine eye is single, thy whole body also is full of light; but when thine eye is evil, thy body also is full of darkness. Take heed therefore that the light which is in thee be not darkness. If thy whole body therefore be full of light, having no part dark, the whole shall be full of light, as when the bright shining a candle doth give thee light.” (Luke 11:34-36). Matthew 6:23: “But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!” Romans 1:21, “Because that, when they knew God, they glorified him not as God, neither were thankful; but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened.” “Having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart.” Ephesians 4:18.

After 132, the Apocalypse of Peter, considered canonical in Clement of Alexandria’s thinking, mentioned as being a New Testament book, in the Muratorian Fragment. Also, read in some of the churches of Palestine annually, according to Sozomenos, for it was read in preparation for the celebration of Easter about 440 A.D. However, others rejected it, & it was contested as canonical & non in different areas of Christendom, but received as canonical but not without protest in other areas. It was lost until about 1887, when a fragment written in Greek was found in Akhmim, Egypt, then a complete Ethiopic version in 1910. Thus, in the Apocalypse of Peter, Jesus is said to reveal to Peter some of the things going on in Heaven & Hell. Of interest here is how that in Heaven: “...The inhabitants of the space were clothed with the robes of radiant angels; and similar were their robes to their surroundings.... The glory of all who lived there was the same...” In contrast, Hell was opposite, for “...those who are punished there and the punishing angels had their robes dark; as the color of the air of the place is also dark.... [there were those] who had blasphemed the path of righteousness...” Other color symbolism & descriptions of darkness, garment themes & types are mentioned too, with “worms like dark clouds,” assaulting different ones. Others are thrown into a dark place and were scourged by evil spirits. In another place, women & men in dirty rags were wallowing on them in torment. There were those who had polluted their own bodies.⁴⁹⁶⁷

A 10th century German nun, Hroswitha, a play writer, used color symbolism in the play, The Conversion of Thais the Prostitute. During which the hermit, Paphnutius, speaks of Thais, who dies and is resurrected, her body is said to “...join the snow white sheep in heaven.”⁴⁹⁶⁸

In later centuries, mystery plays, moral plays, and “Theatre” or Theater, kept alive some aspects of garment traditions. For example, the allegorical play, the Order of Virtues, late 1140s, by Hildegard, a distinguished German abbess. In the play, the “...protagonist, called the Soul, begins the play sewing her white garment of immortality, but casts the garment off when she encounters the Devil.”⁴⁹⁶⁹ Later in the play the personified Virtues descend into the body of the church and “...enchain the Devil so that Charity can trample his head beneath her heel. Now physically grotesque and covered in painted wounds, the Soul mounts the steps, puts on a new costume called ‘the armour of light’, and ascends to Heaven.”⁴⁹⁷⁰

Black color animals were often associated with evil, death, & ghost hauntings. Europe has its haunted houses & battlefields, Rome had a haunted bridge – the Ponte Sisto, for crossing the Tiber not far from the Farnese Palace. On dark nights, it was said by those who loitered on the quay of the Lungotevere dei Vallati, that they’d seen a black coach, drawn by black horses, engulfed in “the flames of perdition.” It crossed the bridge, & inside riding was the ghost of Olimpia Maidalchini Pamphili, who in life had become rich off at the papacy’s expense. She was clutching 2 gold coffers, she’d taken from under the bed of the dying Pope Innocent X. Like the black hounds of hell, these were the black horses of hell.⁴⁹⁷¹

In the movie, Legend, starring Tom Cruise, & Mia Sara, who plays the part of the beautiful innocent fair young Princess Lily. The movie has a number of cases of the use of color symbolisms, of references to pitch black heart goblins, up to no good, as they obey the commands of the Lord of Darkness, who shuns the light of day. Of innocents being shaded by the “sin” of reaching out and touching a white-colored unicorn, thus causing the winter season and darkness to start gaining power. There’s a part where Lily is in the dark chambers of the Dark Lord; she is dressed in a white dress, but while dancing, a black colored dress figure joins her in the dance. As they dance, they blend as one, and Lily's dress is changed from white to black, symbolic, I suppose, of her transformation from innocence, towards becoming more darkened by giving in a little more, to the temptations presented to her. These consist of jewelry, of food, drink, and other things that are supposed to "change her," to becoming a creature of the darkness. Cruise, playing Jack, gets a shield & sword & encounters in a swampy area, an ugly female water devil type creature that wants to eat Jack. Perhaps such things are based on water devils or fallen angels that are said to have fallen down into the lakes, rivers, streams, & perhaps even the swampy marshes.⁴⁹⁷²

In J. R. Tolkien's series, The Lord of the Rings, it's also the evil behavior of Smeagol, later called Gollum, that darkens his countenance. Having taken a magic ring by murder, he retrogressed down, liked to dress in black, lived in deep dark caves, as he is driven down into the deep dark places. Living in darkness for a long time, he is demonified by the magical ring that was forged & belonged to the Dark Lord, Sauron. The movie series depicts a warning how "the Dark Lord on his dark throne in the Land of Mordor where the Shadows lie. One Ring to rule them all, One Ring to find them, One ring to bring them all and in the darkness bind them." The writer of the series, John Ronald Reuel Tolkien, was a devout Roman Catholic and believed firmly in the truths of Christianity, and was influenced by & used earlier Christian symbols & types in his fictional series. Gandalf, a Maia, or minor god or angel, is first called "Gandalf the grey." However, this powerful wizard becomes more powerful after a battle with a demon from the ancient world, Balrog. Like Michael the arch-angel, he battles a devil, who attempts to cross the treacherous Bridge of Khazad-dum, the demon Balrog & Gandalf fall into the deep places of the earth, the dark pit in Moria, & Gandalf kills the demon, but is almost killed himself. He has a near death experience, returns back to Eru (god). Then returns to his body, changed & then is later called "Gandalf the white." His grey robes are changed to white bright & glorious robes like many heroes do in historic Christian writings. In the story, the elves and men of Gondor call Gandalf "Mithrandir" which means: the gray pilgrim. The symbolic color types of the changing of robe colors from gray to bright white are types of Christ. It's Gandalf's behavior, his acts of kindness, his willingness to protect his friends & act as a shield against evils, that reflects early to later Christian types: "In the person of Gandalf, Tolkien attempts to show his readers the power of Christ's sacrifice on the Cross, descent into darkness, resurrection, and glorification in his new body!"⁴⁹⁷³

J. R. R. Tolkien also uses a lot of color symbolism in his fantasy series, The Lord of the Rings, also light and darkness, symbolic of the contrasts between the two opposites, good and evil. As in the book, In the later movie series, The Lord of the Rings, 1st movie, The Fellowship of the Ring, it is as though they are being forged, purified by a refiners' fire of trial, testing, hardships, battles with evil, and descends into the underworld type under the mountain descent into the deep mines, where evil creatures dwell. It's like Tolkien legendized the descent dramas of historic Christianity, and Greek mythologies' heroes descends into hades, and blended in Celtic magical mythologies too. We note an increase in power, of a wizard, Gandalf, after he, like Michael the arch angel, battles Satan, or Lucifer, and thrusts him out, after which Lucifer becomes a fallen angel. In the underworld of Christ's descent into hell, hades, limbo, purgatory, the Anastasis, The lands of the Dark Lord, in The Return of the Kings, wasn't a happy place to be in,

there were all kinds of dangers, and awful creatures that they had to look out for. Thus, it's called "the darkened land."⁴⁹⁷⁴

In historic Christianity, they ascend up out of the font, in some cases by a ritualistic helping hand clasp, just as hand and wrist clasping are often seen depicted in Christ's raising up Adam and others from the grave, pit, underworld, hades, limbo, purgatory, the Anastasis, by different types of hand and wrist grasping. In baptism, the naked person is then clothed in a new garment, robe, or covering, often times white, symbolic of the soul being clothed in a protective garment, often seen in art works that show the souls' after life ascension into heaven, paradise, or in mid air ascents. The color of these blankets, clothing, robes, or coverings are often white. It may be that Tolkien was familiar with these historic Christian types of journeys of the soul and incorporated the symbolisms in his book series.⁴⁹⁷⁵

In the fables of the ancient religion of Scandinavia, & probably the whole of Gotho-German race, perhaps pre-existence themes with color symbolism seem to played a part in their fables about demons & good spirits. Those of good and elevated nature & are friendly towards people are called "White or Light Alfs or Spirits." While the bad Dæmons, or Demons, especially the underground ones, were called Svartálfar, or "Black Spirits, or mischievous Trolls." In other fables, are Ljosálfar or Light Alfs, & the Dökkálfar, or Dark Alfs that dwell below under the ground. They are unlike each other in actions & appearances, one being whiter than the sun, the ones blacker than pitch.⁴⁹⁷⁶

In Scandinavia, the peasantry traditions & fables tell of the Elves, The Alfar, distinguished by colors, White and Black. The white are the good Elves, that dwell in the air, dance on the grass, sit on the leaves of trees. The black ones, are evil elves, underground people, they frequently inflict sickness or injury on mankind.⁴⁹⁷⁷

In the Baltic, to the Isle of Rügen, The inhabitants of Rügen, believe in three kinds of Dwarfs, or underground people, the White, Brown & Black. The Black Spirits, the Dark Alfs, seek to torment & injure the human family, & are mischievous. Black Dwarfs wear black jackets and caps, and are ugly, with weeping eyes. In contrast, White Dwarfs are delicate, beautiful, and of an innocent & gentle disposition. In the fable, The Wonderful Plough, a farmer was master of a black one, that are the blacksmiths & armorers. The farmer saw a bright insect, going backwards & forwards on the cross, as if in pain, wanting to get away. Next morning he saw it again, suspicious about it, he thought: "Would this be one of the black enchanters? For certain, all is not right with the insect; it runs about just like one that had an evil conscience, as one that would, yet cannot go away." He'd heard from his father & old folks, how that the underground people, should they happen to touch anything holy, they are held fast & cannot quit the spot. Thus, they are careful to avoid touching such holy things. The farmer grabs the insect to find that he had, by the top of the head, a little ugly black chap, 6 inches long, screeching & kicking furiously. The little black ones, this species is said to be the most malicious and obstinate of all the underground race. The farmer took the black one & put him in a black iron pot, kept him there until he swore an oath to make the farmer "an iron plough," thus the black one swore, the farmer let him go & the next morning it was there in his yard.⁴⁹⁷⁸ This fable's pre-existence themes in legendized form, might be understood in light of later Christian art works that show fallen angels as insect type creatures.⁴⁹⁷⁹

In another series, it's the evil behavior that darkens the countenance of the fictional character, Tom Riddle, who used black magic to murder for revenge & gain. He eventually become changed by the dark arts, liked to dress in black, & became known as the Dark Lord Voldemort, in the Harry Potter series, by J. K. Rowling. Voldemort's "Death Eaters" like to dress in black too, thus dark, light, & color symbolism used, which doesn't have anything to do with actual skin colors.

Like in J. K. Rowling's Harry Potter series, where color symbolism, light & darkness types run throughout the whole series. Teachers who use the dark arts, dressed in black robes. References to "the dark Lord," to the forbidden black arts. Plus, even different ones' comments about the movie series as getting progressively darker, with even lighting effects, that make the scenes darker. There are even those who talk about how dark the movie series is getting towards the final battle between white defensive magic & murderous black magic. There's also the issue amongst the "pure bloods," who are magical people with both parents who practice magic. Then "half-bloods," only one parent who does; & mud-bloods, a magical person who has no parents that practice magic. In 15th century Spain, La Celestina, told in an earthly, comic style, that portrays "the impossible love affair between an Old Christian of pure blood and a conversa whose blood is polluted by her Jewish ancestry."⁴⁹⁸⁰ These types of anti-Jewish ideologies filtered down into Germany, before, during and after the two great world wars.

Color symbolism was passed down in Whitesunday vrs Black Sabbath, etc. Christians are clothed in white, symbolic of purity, Satanists wear black hooded robes, symbolic of the dark arts of black magic. So those color symbolism still are in use down to modern times.

Old black & white cow boys & Indians movies used color symbolism too, white hats for good guys, black hat for bad. Its ancient color symbolism passed down to our time.⁴⁹⁸¹

DEIFICATION LORE FADES OFF INTO RELIC MAGIC: In their progress towards Christian perfection, the stories about them performing cures, gathering about them different animals, as if able to talk their language, or slaying dragons, healing the sick, miraculous modes of travel, plus many other miracles performed, are part of the deification lore that was passed down in later Christian legends.⁴⁹⁸²

Thus, in later centuries, deification themes seem to have passed over into the legends of what the early to later Christian saints could do. The "divine favors" of being able to work miracles, even after their deaths, through the relics that were associated with them, or their body remains, such as a bone, a tooth, hair, etc. Or something they were said to have worn, or possessed, a fragment of their clothing, etc. These relics, real or not, actual or manufactured, became parts of the different systems of relic magic & their holders' claims to the wonders associated with them. The stories, & lore, that grew from possessing different relics, were sometimes used by the clergy or rich Lords, or Political religious leaders of the Middle Ages on into the Reformation, to make money off of the pilgrimages to see & touch such "powerful" relics.⁴⁹⁸³ "In an age of faith tales of miracles abounded, and they were solemnly recounted from the pulpit and by the fireside. Eagerness to see wonders brought the wonders to life—bleeding statues, miraculous cures, resurrections, reversals of nature's laws. Men were not the only beneficiaries of the saints' intercessions." Animals were too. When the devil sent a frightening storm, a bishop, performing mass, could point at the relic, an arm of St. Simeon, so that the storm was unable to do damage to unfinished holy places being built, so the stories go.⁴⁹⁸⁴ Thus, it became very popular amongst those who could afford it, to established large collections of different types of relics. Deification themes thus faded off into & became part of the "divine" powers in relic-lore that grew out of the different claims as to the "divine powers" attributed to relics of the saints. Also, of the merits & patronage powers of protection, cures, & other wonders pooled together to thus be tapped into from the collective goodness & merits of the saints. For it was believed that the patron saints could be called upon for help with different types of problems, issues & for numerous reasons. In so doing, their specialties, their powers, gifts, & merits could thus be used, so it was believed, to help Christian Kings, Queens, Lords, Knights, the Clergy, on down to the common folks, to overcome many difficult circumstances, & offer protection by diverting possible tragedies.⁴⁹⁸⁵

"The Archbishop of Cologne pillaged the relics of the Magi (!) From fallen Milan in 1162, and the crusaders looted Constantinople's relics in 1204. James of Vitry hung a finger of Mary of Oignies encased in silver on his necklace, giving it to Pope Gregory IX 'to carry against the vice of swearing by which he was atrociously tempted'.... Nor were contemporaries shocked when Countess Theodor, Thomas Aquinas's sister, 'asked for the right hand of the said holy body [Thomas's] from the Abbot of Fossanuova. Although fourteen years in the earth, he was unable to pull it easily off the body, and had to cut it off with a knife, and it gave off a wonderfully sweet odour to those venerating it.'"⁴⁹⁸⁶ So this story claims!

As saint-cults grew (based on, & surrounding the saints' specialized gifts, merits & abilities), claims to miraculous events began to spread, as such stories were circulated to give credibility to the relics. During the Middle Ages, on into the Spanish Inquisition era & the Reformation period such things were sanctioned "magic" or "miracles." So long as they were state-church & clerically approved rituals, the practitioners were on safer grounds in contrast to that which was alleged, & claimed to be counterfeited "miraculous" feats, as done by witches & those alleged to worshiped the Devil.⁴⁹⁸⁷ During those eras, a number of things alleged against a person, could mean being subjected to torture & forced-confessions, to then be burned at the stake for such alleged crimes against Christ & "his" church.⁴⁹⁸⁸

Before, during, & after the 16th century, different versions of what types of rituals, prayers, ceremonies, & other things used to tap into the divine powers of the Godhead, or the deified saints' powers, became on going issues. What was acceptable amongst the superstitious peasants, the common folk, & what was acceptable with canon laws & clerical ceremonies, became somewhat foggy & unclear for the peasants in different areas of Christendom, who didn't know, care, or always follow the particular clerical opinions in their areas. Especially when it came to their superstitious use of folk remedies, & folk "magic," to attempt to get the desired results in dealing with the difficulties, problems, challenges of their times & places.⁴⁹⁸⁹ Because the common peasants were blending in folk magic in with already paganized blends of the Catholic church's versions of acceptable canonical ceremonies & festivities. The unacceptable-versions & blends were vilified as heretical or witch craft, & thus, it was believed by many of the clergy that it must be cleansed out from amongst the peasantry, even by brutal methods, in some areas of Christendom. In the thinking of the clergy, the peasants' methods of cashing in on the merits of deified saints' deification powers, wasn't the acceptable way to go about doing it. For it was outside the church's control, & therefore such superstitious methods could be tainted with demonic counterfeits, so the clergymen could claim. A healing without the use of proper relics, for example, could be vilified as having been done by demonic powers, rather than by divine powers. Besides, there was money to be made off of the use of relics, indulgence sales, & fees for ceremonies, & it was a business that many who got a certain split in the percentages established, (in the monopoly of divine powers),⁴⁹⁹⁰ that they didn't want to see diminished, by unsanctioned "miracles," or other unauthorized withdrawing from the banks of deified saintly merits. Which deposits of good work-merits of saints, the saints throughout history & the martyrs, had built up by their faithfulness, & acquired gifts of deification powers, in having advanced towards deification, & moral Christian perfection.⁴⁹⁹¹ Thus, many in the clergy wanted to maintain control over other uses of unauthorized "powers" claimed to be from divine sources, because some in the clergy, & others were alleged to be manufacturing thousands of fragments of alleged relics, most of which all couldn't possibly be from those deified saints' body remains that they alleged they came from. Thus, such use of peasants' folk magic & other superstitious home remedies, natural cures, & herbal uses gathered from the forests, their farms, or that was imported from other countries. Such things as these had to be countered, & combated, for in the minds of an ever growing Inquisition of thought-policing investigators & their brutal "justice" system, they could invent their own "evidences" & make up their own verdicts as to what was of God, & what was born of witch craft, & thus vilified as being of the Devil.⁴⁹⁹² But, the closer that the blends came to what was blended with the churches' versions of the deification powers, the safer the practitioners were, provided that someone, motivated by whatever reasons, didn't turn them into the Inquisitors & vilified their blend with negative descriptions & alleged witness statements that the practitioners were practicing witchcraft. Thus, the outlawed blends were what the church tried to get rid of through brutal & satanic ethic cleansing tactics of forced confessions through the most cruel torturing devices that they could devise, all done in the holy name of Christ. For in the clerics' views, that which they called witchcraft, was "illegal witchcraft," because they said so, & thus subjecting the accused to all manners of wicked torturing devices to get forced confessions of heresies & the use of witchcraft.⁴⁹⁹³ This thought policing was being done by those who all the while practiced their own superstitious versions of what others might consider as magical.⁴⁹⁹⁴ Promises of success in life, promises of salvation, of miracles to accomplish desired outcomes, often fell under the close watchful, & even spying eyes, of the Inquisition that was out inquiring, investigating, thought policing, & interpreting case by case strange happenings or claims. Interpreting & giving out case by case verdicts as to what were the acceptable use of alleged powers that seem to be unusual indications of deification powers alleged to be at work. But also, of what was not God's powers, but those of demons, their post-fall from heaven activities, (again legendized faded pre-existence themes).⁴⁹⁹⁵ Thus, there were their interpretations, & verdicts, of what would be the church's saintly advancing towards deification, with all the merits, powers, & alleged miracles that followed the faithful. Often-times, such claims to "miracles," had to be done under the Church's control & their institutionalized acceptable sacramental ways, & acceptable ways of performing rites, or doing established methods of canonical ceremonies to bring about those "miracles."⁴⁹⁹⁶ Otherwise, anything outside of their control was suspected of being done by the demons & the Devil, who often would try to trick & take credit for Church "miracles," or counterfeit them in order to draw carefully at first, then drag violently, believing souls to their doom!⁴⁹⁹⁷ Such things eventually became the stuff of folklore stories, later legends, fables, & demonology lore that grew in popularity, as deification powers were said & believed to be imitated by demons.⁴⁹⁹⁸ This counterfeiting of deification powers, exasperated the

Saints who were doing the same types of things for good, with their own deification powers, gifts, & divine abilities, as given to them by God. Plus, of which they had worked hard to acquire through their faithfulness, good works, & step by step, or rung by rung climbs up the ladders towards Christian moral perfection, where each Christ-like-trait worked on, & developed in their own lives, had empowered them with more deification powers.⁴⁹⁹⁹ Thus, in dogmatic theory, not always in practice, even in the monasteries, with the monks working on purification of themselves, through penances, & the quests for moral perfection, which sometimes didn't always happen because of human weaknesses. But despite their good intentions, corruption & other issues that entered in, clouded their efforts at times, & thus darkened their attempts to progress towards deification powers. Then, again, under theocracies of the Middle Ages, & later ones that developed at times, the acceptable forms of magic, in the thinking of the Inquisition & the Catholic church, were such things as Relic magic, & the stories of miracles surrounding them.⁵⁰⁰⁰ Such things were not considered as "witchcraft," or "black magic," because they were under the deification powers of the saints, who had been deified, like the Virgin Mary, & other saints, each with their special powers, gifts & merits to be tapped into upon performing the right types of prayers, rituals, & communions with the patron saints, so it's believed. Or other communications with them to get their help with different problems, needs, & work through different types of difficult situations.⁵⁰⁰¹ But such things, to an outsider or non-Christian, might seem magical. But to declare such things as magical & heretical could get the unbeliever, (during the Middle Ages, on into the thought policing witch hunting era as), into literal hot water, or some other torturing device for being "guilty" of heresy, or blasphemy. Thus, in the clerics, nobles, royalties, & peasants' eyes & ways of thinking was the acceptable "legal -magic" available for help. The acceptable ways to get access to the divine-powers, of deity & the deified, was through the "divine" sacraments, pilgrimages, sprinkling of holy water, mass-readings, indulgences, holy relics & other rites, though blended with many pagan elements by that time. Such ways were believed would accomplish the desire results: Saving souls out of purgatory, saving souls from spending more time there. Plus, healings, purifications, preparations for afterlife deification, assuring protections against evils, bad weather, plagues, protection against demonic forces at work, obtaining more & better crops, more customers, protection in travel, & so forth. There developed ever growing lists of patron saints, with festival days, or days on the calender in honor of them and their deification qualities and their saintly accomplishments, or ways they defeated or confronted the legions of demons scattered throughout the world. Or how they even overcame the Devil, himself, all of which made them qualify as being canonized as saints. Plus, instructions on how to get access to their merits, their divine powers, or specialties that one might need to get access to in the communion with them. They had passed by the angels & were becoming more & more perfected & deified, & thus, as 'gods' or 'goddesses,' ranked under the Godhead, they could be called upon in prayers to them for help. Thus, as deification themes became more legendized, these are the types of Christian moral perfection themes that arose over time.⁵⁰⁰²

So while some were being hunted & prosecuted as witches for practicing illegal "magic," being accused of witchcraft or heresies, others used the acceptable "magic" of the times, by collecting relics, & the 16th century was a time of great collections reported. The Inquisition left this type of church sponsored "magic" alone, besides, like the sale of indulgences, relics were a money making business collected from those who went on pilgrimages, & paid to be near to benefit from the deification powers, such as cures, etc., that was believed radiated out from the different relics.⁵⁰⁰³ The established church's "magic" developed "...the notion of witchcraft by a discrimination between its own miracles and those of other people who are unbelievers. How similar the notions of legitimate and illegitimate miracles are, may be learned from the writings of Agrippa of Nettesheim (1486–1535),... who proclaimed that the perfection of philosophy could be attained by magic, which in distinction to black magic... he called "natural" or "celestial" magic, and which, he assumed, leads to a perfect union with God."⁵⁰⁰⁴

Agrippa's book De Occulta Philosophia, written in 1510, published in 1531, presented his beliefs that the possibility of creating hatred & love by spells, or discovering thieves, confounding armies, changing weather patterns to make it thunder & rain, & these types of things were said to be accomplished by magic through a mystical communion with God. But for some reason: "In spite of the resemblance which Agrippa unconsciously had discovered between witchcraft and miracles, he remained unmolested, for his views were at the time commonly accepted."⁵⁰⁰⁵ But these were the same types of things that the common person would like to be able to do through the deified saints. It was a rivalry between the quests for abilities that different ones sought by going down opposite paths, towards deification, or towards demonification.

During these much later centuries, the deification concepts of love, kindness, charity, & other positive Christ like traits that the good monks & others were trying to develop, despite human weaknesses, that we all have. Unfortunately, such things & themes became almost lost in the back ground, & overshadowed by the tragic demonic actions of corrupt clergy & Inquisition thought police torture systems, clothed in the name of "Christianity." For was Christ like behavior Christian? Or did Devil like behavior of the Inquisition make them "Christian"? If devilish means to force Christianize unbelievers into accepting "Christianity," was the acceptable thing to do, for it was the "Christian" thing to do. Were the Devil & his demons then just as "Christian" in their behavior, doing the same types of tortures in hell fire, that art works depicted them doing to souls being demonified? It must have been scary & confusing for the peasantry & nonbelievers back then to encounter such contradictions in behavior & in being subjected to such harsh theocracies. As the dark nights of the apostasy, by the later centuries, had blended deification themes in with demonification practices, not much was left of the pure Christianity that was taught by Christ & his apostles: "All in all, we find that a religion of magic involves a belief in witchcraft. Where sacraments are employed as exorcisms, every attempt to exercising extraordinary powers is regarded not as impossible but as a lack of loyalty. Hence heresy and witchcraft are always declared to be closely allied, for witchcraft is nothing but the performance of miracles without the licence of an established Church, which claims to have a monopoly in supernaturalism."⁵⁰⁰⁶

During the Middle Ages on towards the witch hunting days of the Inquisition & Reformation, the deification themes were still there, but were sometimes over shadowed by popular lore, superstitions, & suspected quests in lore, accusations, & verdicts of witchcraft from those "fighting" against those alleged to be seeking demonification on the left-hand path. Thus, demonification themes, the reversal of deification, was part of the gossip & folk-lore of the times. In demon-lore the powers, super-human abilities, & other counterfeit benefits of siding with the Dark Lord & devils was tempting enough for many to venture forth down the dark left-hand path. But there were always terrible prices to pay for those that did fall for the temptations of what was believed to be offered by the devil & legions of fallen-angels, demonified as dark-devils. Thus, if one couldn't stay on the right-hand path towards the good powers acquired for the benefits of others & one's self, by the following the examples of Christ & the holy righteous saints, & advance like them towards gaining the same types of powers in the ascent towards Christian moral perfection.⁵⁰⁰⁷ Then one could risk getting the same types of powers, & abilities, so it was believed, by going down the left-hand path in making pacts with the Devil, or becoming involved in illegal witchcraft, & hopes that the Inquisition wouldn't find out. Thus, some, in attempting to make contracts with the devil, it was believed, that they'd sold their souls for such powers as becoming bullet proof, especially when gun powder & guns were invented, like in the case with Soldiers who entered into pacts. Or methods of predicting the future. While others tried to become rich through magic. But the devils' powers also could do a lot of harm, & according to devil-lore, they could cause blindness, people to be lame, kill with a mere glance, etc. These, plus many more, were the types of things lore says that many sought after.⁵⁰⁰⁸

In magical devil-lore, the reversal & rival of deification powers, (or those powers, abilities from the miracle-producing spiritual gifts, & righteous use of powers & superhuman abilities, as used by the saints, good angels, true prophets, & apostles, plus those in moments of faith filled prayers, that protects, benefits others, & in some cases helps overcome different challenges). These different super-human abilities recorded in scriptures, history & legends, also have their rival counterparts, rival miraculous counterfeited substitutes for deification powers & abilities, except done by different means & powers. Rival powers, believed to have been done by demonic backed demonification powers through magical means. Often done to benefit the lusts & evil desires of the one(s) using such rival powers & abilities.⁵⁰⁰⁹ Thus, like the accounts & later legends about what the early to later Christian saints could do; in magical devil-lore, different magicians, witches, sorcerers, & those who practice the dark arts of black magic & the occult, have their own magical lore, for example, its alleged, & perhaps in vilification polemics, charged that even some popes are said to have made pacts with the Devil. For example, Pope Sylvester II., who was born in Aquitaine, France, about 950, was later fabled as being able to fly! Known earlier in life as Gerbert, he had entered the cloister, when a boy, & was educated in a Benedictine monastery. Departing from perhaps truer accounts, magical lore paints him with the ambitions for greater knowledge, which is not bad in & of itself, but lore charged that he was also seeking the dark kind of magical knowledge, that inspired him to fly through the air to Spain. There he studied astrology and magic among the Saracens,⁵⁰¹⁰ (the Middle Ages Christians' name for a dark skin race, the Arabian-Muslims). By those later centuries, as color symbolism had turned literal in associating dark-skinned races, with the black skinned demons in art, writings, & lore. So also were the Saracens-black skinned Arabian-Muslims vilified as devils! Whom, of course used magical powers, the dark arts, like other devils used. Thus, according to lore, who better to learn the dark arts from than those "evil" Saracens? Some examples of polemical vilification views of them are in the 8th c., polemical work by John of Damascus, who criticized them as followers of a false prophet & "forerunners[s] to the Antichrist."⁵⁰¹¹ Another example of vilification is a 1307 image from Paris, showing French knights encountering Muslims, who are depicted as dark skin devils, with horns on their heads.⁵⁰¹² Gerbert allegedly stole a magic-book from the Saracens & flew back to France, where he is said to have set up his own school, acquired great fame, & even had the King as one of his disciples. He became bishop of Rheims, & had a magnificent cloak, & an organ constructed, & upon increasing the treasury of Emperor Octavian, in a subterranean vault at Rome. Gerbert was elevated to be the Pope Sylvester II, in 999. Strange stories about a magical head that answered his questions, & predictions of his death were fabled. Other fabled sources get into color symbolism, & lore about the devil taking on the shape of a black dog, which was said to accompanied the Pope. But the truth about this Pope is not so dramatic, he was said to have acquired a lot of good old knowledge of the time through diligent studies in different areas of scholastic opportunities given him, & with influential men of his time. But, over time, perhaps he was vilified in magical-demon-lore, because he was bold enough, when as a teacher and prelate in France, to strenuously oppose the pretensions of unworthy Italian pontiffs. In later becoming a Pope, & in having denounced some of his unworthy predecessors as “monsters of more than human iniquity,” and as “Antichrist, sitting in the temple of God and playing the part of God.” He could have thus been vilified as having studied magic which lore said he flew around with. But then, again, back to a truer account, even though he’d denounced the unworthy abuse of deification powers of prior Italian popes, when it was his turn, as a Pope, he had his own vigorous papal-policy, & behaved as a thoroughly authoritarian reformist, castigating simony and misconduct among the clergy & even forcing King Robert of France to get rid of his wife. He also spent a lot of time expanding the church in Eastern Europe.⁵⁰¹³

1749–1832, Johann Wolfgang von Goethe, Romantic poet, authored of Faust, presents a blend of preexistence themes with deification. For Goethe, a preexistence was the life of the past, while deification would become the life of the future, the progress towards divinations. The exalted ancestral realms (Gefilden hoher Ahnen), connote a distant past that anticipates future glory, for there was a shadowy, pre-mortal existence that is behind us, and theosis is the eventual destiny awaiting us subsequent to our return to glory there. As to that past, only dim recollections of some foregone state, or former states or circumstances through which we’ve passed is dimly recalled. The reason for this loss of memory, is because that past is too insignificant and mean, for much of it to have been, in the eyes of Nature, worthy to be remembered again. To his contemporary the poet Christoph Martin Wieland, that if he seen him a thousand years in the future, hinting to him being deified by then, he said that he would witness how he quickened and cheered every thing that approached him by his beautiful light. Further on he continues the deification theme, how that “We can admit no other destination for monads, than, as blessed co-operating Powers, to share eternally in the immortal joy of gods. The work of creation is intrusted to them.” Goethe, citing Diderot’s provocative version of theosis: “If there is not a God, yet, there will be one.”⁵⁰¹⁴

Terryl L. Givens notes in his study on the preexistence: “Although preexistence is not an essential prerequisite to the doctrine of theosis, we have seen the connection repeatedly. Human origins in a realm of purer spirit, earlier associations with divinity.... [Thus] theosis frequently follows from a doctrine of pre-mortal existence.” A spiral, or return to glory, bringing the soul back to the point of origin.⁵⁰¹⁵

19th century, by these later centuries, when the apostasy had taken its toll, especially in some areas of aged Christendom, there still were many later Christians doing the best they could with what light & knowledge they had, doing good to others, living as Christ like a life as they could. While others, because of the blend of paganized Christian concepts, & Christianize-paganism processes had gone on for centuries, there was also a blending of dark satanic practices too. One of these was the satanic practice that was regarded as “Christian” & even backed by Christian authorities, sanctioned as being a required rite, for erecting churches. If the reports are true, which is doubtful, during the 19th century, innocent children were sacrificed when buried in the repair work of dikes, in other cases, a priest had to be buried under the erecting of churches. It is alleged that the Strassburg cathedral required the sacrifice of 2 humans lives, thus 2 brothers lie buried in its foundation.⁵⁰¹⁶ “As recently as the 19th Century, it was a custom in Europe to endow a building with good fortune by incorporating bread (the staff of life) and [white] salt (symbol of purity) in the foundation.... [While] in Scandinavia, [century?] – in church as well as house construction – that ghosts of the sacrificed animals were given a special name: kirkevarer, or “church wares” or “church inhabitants.” The animal chosen might be the first one that wandered near the building site; more often, it was a lamb, and it was buried beneath the altar.”⁵⁰¹⁷

In later centuries, a blend of pagan-Christian versions of saint-cult-magic gave way to different “magical” practices where the miraculous feats of the Catholic & Eastern Orthodox saints & their powers, were believed by different saint-cults to help bring about different variations of desired effects in superstitious practices & white magic types of potions & spells for good desired effects, not for black magic evils, for some of the spells were anti-black magic types.⁵⁰¹⁸

In time, as lore turned into more superstitious practices,⁵⁰¹⁹ the blends of pagan & other cultures’ “magical” practices, plus saints’ specialized powers, resulted in the rise of different more saint-cults. Ones that used the saint-magical-lore to create their own formulas, magical spells, & potions for different desired effects believed to come about with the help of the “magical powers” of different saints. Such as in Santa Muerte, the cult of “holy death,” though opposed by the Catholic church, it arose as a female folk saint, venerated primarily in Mexico and the Southwestern United States. A personification of death, she is associated with healing, protection, and safe delivery to the afterlife by her devotees.⁵⁰²⁰ As deification themes faded off into such claims to saintly powers, different rituals developed with the hopes of bringing about different desired effects in the lives of the practitioners: To send away bad friendships from our partners. Rituals against Black Magic. Ones done to send away a lover. Another ritual to get a partner to help you economically. One done for protection against gossip. To resolve legal problems. Others to increase sales in businesses, for protection, love, to persuade, etc.⁵⁰²¹

1900, Dr. Paul Carus, 1852–1919, on demonification themes in contrast to deification themes, he, as did other writers & observers of that time, noted, at a time when Sciences were helping with coming up with new inventions, which if righteous ethically used properly, could help, & were helping with great improvements in physical life. Plus, how that they seemed to be helping in the progressing towards more truth, & better ways of spiritual life. This, as also noted by other writers, is in contrast to the abuse of sciences’ productions of inventions, that often get negatively weaponized, & thus cause a lot of harm to the human family.⁵⁰²² In being amongst those who lived during the ever increasing emergences of scientific truths & new inventions, he wrote these observations, but only after writing first, as did others, about the difficulties of the era in European history that thought policing witch-persecutions & heretic hunting days had caused, in terrorizing & demoralizing Europe, & that spread to the American 13 colonies, 1600s, & religious freedoms suppressed under theocracies, & the lack of the spiritual gifts, before the USA's constitution. Which was debated out, reasoned out, & divinely inspired to be written into foundational law, that at least started to help towards more toleration & better attitudes towards how each religionists ought to treat & respect each other over, despite many differences. But, although the constitution didn't completely rid America of harsh polemics & thought policing groups of people that mobbed others, or persecuted their rival religions that gained powers in different areas. It at least offered some foundational settings for religious freedoms to be worked out more, over time.⁵⁰²³ With these things in mind, Carus wrote: "...Protestantism is not as yet the last word spoken in the religious development of mankind. We must look to higher aims and more positive issues, and a new reformation of the Church will obtain them only on the condition of its again recognising the importance of objectivity.... Mankind will not return to the dogmatic system of hierarchical institutions, which would only bind again the consciences of men by man-made authority. But the fact must be recognised that truth is not a mere subjective conception; it must be seen that truth is a statement of facts, and, accordingly, that it contains an objective element... [that] is the essential part of truth.... In the old period of objectives, the ultimate authority was lodged in great men, prophets, reformers, and priests, whose spirit, after it had been adapted to the needs of the powerful, was embodied in Church institutions. The new objectivism discards all human authority; it rests ultimately upon science, which is an appeal to facts. Truth is no longer what the Church teaches, or what some infallible man may deem wise to proclaim; nor is it what appears to me as true, or to you as true; but it is that which according to methodical critique has been proved to be objectively true, i.e., so proved that everybody who investigates it will find it to be so.... Objective truth, demonstrable by evidence and capable of revision, or, in a word, Science, is the highest, the most reliable and the most valuable revelation of God. God reveals himself in the facts of life, among which we include our afflictions and personal experiences; God speaks in our conscience, which is, as it were, the moral instinct, the result of all our inherited and acquired experiences, and this is the reason why the voice of conscience makes itself heard in our souls with that automatic force which is characteristic of all deep-seated subconscious reactions. God also appears in our sentiments, our ideal aspirations, our devotions, our hopes and our yearnings. All these various manifestations are important and must not be lost sight of; but above them all is the objectivity of truth which speaks through science.... The faith of every man [& woman] should be the trust in truth, not in fairy tales that must be taken for granted, but in the truth,—the truth which is its main outlines is simple enough to be comprehensible to all,—the truth that this world of ours is a cosmic harmony in which no wrong can be done without producing evil effects all around."⁵⁰²⁴

As much later legendized versions of deification themes go, as the Catholic saints were believed to becoming deified, & as the powers that they acquired as they advanced towards deification, their powers, abilities, & legends about them, began to be mixed in with later superstitious folk magic beliefs in later centuries of the Dark Ages, the later Middle Ages. For the different Catholic saints & other saints in the Eastern Orthodox, were sometimes called upon to advert disasters, to heal the sick, to protect travelers, infants, & families. In much later extreme cases, the saints were even called upon to harm others, & this was thought to be a good thing amongst pious believers amongst the superstitious peasantry. For as lore blended with superstitious beliefs & legendized deification themes, the saint took on a mixture of traits & qualities. Delivering not only protection, but divine justice on those that had angered them. The concepts of them bringing evil for evil done, entered into the more superstitious use of evoking their powers for magical incantations. "On these lines the transition from Christian ethic to heathen magic was only too easy. The Church could not be held responsible, unless we are to blame her carelessness regarding the adulteration of the pure doctrine in the minds of the ignorant."⁵⁰²⁵ For example, Saint Anthony was believed to have fiery powers, & thus we read about different oaths that almost attributed to the saint, the part of an evil fire-demon: "Que Saint Antonie me arde (May Saint Anthony burn me!), Saint Antonie arde le tripot, Saint Antoinie arde la monture ('Saint Anthony burn the brothel! Saint Anthony burn the beast!')".⁵⁰²⁶ Such types of things found their ways into folk magic & later spell incantations of those involved in beliefs in Voo Doo type blends of Catholic saints' powers to do all kinds of harm to people, & Santeria, that uses many of the Catholic saints for their incantations. As does also the darker side of Palo Mayombe.

Robert Gaguin, De validorum per Franciam mendicantium varia astucia, describes beggars in these terms: "One falls on the ground expectorating [spitting] malodorous spittle and attributes his condition to Saint John. Others are covered with ulcers through the fault of Saint Fiace, the hermit. You, O Damian, prevent them from making water, Saint Anthony burns their joints, Saint Pius makes them lame and paralysed."⁵⁰²⁷ In one of his Colloquies, Erasmus makes fun of these superstitious beliefs & notes the product that the apostasy had made. He reasons & asks if the saints in heaven are more malevolent than they were on earth. 'Yes,' answers the other, for 'in the glory of Paradise the saints do not choose to be insulted. Who was sweeter than Saint Cornelius, more compassionate than Saint Anthony, more patient than Saint John the Baptist, during their lives? And now what horrible maladies they send if they are not properly honoured!'"⁵⁰²⁸

During the Middle Ages: "The deficiencies in human resources were supplied by the power of the saints. They were great power-houses in the fight against evil; they filled the gaps left in the structure of human justice.... The saints were indeed very businesslike; there was noting mild or uncertain about the justice which they dispensed; they looked after their own."⁵⁰²⁹ Publications & stories about the powers of the saints, the 'miracles' attributed to them, became popular amongst the clergy & common folks, such as the Miracles of the Virgin, 12th century. Deification themes still retained to a certain extent, are seen in the devotion & veneration that was being shown the saints believed to be deified. Their powers, now legendary, were often associated with their physical remains, the relics, through which their spiritual powers were communicated to the physical world. For examples, it was believed that the presence of St. Remigicus had a powerful effect on the council of Rheims in 1049. While the monks of St. Benedict at Fleury used the body of their patron saint to defend their property, & even wrecked vengeance on the disturbers of their rights. In earlier centuries, it was believed that the powers of the saints were strongest at the location of where they'd died. But in time, during the 8th & 9th century, the eagerness of the people to have more easier access to their powers developed into the later trades in fragments of relics. For a share in the sacred remains broke down the prejudices against uprooting the saints from their original resting places & led to the scattering of the saints' dismembered bodies throughout Europe. Thus, from the 9th – the 11th century, every great church amassed a large collection of relics. This dispersal of the saints' remains, or alleged fragments, was also believed spread their powers to about every corner of Christendom. Stories of ‘miracles’ started to fill the different branches of literature in Christendom, in the centuries that followed. Those stories tell of their powers to heal, to repair injustices, to injure, to protect, to help travelers reach their destinations, plus many other things.⁵⁰³⁰

We might see how beliefs about these saints’ “powers” could, in superstitious minds, become something that the common folks might want to try to tap into, to help them with their problems, or counter an enemy, or get crops to grow, or whatever, during the Middle Ages & later, on down to our time. But why weren’t they then considered to be the same types of things as witchcraft? Why wouldn’t they then have been hunted down like heretics & witches were, should the common folks, or Catholic clerics, use the believed deified saints’ powers to their advantages, as they believed possible, for not only problem solving, for good, but also for obviously ill intentions, in many other cases? Thus, was this one of those sanctioned use of “divine” powers? Was this where official permission or approved use could have been granted by the Catholic church, or at least to a certain extent? Or at least in the isolated smaller areas, where Catholic beliefs had blended in with local folk magic beliefs? Could this at least have been sanctioned by local preachers, because they were “powers” from the saints, as relics were also seemingly approved “magic”? Rabelais notes that the lower class preachers were, themselves, representing how Saint Sebastian was the author of the plague, & Saint Eutropius, as author of drowsy, & these types of things are being passed down to congregations. So how were they being interpreted, & used in the beliefs in their own world views? Especially when we factor in what fragments of deification themes that were still surviving through the Middle Ages to that time, 14th–15th centuries, France & the Netherlands. As it was, the saints were believed to have been deified as gods & goddesses, earlier, & down to that time, & this was used to justify saint worship, & saint veneration, even though earlier Christian Fathers, like Origen, had discouraged it.⁵⁰³¹

“Effusions of piety went out ardently towards those glorious beings, without a thought being given to the limits fixed by the Church. In the popular imagination the saints were living and were as gods.”⁵⁰³² So, with relics bringing in money to the church, in many areas, like with Indulgences too, was there a commerce in art works, & images of the saints, & angels, which the church benefitted from? Just as there were in alleged pieces & bits of relics of the saints’ bodies, clothing strips, etc, or that claimed to be, which the church used to also collect money from? Like in the cases with pilgrimages to their relic shrines, that often cost money to see?⁵⁰³³ If so, was this why the Inquisition didn’t seem too concerned or interested in going after those who practiced saint-magic? But in fact, sanctioned, or at least tolerated it, if they didn’t even practice it themselves?⁵⁰³⁴ So long as the Inquisition didn’t interpret what the common folks & priests did with what seemed to have been approved saint-magic, & so long as it didn’t rival the acceptable “miracles,” (magic), of the Catholic church. So long also that others didn’t accuse ones’ use of the saints’ deification powers, & “divine” abilities as witch craft, it seems that many got away with the use of saint-magic, under the monopoly held by the church, that licensed relics & saint magic, not called “magical” but miraculous.⁵⁰³⁵ Thus, there seems to have been a trade in not only relics, but arts works of saints’ & angels’ images too, that taps into deification themes, though in legendized forms. But of themes that were derived from the protective powers of saints & angels, because of them having become heirs to glory & deification powers & abilities, that were given from the Godhead to the faithful, to help them in the on going war against the devil & his fallen angels.⁵⁰³⁶ So images of saints & angels, & the trades that must have been going on in many areas of later Christendom, were looked upon by some with caution. Earlier, during the Byzantine period, art works, called icons, & images became illegal, considered as idols, by many, like during 8th century Iconoclast controversy.⁵⁰³⁷ The common folks were cautioned to look upon the art works as teaching tools, especially if they could read. They were symbolic representations only, though some thought otherwise, but they were visible reminders to believers that they weren’t alone in dealing with the challenges of life, they could call upon the saints, & angels for help, & taps into what powers & abilities of deification that they were believed they held. Some cautioned different ones not to take the use of images too far & make idols out of them. During the 14th–15th centuries France & the Netherlands, for example, Eustache Deschamps, a superficial poet, cautioned & warned: “Ne faictes pas les dieux d’argent,” – “Do not make gods of silver,” – “D’ or, de fust, de pierre ou d’arain,” – “Of gold, of wood, of stone or of bronze,” – “Qui font ydolatrre la gent . . .” – “That lead people to idolatry . . .” – “Font croire à mainte peuple incertain,” – [& there by] “Make many ignorant people believe” – “Que ce soient dieu pour certain,” – “That these [images of saints] are God for certain. . .” – “...Telz simulacres n’aourons...” – “Let us not adore such counterfeits...”⁵⁰³⁸

In deification themes, the counterfeits of deification powers in black magic & perversions of scientific knowledge & inventions, is seen in another cases in point of the blendings of African practices with Roman Catholic saints’ deification powers & thus them being worshiped, & called upon for aid in Santeria.⁵⁰³⁹ Then ones like, Palo Mayombe an Afro-Caribbean religion similar to Santeria. Retrogressing away from white magic to black magic, some of the blends of “saint-magic” with black magic, have created & perverted the earlier saintly deification into more like demonification. (This is where the demons counterfeit the deification powers of Christ & the saints, with promises of their own powers sold for a price to their followers to rival the deification-powers of the church. For though they offer powers, & supernatural abilities, they can’t deliver on the real good ones, but only can bring about the dark evil forms of powers used for the bringing to pass evil things, disguised as good).⁵⁰⁴⁰ For instead of using animal parts and bones, like in Santeria, in Palo Mayombe it is alleged that they required human body parts and in some cases human sacrifice to bring about the hopes of desired effects & powers used for evil purposes, rather than for good. At least this is what is reported, in 1989, that the murderous cult members believed their dark rituals & gross bizarre brews in cauldrons would do in protecting them from the police, thinking that in drinking the brews it made them invisible & bullet proof. Such is reported was the thinking of such one as a careless drug runner named Serafin Hernandez Garcia, who ran a police road block, & was arrested. He & other cult members of Adolfo de Jesus Constanzo’s Palo Mayombe cult, in Mexico, at the Rancho Santa Elena, a property owned by the Hernandez family, were alleged to be involved in these types of counterfeit quests for supernatural powers.⁵⁰⁴¹

As the churches’ diverse forms of deification were further legendized, & almost forgotten, tainted versions of them could have found their ways into science fiction, & scientific versions, & in some cases even anti-Christian versions.⁵⁰⁴² Some of which found their way into Germany, England & the Americas, in perverted forms of self-deification in racial eugenics attempts to make a super human race, at the expense & elimination of “sub-human” or the “un-healthy” populations that these promoters of such philosophies said needed to be exterminated! During the 19th c., many northern European Protestants saw themselves as elite Aryan, Anglo-Saxon, the heirs of the freedom-loving Germanic tribes, the best of the best, the pure Aryan strain. In 1855–56, Count Gobineau's The Inequality of the Human Races, saw history as racial, & that the white species was doomed to lose its divinity through racial mixing. "Before Aryans mixed with any other races, they were as gods. When they had limited contacts, it produced an era of heroes.... Aryans as the near gods now irreversibly dying off convincing and terrifying." This, was due, he argued, because the Aryans were mixing & had "muddled" their race by interbreeding with inferior races.⁵⁰⁴³ Thus, to what extent were deification themes of later Christendom preserved, or tainted by such racial ideologies? Another of these was the late 19th century German philosopher, Friedrich Wilhelm Nietzsche, who was the son of a Lutheran pastor in the German village of Röcken bei Lützen. What versions of deification had survived through Lutheran teachings, which could have influenced Nietzsche's own warped version of deification, is uncertain, at least to this author at this time. For it seems that the ancient mystery schools, & Gnostic versions of anti-matter, were what could have been some of the sources for what was to become his own version of self-deification. Whatever might be the case: "Nietzsche asserts that eugenical regimentation should be implemented with no regard for 'rank, descent, or intellect', and he insists that there is an 'unhealthy' population that 'must at all costs be eliminated'".⁵⁰⁴⁴

Eugenics was a concept adhered to during 1910s–1930s, by such thinkers as Margaret Sanger, (In 1921, Sanger founded the American Birth Control League, which later became the Planned Parenthood Federation of America, & promoted negative eugenics, population control of "lesser" races).⁵⁰⁴⁵ Others, such as Marie Stopes, Herbert George Wells, (author of The Time Machine, & in 1940, The New World Order),⁵⁰⁴⁶ Others were Woodrow Wilson, Theodore Roosevelt, Madison Grant, Emile Zola, George Bernard Shaw, John Maynard Keynes, John Harvey Kellogg, Linus Pauling and Sidney Webb. Aldous Huxley's best-selling novel 'Brave New World', about a future society based on eugenics, was published in 1932. During the 1920s, there were also shows, organized by advocates of eugenics, where men and women appeared on stage in swimsuits in eugenic competitions. But only Nordic Aryans were allowed to enter, so as to be evaluated for their physical and mental qualities. There were also the Völkisch philosophers, who took these perverted forms of deification to the further extreme by proposing a program to systematically genetically enhance the Nordic Aryans themselves through a program of eugenics, & thus to create a super race.⁵⁰⁴⁷

At any rate, Nietzsche's version of deification & his influence on Adolf Hitler's perverted form of deification, went in a different direction than historic Christendom's quest to develop Christ-like traits in Christian moral perfection & god makings. For Hitler's version though "spiritual," was more physical in body strength, health & their mental indoctrination of his followers to breed a race of super humans advancing towards godhood. Hitler's perverted version of deification was also influenced by occult-forms & counterfeit forms of deification. Ones that he later pushed upon Germany through his Nazi propaganda, & that was bent on enslaving, smashing & exterminating the "lesser" & "sub-human" races considered to be tainting the Aryan race lineages, through mixed breeding & marriages. When the Nazis came to power, they outlawed breeding and marriages with the "lesser" races, like the Jew.⁵⁰⁴⁸ This was done, so as to reduce the mixtures causing the Aryan's advancements towards deification, to be corrupted & tainted, with impure blood. Thus, in two Nuremberg Laws were unanimously passed by the Reichstag on 15 September 1935 to try to prevent mixed marriages, & to also attempt to maintain the purity of the Aryan-races' deification process. Thus, the Jews & other mixtures of the races, it was believed & was propagandized, was the reasons for the decline in Aryan deification, & their hopes for a super-human race. Another influence on Hitler's perverted form of deification was Lanz von Liebenfels (July 19, 1874 – April 22, 1954). He was a Austrian occultist, former Cistercian monk & founder of the Ariosophy movement. Lanz was a friend of student of Guido von List, helped found the "Guido-von-List-Gesellschaft" (Guido von List society) in 1905, and in 1907 he founded the "Ordo novi templi" Order of the New Templars. Lanz's publications in a magazine series 'Ostara, Briefbücherei der Blonden und Mannesrechtler' from 1905 till 1930, greatly influenced Hitler's racial world views. Lanz also called for the extermination of the "lesser" races that threatened the Aryan-white race. It may be that color symbolism, where white was associated with purity & black or the darker colors, with evil: When such symbolism had later been perverted to be literal racial skin colors,⁵⁰⁴⁹ such views may have influenced later monks, like Lanz, who looked upon the darker races as sub-human. Whatever might be the case, Lanz's writings influenced & helped shape Hitler's racial world views. Thus, in Hitler's deification: "Man is becoming God - that is the simple fact. Man is God in the making". In his coming kingdom of deified humanity, the Führer envisioned a system where the "god-man"⁵⁰⁵⁰ justifiably ruled the "mass of lower humanity".

DEIFICATION LEGENDIZED IN SCIENCE FICTION STORIES, MOVIES & COMIC BOOKS

The further legendization of deification seems to have also developed in the areas of the logical progression of the human family through the sciences, inventions, gadgets, & other abilities. If the human family in the present day was to ever invent a time machine & could transport the modern inventions back to primitive times, where the common folks saw the wonders of such inventions. Perhaps those time-travelers might be looked upon as gods, or perhaps demons, depending on the superstitious world views of the people encountering such travelers.

We also see legendized versions of deification in conflict with demonification in the comic book series. Where humans acquire all kinds of abilities to either do more good with them, or abuse such things for evil purposes. How such characters either resist the use for evil, or can't help themselves, and try to gain more powers by abusing their abilities to try to gain more. Thus, the battles between good and evil, with evil sometimes changing for good, or the good sometimes being seduced, or exposed to something from the bad guys, that changes them, or influences them to do evil. The more powers they gain, the more god like they start to become, so long as they use such things for good, rather than regress down towards demonification.

In the science fiction series, Star Trek, the legendized versions of deification enter into science fiction, but logical predictions about where the human family might be able to progress to, over time, and through advancements in the sciences and moral ethics. However, it also shows, in fictional forms, the temptations that come with different beings in the universe advancing, or gaining different levels of advancements. How some might give into the temptations to mess with lower advanced beings by playing god-games with them. One such case is in the Star Trek episode: "Tapestry" originally released on February 15, 1993. It's the 15th episode of the sixth season of the televised Star Trek: The Next Generation. Set in the 24th century, the star ship Enterprise crew members encounter a powerful being named "Q" played by John de Lancie. Playing "god" Q allows a supposedly deceased Captain Jean-Luc Picard, played by Patrick Stewart, to re-visit a pivotal event in his youth where he is stabbed in the heart. Playing "god" had them use white colors, traditional colors for divine settings. Even in Evan Almighty, (2007), has black actor playing God, Morgan Freeman, dress in white. While in Cross Roads, (1986), the devil is played by a black man, dress in a black suit. So ancient color symbolism of deification & demonification, have been passed down to our times. The Q Continuum, as encountered by Picard, were beings that had god-like powers, but of which they misused & amused themselves with messing with "lower" beings, like the human race, they encountered. So this would be an example of the abuse of powers that often shows up in the comic book series too.

In the Star Trek episode, "Who Watches the Watchers" fourth episode of the third season of the television series Star Trek: The Next Generation, the 52nd episode overall, first broadcast on October 16, 1989. Captain Picard encounters the Mintakan people, a proto-Vulcan race near a Bronze Age level of cultural development, not advanced enough to understand, or be entrusted & able to use 24th century technology. These less advanced people got a peak at such advancements when the crew of the star ship Enterprise had accidentally exposed them to such things when their holographic rockface disappeared, exposing the outpost to Liko, a Mintakan, who thought he was seeing the workings of a god. As it turns out, an image of Picard, & his name was voiced amongst the Mintakans who mistook Picard as "their god." Liko had started to convinced other Mintakans that "the Picard" must be a divine being. So Picard, not wanting to have new religions, and theocracies to develop on the planet, & not wanting to be worshiped as a god, makes it a point to show his normal human aspects by allowing himself to be shot by their primitive weapons. See the blood from the arrow, was one of the convincing proofs that showed them that Picard was not a god, should not be worshiped as such, for Picard said he didn't deserve to be worshiped.⁵⁰⁵¹

It's a case in point has to how the less advanced might react when seeing things way beyond their levels of understanding & advancements. Another movie case in point is, The Gods Must Be Crazy, a 1980 film about a traveling Bushman who encounters modern civilization. The less advanced on earth, people of the Kalahari, live in the desert away from the wonders & advancements of modern civilization. When a bottle falls out of the sky, perhaps from a plane, somehow not breaking, the less advanced wonder about what it is, & what "the gods" must be doing in sending it down to them.⁵⁰⁵²

The other side of this aspect of deification-lore is logically & historically, what does happen to civilizations when they not only stop advancing, but start to retrogress, leaving the ruins of their cities to be discovered by later generations, who then attempt to figure out what happened. This is part of the two ways, the two extremes, that is expounded upon in early Christian writings, art works, modern near death experiences, Heavy Metal Rock music in contrast to up-lifting music in praise to God. Howard Storm learned of these two extremes, & Origen & Clement of Alexandria expound on this too.⁵⁰⁵³ Again, the basic concepts are that the human family could, depending on good choices, advance towards the one extreme, becoming gods or goddesses. Or could, depending on bad choices, retrogress down towards becoming like the devil & the demons, demonification. These are the logically noted cycles in the rise & fall of different ancient civilizations. That such concepts would show up in movies is not surprising. A case in point is Battlefield Earth (also referred to as Battlefield Earth: A Saga of the Year 3000). It's a 2000 American science fiction action film based upon the first half of L. Ron Hubbard's 1982 novel of the same name. Directed by Roger Christian and starring John Travolta, Barry Pepper, and Forest Whitaker, the film depicts an Earth that has been under the rule of the aliens who have enslaved what is left of some of the human race. Its setting is a thousand years after the human family had lost a war with the aliens. A thousand years later from 2000 to 3000, the human family had retrogressed back to stone age type savages. Had forgotten how to read, had lost its knowledge of advanced inventions. Had split up into human-tribe like societies, hunting with primitive weapons, when not far from their cave dwellings were the ruins of their forefathers' cities. Illiterate, the stories about what happened to them were passed down in oral traditions about "demons" & "the gods." One day, a young warrior, seeking answers, rides out on his own and encounters the feared "demons," & "the gods," of legends, by coming across the remains of, what to him, would be some of the old ruins of his forefathers, which is nothing more than the ancient remains of creatures made of plastic in an old miniature golf course. Encountering other humans, who claim to have seen "gods" in the skies, they go into the ruins of the cities, streets lined with abandoned rusted out cars & other things. As it turns out, "the gods" (or aliens), capture them to become their slaves to mine for gold. The "gods," thinking that they can increase their profits, took the humans to an advanced "teaching" machine, & as the humans progress in knowledge, they progress out of their primitive level & regain their former knowledge as to whom their forefathers were, when they were more "civilized."⁵⁰⁵⁴

As if science can perfect the human family, different movies play out this concept in different ways, asking the questions, can the human family create the perfect machine? Or can machines perfect the human family? The obvious answer is, No! Machines can't make gods out of humans in and by themselves. However, there are some movies that explore the attempts to do just that. Inventions are thus only complimentary aids to our progressions to higher sciences & better inventions, if used to up-lift & help others with. Or they can be our down fall, could cause us to retrogress, if we abuse such things to blow each other up with, like with nuclear weapons, or even global killer weapons, like in the comical science fiction books & movie series, Cosmic Agents.⁵⁰⁵⁵ In the original series, Star Trek, episode: "The Changeling," season two, first broadcast on September 29, 1967, and repeated May 17, 1968. Captain James T. Kirk & the star ship USS Enterprise's crew find out about how all life in the star system has been destroyed and Malur, a world with a recorded population of 4 billion, is now devoid of life, including the Federation science team that was down on the planet. The ship soon encounters the cause of all the destruction & loss of life, a meter-long probe that called itself Nomad. The probe mistakes Kirk for being its creator, & it was found out to have been launched from Earth during the early 21st Century; its mission was to explore the galaxy, just like the Enterprise. Nomad's mission directive might have been corrupted over time, for it stated that its mission is to "find and sterilize imperfection". Since Nomad's definition of imperfect includes all living things, it travels from world to world, killing everything and everyone. Kirk decides to play along with Nomad's mistake, and tells Nomad not to "sterilize" anything further, which for now, it obeys. But to save the ship & crew, Kirk traps Nomad in a logic loop, point out its mistake about Kirk being its creator, when it was someone else. The machine starts to malfunction, when Kirk tells it to fulfill its own directive & eliminate the imperfection in itself.⁵⁰⁵⁶

The advancements towards "perfection" through machines theme is again brought up in another later Star Trek series episode, Star Trek: First Contact, 1996, released by Paramount Pictures, eighth feature film in the Star Trek film franchise. It's also the second film in the series Star Trek: The Next Generation. Brent Jay Spiner plays the part of android, Lieutenant Commander Data, who is on a quest to become more human, in that machines are not supposed to have feelings, emotions & other human qualities. However, in Data's case, technology of the 24th century has advanced to the point where "emotion chips" help Data experience human feelings, pain, pleasure, etc. When the earth & Star Fleet encounter & battle the cybernetic Borg, a seemingly conscienceless ever advancing collective, consisting of a combination of machines, with biological components. A collective of different worlds' races of aliens, who have been going around the galaxy forcing inhabited worlds to be assimilated into their collective, & adding the conquered worlds' technologies & races to their own, by blending machines & biologicals. Captain John Luke Picard & his crew put up the best fight that they can to resist being assimilated. During the battle, Data is captured by the Borg & is tempted with furthering his quest to become more human by having a portion of flesh wired into his android machine body. The Borg Queen is portrayed by Alice Krige, who mocked Data's quest to become more human. She said that they had been & thought like him, but had advanced beyond such things, using the synthetic & biological together to advance to perfection. The Borg Queen responding to Data's quest, says: "Human. We use to be like them, flawed, weak, organic. But we evolved to include the synthetic. Now we use both to attain perfection. Your goal should be the same as ours." Data response: "Believing oneself to be perfect, is often the sign of a delusional mind." Queen: "Small words from a small being, trying to attack what he doesn't understand."⁵⁰⁵⁷ In this case, the machine-biological combination used to attempt perfection, in this case hints to evolution, especially in the Queen's words: "But we evolved..." Hence, to what degree Christian perfection theme were included here is very minimal, if any. But instead, "evolving" towards perfection, the logical outcome of the evolution theory of Darwinism, the theory of the evolution of species by natural selection, advanced by the English natural historian Charles Darwin (1809–82). This seems to be more like the inspiration to this perfection theme, than historic Christendom's version.

In The Outer Limits series, episode, "The Sixth Finger," a black & white television show, first aired on 14 October 1963, during the first season, it is another case in point that taps into evolution's logic deification outcome, & not so much historic Christendom's versions of deification. A scientist develops the means to advance the evolution of a man by 20,000 years. The process then continues beyond his control. The man who is evolving starts to think himself above & beyond other humans, less evolved. It's a classic example of deification in evolution themes, gone astray & wild. If the logical outcome of deification in evolution is to be accepted as possible, if the human family is to continue to evolve, then what will the human family become in a million or so years? That's the logical theme of this episode. If so, then according to this form of deification lore, the temptations to use one's advancements for evil, rather than for good, are what we see here. Can different ones who thus advance resist abusing their newly acquired abilities & powers for selfish agendas? Or advancing too fast, too soon going to create havoc in the universe? The Scientist thus advances his test subject to 1 million years of evolution, and the evolved finds himself equipped with superior intelligence and powers of thought that are capable of great destruction such as telekinesis. Gwyllm, the one evolving, seeks vengeance on the mining town he loathes. However, before he act on his thoughts, Gwyllm holds back. He has evolved beyond concepts such as love, hate, and the desire for power. Resisting the temptations to abuse his new powers, he instead intends to turn himself into a vortex of pure intellect with the help of his girlfriend, Cathy Evans (Jill Haworth). This fictional deification process changes the physical appearance of the subject, so that he has a big head & creepy sixth finger. The closing narrative says: "An experiment too soon, too swift. And yet may we not still hope to discover a method by which within one generation, the whole human race could be rendered intelligent, beyond hatred, or revenge, or the desire for power? Is that not, after all, the ultimate goal of evolution?"⁵⁰⁵⁸

The logical end to ultimate evolving into "god" like beings, with the help of science, inventions & machines, with no mention of Christ's way to perfection, also shows up in other movies too. In the classic science fiction movie, 2001: A Space Odyssey, 1968, produced and directed by Stanley Kubrick. The screenplay, written by Kubrick and Arthur C. Clarke, was partially inspired by Clarke's short story "The Sentinel". Clarke concurrently wrote the novel 2001: A Space Odyssey, published soon after the film was released. In it, the logical futuristic advancement of the human race is depicted. That in evolution, believed by many to be the origins of the human race, if it is continuing to cause further advancements of the human species, it will eventually cause the human race to advance far beyond where we are now. Thus, it depicted the evolution process from the level of primitive monkeys, at the dawn of time, to the far distance future from then, to humans becoming gods. But this is only done with the help of other advanced beings in the universe that had started the process through some large slab of unknown material left by them on earth. One of these slaps is also buried under the moon's surface. After the human family had evolved & progressed to where they could space travel to the moon, the slab is discovered, it sends out a signal to another mysterious black monolith that affects human evolution even further, by changing an astronaut into a "star child," with god-like powers.⁵⁰⁵⁹

Atheists that I've heard, that still use the Darwin's Evolution theory as "fact" & the way things got started, often can be inconsistently illogically ironic (eye-ronic!). For many Atheists don't believe anything that they can't touch, taste, hear, & see with their own eye-balls, which is why I've made a play on the word ironic to (eye-ronic). And yet, there are many eye witness statements of thousands, who testify that they've seen the resurrected Christ, but according to Atheists, these eye witnesses are to be rejected. As with also those who have been eye witnesses, that there is life after life. And yet, we all are supposed to believe, by a double standard used by Atheists, that millions of years ago, some slimy slug, some how evolved into eventually becoming a creature with legs to crawl out of some ancient ocean, to evolve further into a running monkey, with such complicated physical aspects as eyes to see! And all this we are to believe without eye witnesses! Thus, the doubled-standard, of believing something that we can't touch, taste, hear & see with our own eye balls. But the evolution theory without eye witnesses is supposed to eventually form creatures with eyes! And the chances of there being a divine creator, to start a creation process, or create life forms, by whatever divine process, powers, & means. Such notions are, according to Atheists, are to be rejected. But, the chances of evolution without a creator, creating such complicated biological components as eyes, hearts & a brain is about as good of a chance in trillions, that a tornado, after going through a trillion or more different car junk yards, sucking up the car parts, jumbling them up in the air, then letting them fall, will eventually have them fall in such a way as to create a Ferrari, or any other expensive car. But the chances of a slug of mud could eventually evolve into the human family with brains, is about like the tornado example. A creator needs to be involved in the whole process. If the human family can now clone different animals & humans, why couldn't there have been a divine creator, or divine parents to get this whole seeded world going?

Atheists, and those who blame Christianity & other religions for the evils in the world, don't realize, or perhaps not want to accept, is that they are creating more evil themselves, & encouraging the same types of evils they hate in hypocritical religionists that don't live their moral codes & ethical teachings. When prayer was taken out of schools, outlawed, when the 10 commandments & any mention of God was removed or discouraged. When references to Christ's birth was discouraged & only Santa Claus songs & stories allowed later. Such Atheistic moves only caused & helped to create the very things that they claimed criminal in Christianity & other God believers. For without constant morals being taught, it encouraged immorality. For unless people, Atheists, Agnostics like to be mistreated, killed, beat up, robbed, mugged, & have all kinds of criminal things done to them. Then, they at least should tolerate and let people live & teach the moral principles that they complain that they don't live. Then again, are they, the Atheists & Agnostics living them too? Living the very moral codes, ethical concepts, & helping to solve the problems they claim that religions cause? Are they feeding the poor? Are they not robbing, killing, harming & doing all the other negative things that they complain the religionists are doing or not doing? We've seen what has happened, when not living the basic moral codes & concepts can cause in societies. When these problems start to grow and cause havoc on societies, many people want to run to the governments for solutions. But, the answers to these age old problems are not bigger and better police forces, bigger and better government agencies, programs & for them to try to legislate morality, with endless laws that become some complex & with endless pages in endless volumes of law. Because that hasn't ever worked, for look what has happened throughout history when governments, police forces & armies have gotten too big! They start to take away more freedoms in the name of security & policing everyone, often times selectively, while allowing others to continue on with creating havoc on others. For they've found that they more endless laws that the masses don't know about, the more fines, fees & taxes can be taken from the masses in order to make the claims of needing more funds to "solve" the problems, when they are letting them grow more, in some cases, so that they can again ask for more taxes, & find, require fees in the name of "solving" again, the problems. Thus, the Judicial systems get more money off of peoples' stupid choices or from them breaking the endless laws that they don't know about, & ignorance of the law is no excuse. So what's the real solution? What solves these problems before they get started? Keeping the basic commandments of God does! Living the basic moral codes & common sense ethics, does! These are the positives traits that the early to later Christians knew, deifies the human family. Where as the negative traits cause many problems in societies & demonizes the human family! So let us promote the 10 commandments & other positive traits & really live them. For in so doing, it will give the complainers less reasons to complain about. Plus, it certainly will make for a more peaceful, better, kinder world too! When Atheists & Agnostics bring up examples of different religious groups in history that mistreated others, like the Indians, or the Crusades, the Inquisition, they often don't like to mention the Atheistic murders by the millions of Communist Atheists who suppressed & persecuted religions in Russia, Asia & other places around the world. But all these examples are just examples of people not living good moral codes & common sense ethics & of not living the commandments of God. So also is every evil that's been done in the name of Christ. So also the thought policing that has gone on during the 13 Colonies in America's history. Or the miss treatment alleged to have been done to Atheists' founders of American Atheists. Those who had legislated trying to make people pray, then mistreating them because they didn't, because they said they were Atheists, should have lived the Christ like teachings & their prayers, rather than have used Satan's plan of force on the Atheists. But so also should tolerance have been given to religions, though they be rivals of each other, all throughout history. The sufferings & mistreatment was because they all weren't living those basic moral codes & positive traits. When the Atheists were being mistreated for not believing & taking part in school prayers, would they had rather that the religionists had live what they should have lived? Kindness, tolerance, charity, love, forgiveness, & other Christ like traits? If the religionists had, history might have been different. So also would it have been, had the Atheists been more tolerant, & realized that if they would let religionists remind themselves constantly, even if in schools, of what they should be doing, & how they should be living, the 10 commandments, & Christ's teachings, there wouldn't be as many of those Christians & other believers, thus going around hurting, killing, robbing, & harming Atheists & others! If we can commit to each living kinder, more charitable & better lives, this world would & could advance to higher levels of deification, rather than sink towards demonification. For how many plane loads of Atheists & their aids & supplies are going to help disaster areas? How many from the Christendom? Or other religions that have positive moral codes? It's one thing to hear Atheists complain about the problems, blame God for not solving everyone, & thus ask why, if there's a God. Why he doesn't make life as comfortable & problem-free as possible? But then, in having rejected God & refusing to live his commandments, to thus become part of the whole consequences of the sum of all our choices, & thus causes more of the same problems by refusing to live his commandments & teachings! All of which were given to us, by a loving Divine Parents, to help solve a lot of the problems before they get started. The same could be asked of Christendom & all other religionists. Are we all living charitable & more loving concepts & the commandments? How many plane loads to help disaster areas to we send? On a smaller scale, do we help the poor, or ignore them? What are we doing? What are we not doing that we should? And, what are we doing that we know we shouldn't? In Christmas Carol, the ghosts of the once rich, having not been able to take their riches with them, when they died, have to stick around & see the sufferings of the poor that they could have helped. But, now being spirits, they can't help them, they went up to them, hovered over them and mourned knowing that they had failed the test of mortal life, they had not used the wealth to freely help others in need with. When the poor die, its also too late to help, for spirits & resurrected beings changed, glorified & deified, no longer need food to survive, or warm clothing to stay warm, or a place to stay. Having been spirits before life, they didn't need such physical things either. For this moral life is the final exam, the final test, for our spirits live eternally, and will not need such things as we need here. So lets all get busy and help each other out of love & true charity.

THE GREAT TEST WITH DIFFERENT REWARDS: In this section on deification in contrast to demonification, we have pre-existence themes also that help extend the horizons of the much bigger plans of our Divine Parents for our spirits. Having been spirits before this life, & now being spirits having physical experiences, as our spirit is now clothed in a body. We will return to being a spirit again when we die, or when our spirit is unclothed of the physical body. Then, like in garment lore, & early Christian garment types, our spirit will be clothed again in a glorious resurrected body, but according to different glories we been tested to receive, according to the different types of rewards along the whole scales of deification down through the levels to the lower rewards, (1 Cor. 15). In the Wisdom of Solomon, concerning this physical body now, & the conditions of mortal life, "a perishable body weighs down the soul, and this earthly tent burdens the thoughtful mind." And, as to those souls of the just, "their hope is full of immortality. Having been disciplined a little, they will receive great good, because God tested them and found them worthy of himself; like gold in the furnace he tried them" (Wisdom 9:15, 3:5-7).

1970, the progress towards deification is illustrated in the story, Jonathan Livingston Seagull, by Richard Bach. It's the story about a seagull bird that goes beyond the simplest facts of flight by practicing & pushing himself even further to overcome other difficult challenges. He sought to increase in his abilities to become faster, though losing control as he experimented with the boundaries others wanted to place him behind, as they tried to get him to be just like other birds, fighting for scraps of food. After increasing his speed, but crashing, he started to doubt himself, & give up on advancing, but then changed his mind. Breaking all the limitations placed on him, he flew at night, though told he wasn't built for night flight, & learned to fly faster through different methods he thought of trying. He flew higher & faster & kept advancing towards becoming better & better. He learned how that: "We can lift ourselves out of ignorance, we can find ourselves as creatures of excellence and intelligence and skill. We can be free! We can learn to fly!"⁵⁰⁶⁰ Jonathan seagull, having flew at hundreds of mile per hour through the breakfast gathering, was shamed & charged with endangering other fellow seagulls, & the council sentenced him public shunning by closing their ears & turning their backs to him. He tried to explain his quest to go beyond being ordinary, to improve & advanced, but the council wouldn't hear it. Disobeying traditional rules to be ordinary, he pressed forwards, learning to dive deeper after rare & tasty fish. He learned to sleep, while in flight. Learned to navigate through fog, & rise above it into the clear skies. He learned to ride the wind, & then one time, he came across to angelic type seagulls, that were "pure as starlight, and the flow from them was gentle and friendly..." & they could match his skills, & abilities, so he asked who they were. They told him that they were from his flock & that they had come to take him higher, to take him home. They told him that he could do better, that one school was over & he was ready to advance to a higher level. They ascended & he noticed that his own body was glowing as bright as his guides. His feathers, & new body glowed-brilliant-white now, & he found his skills improving & that he was now in a place with like-minded seagulls who were also seeking to improve themselves & "reach out and touch perfection in that which they most love to do, and that was to fly." Hinting to reincarnation, the other birds & said it took them a lot longer than it took Jonathan to reach that level, having lived a thousand lives, then another hundred before they even learned that there was such a thing as perfection. Jonathan continued to learn from them, & from one Chiang, about "perfect speed," how that "Perfect speed, my son, is being there." Travel at the speed of thought. But also, this next level made it so that: "You can go to any place and to any time that you wish to go." He said he had been to "everywhere and everywhen" that he could think of. This was another level in advancing towards perfection. With his teacher, he eventually learned, & they went to another planet. He then learned time travel, & progress further towards a better understanding of the meaning of kindness & love. His teacher, though also advancing too, kept telling him to work on love, he eventually also glowed so brightly that the other birds could hardly look upon him. Had the deification process turned Chiang into a seagull-god? ⁵⁰⁶¹

QUESTS FOR MORE MORAL & ETHICAL LIVING TO SOLVE WORLD PROBLEMS, RATHER THAN HAVE GOVERNMENTS TRY TO LEGISLATE GOOD BEHAVIOR

The thought policing of earlier centuries has been passed down to modern times. When things go bad in societies, many think that bigger & better equipped government & police forces will be able to solve the problems. However, the bigger & better these civil authorities, the more chances of those authorities in taking on the negative aspects of the reversal of deification, that of demonification. We have seen how the negative traits begin to surface when mortals, gaining powers over others, often will elevate themselves to untouchable elite status, as if they were near divine, but in a negative way. After being elevated to power, history often shows that many will then will start abusing their powers for evil purposes. They also find out, & often fall to the temptations of the physical comforts, earthly pleasures, status, & elevations to celebrity that often goes with popularity, royalty, & pride themselves in their untouchable near divinity status. The negative traits often start to multiply, as they continue to look upon those they gain riches from, as the peasantry. They legislate away freedoms, & abuse their subjects with fines, fees, & all kinds of burdens. Especially state mandated state run religions that force their ethics & versions of "morality" on everyone, as noted earlier in this study. Force is the Devil's plan, freedom is Christ's plan. Laws that enforce religious dogmas by force, turns many away from religions, & makes many into Atheists, which also doesn't solve the basic problems of societies also, when correct beliefs in God & his commandments are taken out of the sum of all our choices equations.

"The facts of witch-prosecution with its kindred superstitions are an object lesson. How mistaken are those who believe that religion has nothing to do with ethics, and that a religious conviction exercises no influence upon a man's conduct! There are ethicists, professors of ethics, and ethical preachers, who imagine that ethics may be taught without teaching religion, and that the morality of the people can be improved without an interference with the convictions as to the nature of the world and the import of life. But a wrong world-conception will beget a wrong morality; a false religion will unfailingly produce bad and injurious ethics; and the grossest errors will, if they have their way, find expression in the grossest abominations of misguided conduct. A radical cure in the other hand must go to the root of the evil. It is not sufficient to remove the symptoms of the disease, you must replace false religion by true religion.... It would not do to say with our agnostic friends that religion is concerned with matters unknowable; and that therefore we must leave it alone! ... We must investigate the religious problem and replace the old errors with their dualistic superstitions by sound and scientifically correct views. At the bottom of all the terrors of the Inquisition and witch-prosecution lies a serious endeavor to do what is right; and this power can be utilised as well for the progress and elevation of mankind as for the suppression of reason and sound judgement.... Religion is the strongest motive power in the world; nothing therefore is more injurious than false religious convictions, and nothing more desirable than truth."⁵⁰²

CLOSING APPEAL, FOR US ALL TO DO BETTER, TO MAKE THE WORLD BETTER!

Another reason why everyone should keep the commandments! But because this sounds too preachy I doubt you'll ever hear some politician ever talk about this most simple solution to the world's problems! In short: Keeping the commandments would solve many problems before they get started & would starve the monstrous Giant! The ever growing, ever hungry, ever blood sucking & corrupt Giant Government Industrial Complex monster! Think about it! If everyone kept the commandments, what excuse would corrupt politicians have to promise harsher laws to punish criminals, to over regulate us on everything, to require endless fees, licenses, permits, & endless paper work. For, there wouldn't be any killers, thieves, etc., etc., & no one to arrest! But isn't this what they say they want everybody to do anyways? Even Atheists? For unless they enjoy being murdered, enjoy people taking things from them, beating them up, harming them & their families, then they should at least hope that people would behave, & not do such things. So do they actually want us to keep the commandments, even though they are tearing them down? Plus, have forbidden them in schools, & public places? Or do they hope we all don't so they can have excuses to claim they need more taxes so as to solve the problems that arise as crimes increase? As it is now, as it has been for a long time now. Not keeping the commandments now gives corrupt politicians, the judicial industrial complex, the prison industrial complex, & the police-state industrial complex their business! For not keeping the commandments feeds them, the monster, with fines, fees, taxes, & assets, money & properties seized! If all kept the commandments there would be no need for endless legislation & endless laws about every types of manners that different categories of crimes have been listed on the ever growing law books. Laws, regulations, & sub-sections that always have punishments attached, & that seem to benefit the monster, such as some type of fine amounts, or community service hours, or mandated behavior classes that cost money too. It's ironic that the same people that kicked prayers, the 10 commandments, & God out of public schools, (except for cursing in God's name, that's protected by "free speech", but prayer isn't). Are the same ones that complain to government to become bigger & "better!" For as not having constant reminders about keeping the commandments have been banned, taken down, stricken from public views, the result is obvious, people misbehave & seeks for their next victims they can take advantage of for their own lusts, greed, & selfish agendas. But, when the waves of crime starts to hit home, & effects to comforts & lives of those who complained & got God, prayer & the commandments out of public view. As the crimes increase, & gang violence increases, & other problems, the same ones that got God out, rush to the government to do something about the problems. The Government, knowing that if there are more crimes, problems, & one crisis after another, that they can use these things to demand more taxes to make bigger & better police forces, harsher laws & punishments (fine$), bigger, & better armies, bigger & better prisons, etc. Plus, they can prolong the problems, the wars, the crisis, in the name of "solving" them, so they can demand more taxes to "solve" the problems. Thus, the vicious cycle of the monster eating up taxes, fines, & assets seized continues! Plus, as it poops out what it ate up before, & needs to feast again & again, as it grows ever larger. It then growls to increase the debt ceiling, but hardly ever to lower the tax spending, & wastes the taxes that comes out of its back side. Thus, if everyone kept the commandments, we could say to the corrupt politicians, judges, armed forces & police, you all can go home, we don't need to feed you anymore! We've finally figured out that you're not going to be able to legislate behavior, deter crimes, & make people behave. We, ourselves are going to do that. Are you? Are you going to stop being corrupt, stop lying, being greedy, & stop breaking your campaign promises? For we don't need more gun control because we now have self control! We don't need bigger & better this or that, because we all have chosen to live better & more righteous lives. We don't need to go to endless wars because the soldiers on both side refuse to fight, refuse to give up their lives & limbs, (in the name of some false rally call, or in the name of freedom, when it turns out it was for some other Globalists' wicked agendas!) The soldiers were told they were defending freedom, but soon found out they were sent in to protect pot & poppy fields! Or take over oil lands, or that the Military Industrial Complex was fueling, arming & supplying both side, so that their fellow American troops, like themselves, were being harmed & killed by American weapon corporations' inventions, left behind to fall into the enemies' hands, or were obtained through some weapons deals, or protected shipping routes, which the troops were forbidden to bomb. If we all kept the commandments, we'd be able to say to the corrupt politicians that we don't need you to pass anymore of your 1000s of paged bills that no one hardly reads anyway, but of which helps the corporations & lobbyists that got them into power. You're all fired & can go home, we've finally figured it out that if we keep the commandments, you won't have to try to legislate our behavior, because that has never worked! In fact, we the people are going to go through all of the legislation & strip out all the constitution destroying pages, subsections, & mandates, so we can restore the constitution that you corrupt politicians & secret societies have made to hang by a thread! Thus, its time to starve the monster before it gets even bigger than what it is now! For by all of us keeping the commandments, this rewarding concept would soon be realized as peace, love, kindness, charity & other positive traits increases, while all the negative traits, with all the problems that go with them, decreases! This is the real solution that we hardly ever hear about, because many people don't want to be preached at, they'd rather continue on down the road towards a third world war! Or Armageddon!

A RESTORATION OF THE GOSPEL & CHURCH HOPED FOR, PROPHESED, & SOUGHT

"Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ, which was before preached unto you: Whome the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of his holy prophets since the world began." (Acts 3:19-21). The

Greek word translated in this passage as “restitution” [apokatastaseōs] can also be rendered as “restoration.”⁵⁰⁶³

John prophesied also of an angel that would come, before the hour of God’s apocalyptic judgment, in the last days, to warn the people to repent, & that it would be an “everlasting gospel,” (Rev. 4:1, 14:6-7, 16:16).

Early Christian apologist, Justin Martyr, A.D. 110-165, used the predictions of Sibyl, in his address to the Greeks, when he wrote that Jesus Christ, “...being the Word of God, inseparable from Him [God] in power, having assumed man, who had been made in the image and likeness of God, restored to us the knowledge of the religion of our ancient forefathers, which the men who lived after them abandoned through the bewitching council of the envious devil, and turned to the worship of those who were no gods.”⁵⁰⁶⁴

Another example is: One of the pupils of Clement of Alexandria, was Origen of Alexandria, [AD 185-230-254]. He wrote 8 books during the 3rd century A.D., in response to Celsus, thus, they are now entitled: Origen Against Celsus. Celsus wrote “On The True Doctrine” against the early Christians about 170-180 A.D. Celsus must have been aware that some of the early Christians believed in a restoration, or times of “refreshing.” However, upon noting this belief, he rejects the idea, for he wrote how, “...God does not need to amend His work afresh.” Origen responded by writing that God, not being neglectful, performed, at different times, numerous corrective labors in order to care for the whole world, & the people on it.⁵⁰⁶⁵

Origen: “...It is, then, always in order to repair what has become faulty that God desires to amend His work afresh. For although, in the creation of the world, all things had been arranged by Him in the most beautiful & stable manner, He nevertheless needed to exercise some healing power upon those who were labouring under the disease of wickedness, & upon a whole world, which was polluted as it were thereby. But nothing has been neglected by God, or will be neglected by Him; for He does at each particular juncture what it becomes Him to do in a perverted & changed world. And as a husbandman performs different acts of husbandry upon the soil & its productions, according to the varying seasons of the year, so God administers entire ages of time, as if they were, so to speak, so many individual years, performing during each one of them what is requisite with a reasonable regard to the care of the world; & this, as it is truly understood by God alone, so also is it accomplished by Him.”⁵⁰⁶⁶

1466-1536, Desiderius Erasmus, a respected monk, noted how convoluted the doctrine of the church had become by his time, & attributes it to the man-made process to try to resolve disputes: “If a decision must be made, I would like to see it done reverently, not arrogantly, and based on Holy Scripture, not on some trifling reasons fabricated by men. But nowadays there is no end to the quibbling questions.... Every day decree after decree, is issued, one begetting another. In short, things have gotten so bad that the chief point in any affair will not depend on Christ’s command, but on the definitions of the scholastics and the power of the bishops, no matter what their qualifications may be. Everything is now so entangled with these questions and decrees that we dare not even hope to call the world back to true Christianity.”⁵⁰⁶⁷

During the 1700s into 1800s, many Deists, convinced by reason and experience, thus rejected as unreasonable, the trinity, & other left over distortions they saw in Christendom, by their times. Plus, how that the Reformers didn’t fix the messes that they also noted, but added more to the confusion, & absurdities. Most Deists, however, argued that God governed the world with unalterable, natural laws & never interfered with the affairs of men, & couldn’t be persuaded by human prayers, that God didn’t answer. Other Deists, like Benjamin Franklin, were staunch advocates of prayer. While others argued that God could be dictated by prayers to try to get God to do men’s bidding or requests. However, some Deists, like the many Seekers, thought it was time for God to bring about a restoration of the truths & message of Christ that had been corrupted & mutilated over the centuries. However, others Deists argued that God didn’t need to repair his works, for some Deists compared God with a skilled watchmaker, who created a perfect watch which operated eternally & didn’t need winding or adjusting. “Those who conclude that the Creator tampers or interferes with the affairs of men, deists sometimes argued, must imagine that God organized an imperfect world that he must periodically make adjustments or repairs in his creation.”⁵⁰⁶⁸ While others, like Thomas Jefferson, thought that God could & should bring about repairs by restoring what had become corrupted.

Thomas Jefferson, (1700s— early 1800s), also noted how far Christendom had fallen into a state of apostasy, & looked forward to a time when God would bring about a restoration, thus about 1820 he wrote: “I hold the precepts of Jesus, as delivered by himself, to be the most pure, benevolent, and sublime which have ever been preached to man. I adhere to the principles of the first age; and consider all subsequent innovations as corruptions of this religion, having no foundation in what came from him.... If the freedom of religion, guaranteed to us by law in theory, can ever rise in practice under the overbearing inquisition of public opinion, truth will prevail over fanaticism, and the genuine doctrine of Jesus, so long perverted by his pseudo-priests, will again be restored to their original purity. This reformation will advanced with the other improvements of the human mind, but too late for me to witness it.”⁵⁰⁶⁹

Thomas Jefferson also wrote: “The religion-builders have so distorted and deformed the doctrines of Jesus, so muffled them in mysticisms, fancies and falsehoods, have caricatured them into forms so monstrous and inconceivable as to shock reasonable thinkers.... Happy in the prospect of a restoration of primitive Christianity, I must leave to younger athletes to encounter and lop off the false branches which have been engrafted into it by the mythologists of the middle & modern age.”⁵⁰⁷⁰

Did the elderly Benjamin Franklin, shortly before his death, also expect some type of restoration to happen “soon”? Or did he suspect that he would learn the truth to the answer about Jesus Christ’s divinity, or none divinity, from Deity? Or, if not, then from whomever, easier, when in the afterlife, after he died? More so, than while in the confusing settings of trying to figure out such questions amongst the conflicting & contradicting religious environments of his time! Whatever might be the cases, he is reported to have said: “Tho’ it is a question [concerning the divinity, or not, of Jesus] I do not dogmatize upon,” Franklin admitted, “having never studied it, and think it needless to busy myself with it now, when I expect soon an opportunity of knowing the truth with less trouble.”⁵⁰⁷¹

Franklin, upon noting that Christendom was in a state of corruption, that what had come from Jesus, had been later corrupted. He declared, in response to the English deists of his time, that he thought the system of morals and the religion of Jesus “as he left them to us, the best the world ever saw or is likely to see.” However, that Jesus Christ’s religious views had received “various corrupting changes,” & like Jefferson, Franklin perhaps also didn’t believe Jesus was the Son of God, but instead was a great moral teacher. For Franklin expressed his doubts as to the divinity of Christ, as did Jefferson, who extracted from the scriptures, the moral teachings of Jesus, but omitted the narratives about miracles, his birth, & resurrection. For Jefferson, the moral system of Jesus was “the most benevolent and sublime probably that has ever been taught,” but he didn’t accept all of the teachings of Jesus, thinking that Jesus had died before he developed a complete system of morals. Jefferson, like Franklin, had suspected that various corrupting changes had mutilated the teachings, which was now the reasons why the doctrines of Jesus also contained problems, contradictions, absurdity, & much untruth. Such things had thus made it impossible for such contradictions to have proceeded from the same being, Christ, who had given such sublime moral teachings. Thus, Jefferson, as does seemingly Franklin too, attributed these contradictions, etc., to various corrupting changes along the way, so that by their generation, when the message had been delivered centuries later to them, it had been mutilated, misstated, and often was in an unintelligible form, like the trinity dogma, for example. Thus, Jefferson separated the teachings of Jesus into that which he classified as the gold & the dross, “restoring to Jesus the former and leaving the latter to what he called the “stupidity of some, and roguery of others of his disciples. Of this band of dupes and imposters,” which, surprisingly includes Paul the Apostle as the “great Coryphaeus,” and first corruptor of the doctrine of Jesus.” But also must have included the priests of Jefferson’s time, whom he said continued the spreading the nonsense about the trinity, for in a letter to John Adam, Jefferson wrote: “Three are one and one is three; and yet the one is not three, and the three are not one.... This constitutes the craft, the power and profit of the priests. Sweep away their gossamer [or filmy substance consisting of cobwebs spun by small spiders] fabric of factious religion, and they would catch no more flies.”⁵⁰⁷² Jefferson noted one of the factors of the corruption of the doctrine of Jesus as coming from Greek philosophy, the Platonic influences.

In a letter to John Adams, Jefferson wrote: “There Platonising successors indeed, in after times, in order to legitimate the corruptions which they had incorporated into the doctrines of Jesus, found it necessary to disavow the primitive Christians, who had taken their principles from the mouth of Jesus himself, of his Apostles, and the Father contemporary with them. They excommunicated the followers as heretics. . . . We must leave therefore to others, younger and more learned than we are, to prepare this euthanasia for Platonic Christianity, and its restoration to the primitive simplicity of its founder.”⁵⁰⁷³

Harry Emerson Fosdick, 1878-1969, Baptist minister, lamented & noted how: “A religious reformation is afoot, and at heart is the endeavor to recover from our modern life the religion of Jesus as against the vast, intricate, largely inadequate and often positively false religion about Jesus. Christianity today has largely left the religion which he preached, taught and lived, and has substituted another kind of religion altogether. If Jesus should come back to earth now, hear the mythologies built up around him, see the creedalism, the denominationalism, sacramentalism, carried on in his name, he would certainly say, “If this is Christianity, I am not a Christian.”⁵⁰⁷⁴

Edwin Hatch detected the down fall of the Church in what happened in the early Christian church, how that over time it traded the certainty of divine revelation for philosophies & the rhetoric of man: “Its [the Church’s] progress is arrested now, because many of its preachers live in an unreal world.... But if Christianity is to be again the power that it was in its earliest ages, it must renounce its costly purchase... The hope of Christianity is... that the sophistical element in Christian preaching will melt, as a transient mist, before the preaching of the prophets of the ages to come, who, like the prophets of the ages that are long gone by, will speak only “as the Spirit gives them utterance.”⁵⁰⁷⁵ Hatch seems to hope for a restoration of spiritual gifts that would produce a new line of living true prophets, speaking by the Spirit, as they did of old, in order to cut through all mist that still clouds Christendom!

Wyclif, 1320-84 A.D., seeks to make the scriptures available to the common folks, but the Catholic church opposed the idea, decreed it illegal, went after him, sent bounty hunters after him, but he was determined to translate the Bible into the language of the common persons, so that it could be read by them, rather than through the clergy, who were suppressing it from the regular folks. (Colossians 2:12; Romans 6:2-6; Basil, De Baptismo; Chrysostom, Hom. xxv, In Joannem; Hom. xl., In Epist. ad Rom.; Adam, Baptism For The Dead, pp. 9-10, & 48-9, etc.) Perhaps as time went by this type may have become part of the "Extreme Unction" which was given to a person who was sick, etc., and who was believed to be near death. Even though baptism had been the ritualistic type of death, burial and resurrection; the extreme unction was often given to those who were believed to be facing, not the ritualistic type of death, but the real thing. Consequently, the dying person would be anointed on the eyes, mouth, nose, ears, hands and feet. Lundy, Monumental Christianity, (1876 edition), Doane uses of Lundy, but he ignores the answer on p.98 of Lundy's work, that answers T. W. Doane's claims that Christ & his gospel was borrowed from the heathen nations. On p. xxiii, Doane lists Justin Martyr, Clement of Alexandria, Origen, Tertullian, Irenaeus, Minucius Felix, which if he had paid attention to them, could have also answered his charges of borrowing. Those ancient answers, includes how that Christ pre-existed, Christ went to other nations, wasn't neglectful of other nations, & that the demons had counterfeited what the prophets in other nations had said about Christ. Thus, that is the reason why there are many crucified wounded, descent & resurrection type Christs by different names, all over the world in different cultures that Doane, Celsus, & other ancient to modern critics like to make reference to. Many things about Christ were known to the prophets of pre-Christian times, all over the world, because all nations had prophets that predicted of Christ. Also, Christ went to other nations, & eventually they turned these events into their mythologies & fables about those events. (The Ante-Nicene Fathers, Vol. 2, p. 490-2, Clement of Alexandria, The Stromata, or Miscellanies, Book 6, chap. 6. 37. T. W. Doane, Bible Myths, (7th edition, 1910, CR 1882), Chap. 22, p. 211-214, citing from another translation of Clement of Alexandria, Strom. 6, chap. 6. Again, Doane cites the answers, but did not acknowledge them, how that Clement testified that Christ not only went to Hades to preach the gospel, but went to all the earth, in order that people could be saved wherever they were. Doane was only interested in pointing out that Clement was one in many to tell of Christ's descent into hell, & then uses that with others, to say, see, this was borrowed from the pagans, who also have descent into hell stories, which he then goes on to list. If Christ had gone to all the earth, then every nation would have had a knowledge of what he did, but then, they must have fell away into their own apostasies & legitimized such knowledge into myths & parallel stories. As noted by Honore, could have been the process of myth making in the ancient Americas. See: Pierre Honore, In Quest of the White God, (NY: G. P. Putman's Sons; Frankfurt, A. M.: Verlag Heinrich Scheffler, 1961, English trans., Lon.: Hutchinson & Co., 1963), 60-64.

Diocletian, (Roman Emperor, reigned 284-305), in persecuting the early Christians, monuments were raised to commemorate his zealous murderous oppressions. One has the inscription that told the purpose of the monument was raised "For having extinguished the name of Christians who brought the Republic to ruin." Another said it was "for having everywhere abolished the superstition of Christ; for having extended the worship of the [Roman] gods."

The poor believed they had to get rid of their unwanted children because they couldn't afford them, but they had not been allowed to sell them formally, so instead, they were leaving them to die or to be used to economic advantage by other families. The first Christian emperor, Constantine, in A.D. 313, authorized the sale of the infants. As horrible & wicked as this was, the other alternative was death by exposure, or slavery: Perhaps it was reasoned by Constantine that the sale of infants at least offered some hope, especially since in Roman society some slaves could hope to buy their freedom. Even with legal permission to sell one's offspring, exposure didn't end overnight, but by about 374, it had been legally forbidden. 82- Celsus: "...The more reckless encourage the children to rebel. They tell the children that they remain silent in the presence of the parents & schoolteachers only because they do not want to have anything to do with men as corrupt as these pagans, who, did they know what the children had been hearing, would likely punish them for hearing it. These Christians also tell the children that they should leave their fathers & teachers & follow the women & their little chums to the wooldresser's shop, or the cobbler's or to the washerwoman's shop, so that they might learn how to be perfect. And by this logic they have persuaded many to join them." (Emphasis added, see: R. Even if we have a kind of treasury, this is not filled up by fees paid as the purchase money of religion. Each of us contributes a small sum once a month or when he pleases, & only if he is both willing & able. Not one is forced; contributions are voluntary, & are regarded as pious investments. The money is not disbursed uselessly on banquets or drinking bouts or eating-houses, but on the feeding & burying of the poor, on boys & girls without means or parents, on old servants & shipwrecked persons, & on any who are in the mines & penal settlements & prisons, provided it be for the sake of God's religion, they thus becoming pensioners of their own confession of faith." They rejected any veneration to Roman deities, including the 'divine' Emperors, & this was inexcusable to the Romans, that believed their deities controlled the weather, kept off natural disasters, etc. Thus, the early Christians' lack of respect, was believed to be the cause for any calamities that happened. They discussed, God's province's & His abilities to reign in the lands beyond the sea. The early anti-Christian must have heard of the stories about Christ's wanderings about the earth, for he called the Christians' God a wanderer. ANF, 4:169-98, The Octavius of Minucius Felix. Caecilius, A.D. 210, like a number of ancient critics, must have heard about some of the Christological issues of the times, about how the early Christians couldn't make up their minds about if God had a body or didn't, but was "everywhere present." This controversy clashed against other beliefs, such as Christ's world wide trek themes, wandering about in different guises. These may have been known in their development stages, as they would become part of later Christian wandering Christ lore. But of which stories, if known by critics, also conflicted with Christological issues, such as the early Christian beliefs that Christ, at least, (unlike the Father), did have a body. That he was wandering about the world, in & out of different places. Whatever might be the case with early anti-Christian Caecilius, he is translated as having complained: "...But the Christians, moreover, what wonders, what monstrosities do they feign! — that he who is their God, whom they can neither show nor behold, inquires diligently into the character of all, the acts of all, and, in fine, into their words and secret thoughts; that he runs about everywhere, and is everywhere present: they make him out to be troublesome, restless, even shamelessly inquisitive, since he is present at everything that is done, wanders in and out in all places, although, being occupied with the whole, he cannot give attention to particulars, nor can he be sufficient for the whole while he is busied with particulars. What! because they threaten conflagration [fire] to the whole world, and to the universe itself, with all its stars, are they meditating its destruction?..." ANF, 4:178, The Octavius of Minucius Felix, chap. X, note 5: "[These very accusations, reduced back to Christian language, show that much of the Creed was, in fact, known to the heathen at this period.]" For example, the 2nd cent., Apologist, defending Christianity against the early anti-Christian charge of "atheism," claimed that they weren't atheists, but that they, (at least in his Christological views, perhaps shared by many others of his time), believe in One who is unbegotten, eternal, unseen, impassible, incomprehensible and uncontained: comprehended by mind & reason only, etc. Others like Apologist, Justin Martyr, 100-165, Theophilus, 2nd c., bishop of Antioch, were also spreading the anti-body God ideologies influenced by Greek philosophy, blended in to taint the earlier anthropomorphic (body-God), doctrine that they protested against was not to be considered as being literal. Thus, critics upon hearing about these controversies, (plus, also hearing about other beliefs that had Christ in a body at times. But also perhaps guised in different shapes & manifestations, during his world wide treks, or wanderings from place to place), commented & poked fun of them in their attacks on Christianity in general. In the early Christians' "secret" meetings, before someone was allowed into them, when someone, at night would knock on the door of an early Christian, they had to know different pass words, to be let in. Wandering about at night with a small lit torch, trying to not appear to be looking for anything, but upon seeing the secret fish symbol on a door, they'd tap on the door & await in the shadows until someone looked out. "They'd give the password quickly and be admitted to their meeting. Some passwords: "The Way," "A new name," "The Good Shepherd," and "A cup of blessing."

104- It is difficult to assess a statement such as is found in Minucius Felix, Octavius 9 (of Christians): They know themselves by hidden notae (i.e., tokens, marks, signs; C.T. Lewis & C. Short, A Latin Dictionary (Oxford: Clarendon, 1890), s.v.) & insignia (i.e., signals, tokens, badges, inginia; Lewis & Short, A Latin Dictionary, s.v.) & love (those whom) they have scarcely known previously....They call themselves brother & sister without distinction." Minucius (a Christian writer, fl. ca. 200 A.D.) has these words spoken by an anti-Christian, and a very unreliable interpreter of Christianity. Cf. E.R. Dodds, Pagan & Christian in an Age of Anxiety (New York: Norton, 1965), 111, on reasons for Christian unpopularity: "They appeared, moreover, to constitute a secret society, whose members recognized each other by private signs, as gypsies do today, & were bound together by some mysterious intimacy." Cf. Origen, Contra Celsum, I, 1, in J. P. Migne, Patrologia Cursus Completus, Series Graeca (Paris: 1857-1866, 161 volumes), or PG 11:652. Dodds draws the parallel between Minucius's notae et insignia & Dionysiac secret signs (Plautus, Miles 10-16: "Give me the signum (i.e., sign, mark, token, password; Lewis and Short, A Latin Dictionary, s.v.), if you are of these Bacchantes"; Apuleius, Apology 56)."

Documentaries: Ancient Civilizations, (USA: Questar Entertainment, DVD Slim Pack, CR MMIV), Disc 1, Rome & Pompeii, Bonus Program, Faith Unconquered: The Roman Persecution of Early Christians, hosted by Joe Campanella, Producer Edward Lopatin, writer Joyce Marcarelli. Joe Campanella: During the 1st century, a new sect arose, the early Christians, that were accused of all kinds of terrible things, the Romans, had heard rumors, that ran rampant in Rome & throughout the Empire, about this new strange sect, the Christians, and their strange & mysterious ceremonies: "It was believed that [early] Christians sacrificed babies on their altars. And that they held clandestine orgies...." But what was worse, is that they rejected any veneration to the Roman gods, & this was 'inexcusable,' thus they were thought of as Atheists. In St. Stephens Retondo, the oldest church in Rome, artist filled the walls with frescoes. They depict the many different ways that the Romans devised to torture the early Christians, including the women. Some show their breasts being cut off, & pinched, etc. Also the stories & legends of martyrs & St. Agapa, Chionia, Irene, & Agnes, 304 A.D. Living a moral life, doing good works was part of the earliest Christian moral codes, & yet there were false teachers that entered into the church & Christ & the Apostles had warned about this & wrote to combat the sins, & immorality within the church, & those who started heretical apostate sects. 118- It's obvious that the long line of prophets stopped in the Jewish culture, or there would be a longer Old Testament, ever growing. Same with the Christendom, there were prophets & apostles, they produced scriptures, then there was an end to their claims to prophets & apostles that could keep the scriptures & canon growing. Otherwise, we'd have a much larger New Testament too. William Stevart McBurnie, Ph.D., The Search for the Twelve Apostles, (Carol Stream, Illinois: Tyndale House Publishers, Inc., 1973). - 144- Even early anti-Christians like Celsus, complained about the type of body that Christ was born into. Thus, he was attacking Christ's reality, his birth, as physical, thus noting what earlier Christian beliefs were, before about 170–180. He made fun of how Christ, as a god, was believed to have first created the universe, to then descend to earth to work with wood. His low ranked birth into body, that needed to walk around, eat, & suffered a miserable humiliating death. (R. Joseph Hoffmann, (trans.) Celsus On The True Doctrine, A Discourse Against the early Christians, (Oxford Un. Press, 1987). Paul, combating the early anti-body beliefs amongst Corinthians, gave his masterful powerful testimonial that Christ's resurrection was real, glorious, but physical too, 1 Cor. 15. Christ's life, & death on the cross, sacrament, baptism, were all symbolical rituals about physical aspects of Christ's existence. Alan F. Segal, Paul the Convert: The Apostolate & Apostasy of Saul the Pharisee. (New Haven: Yale Un. Press, 1990). Paul was once a Pharisee, (they denied the resurrection), later became an eye witness to Christ's resurrected, (Acts chaps. 9–28).

The Psalms In Israel's Temple Worship In The Old Testament and in the Book of Mormon*, (Salt Lake City, Utah: Eborn Books, 2009), the authors point out how that the Psalms, as a temple text, were rearranged & taken out of order, during post-exile temple era, after Israelites were captive to the Babylonians. The Old Testament was revised by triumphant Yahwists during the "Deuteronomistic Reform" (ca. 620-400 B.C.) The Yahwists completely altered the theology of Israel's ancestors, just as latter "orthodoxy" controlled the making of "Christianity", & the New Testament by selecting what agreed with its own Hellenizing attitudes, & formulated the Nicene Creed of 325 A.D., with words not found in scriptures. 151- Dr. Hugu W. Nibley, March 1964, Tri-Stake Fireside talk, Utah, USA, entitled: Earliest Christians According to Newly Discovered Papyri. Nibley mentions how the ancients would hid their writings so that they were preserved in their originals, rather than having to trace them from the later legends back through the centuries to their original sources. A case in point where the later legend was traced through the centuries back to the early Christian doctrine was when I did research & connected up the dots of history to unmasked who was behind the mask of later Santa Claus lore, that it was the wandering Christ who went to other nations, according to early Christian doctrines. See: Darell Thorpe, 1994, THE CHRIST IN SANTA CLAUS UNMASKED, Tracking Santa Legends Back to early Christian Beliefs That Jesus Went To Other Nations, {Jesus Christ's World Wide Treks As The Roots of Later Christmas Traditions, Legends, Art Works & Writings About The World Wide Gift Giving Adventures of Christkindl, Kriss Kringle & Santa Claus}, (SLC, Utah: MMM & RH&PS, Religious, Historical & Polemical Studies, Revised Text & First Illustrated Edition, 2013, on line edition at Amazon).

- 213- Justin Martyr, 110-165, used some of Sibyl's writings in his address to the Greeks. And wrote that Jesus Christ, "...being the Word of God, inseparable from Him [God] in power, having assumed man, who had been made in the image and likeness of God, restored to us the knowledge of the religion of our ancient forefathers, which the men who lived after them abandoned through the bewitching council of the envious devil, and turned to the worship of those who were no gods." The Ante-Nicene Fathers, 1:289, Justin Martyr, Hortatory to the Greeks, chap. 38; Garretson, Primitive Christianity & Early Criticisms, 1912, p.103-6. The early anti-Christian Celsus, 170-180, must have been aware that some of the early Christians believed in a restoration, or times of "refreshing." However, upon noting this belief, he rejects the idea, for he wrote how, "...God does not need to amend His work afresh." Origen responded by writing that God, not being neglectful, performed, at different times, numerous corrective labors in order to care for the whole world, & the people on it. (The Ante-Nicene Fathers, 4:528, Origen Against Celsus, book 4, chap. LXIX). Acts 3:19-26. "Righteousness will I send down from out of heaven, and mercy and truth shall meet each other. And truth shall I send forth out of the earth in the latter days, to bear testimony of Mine only Begotten, and righteousness and truth shall I cause to sweep the earth as with a flood to gather out mine elect from the four corners of the earth. Yea, the Lord shall give that which is lost and the land shall yield up her increase." David T. Harris, Truth From The Earth, Is The Holy Bible Infallible And All The Word of God?, (Oakland, California: Resource Communications, Inc., 1995), 7 & 143, different reading of Psalms 85:9—12 is said to have been discovered in Spanish Archive Manuscripts. - 268- Examples of keys in the hands of those rescuing souls out of the fires of hell, see: Nigel Morgan, Early Gothic Manuscripts, II, 1250 - 1285. A Survey of Manuscripts Illuminated in the British Isles - General Editor: J. J. G. Alexander, (London: Harvey Miller, 1988), p. 9. fig. 3, portion of a Portrait of William de Brailes, Cambridge, Fitzwilliam Museum, MS. 330, the Last Judgment. A man that looks like a Friar, by his hair style, is reaching down with his right hand towards a person reaching up with his raised hand(s). In the Friar's left hand is a key. In that it is a Last Judgment scene, & St. Peter is often depicted in other art works with a key in one hand and greetings souls, with hand & wrist grasping at the doors or gates to Paradise, on Christ's right side of Judgment, it is most likely that this Friar looking man could represent St. Peter. See: Robert Hughes, Heaven & Hell in Western Art, (NY: Stein & Day/Publishers, 1968), 236-237. Introduction, Charles T. Little & Timothy B. Husband, The Metropolitan Museum of Art, Europe in the Middle Ages, (New York: The Metropolitan Museum Of Art, 1987), Page, 103, fig. 96, Christ Presenting the Keys of Heaven to Saint Peter. German (Cologne?), ca.1315-20. The key is used to open the door of paradise, as Peter ascends with souls through the doors, or is seen as a hand clasping greeter at the door to paradise in other art works. Huge Nibley points out that Christ authorized, and gave to Peter the keys to the work that released the souls out of the gates of Hades. (Nibley, Temples Of The Ancient World, p. 595. III, Portrait of William de Brailes, Cambridge, Fitzwilliam Museum, MS. 330. Detail from a single leaf of the Last Judgment, p. 9. In this work an angel clasps the hand of a soul being set free from hell. Another portion shows Peter extending down his right hand towards a soul who extends his hands towards Peter's. It is the moments before they clasp hands. Early Christians, thus called traditores, because they had handed over, or turned in the sacred books & scriptures, to save themselves. Early anti-Christians could study them in order to find things in them to make issues over, or to vilify the early Christians with, as they also did with Christ's words, (Luke 20:19-26; Matthew 22:15–22, 26:59-64, Mark 12:13-17). The early anti-Christian, Celsus, writing about 170-80, passed on the rumors of his time. Perhaps such false rumors, as were going around amongst the earlier anti-Christian Jewish sects, were what different ones made reference to in John 4:42. How that Jesus was vilified as not being born of a virgin, but of "fornication," as some rumored, of "a Roman Soldier named Panthera," that got Mary pregnant, & which was why her husband, Joseph, is alleged to have "driven" her away. Another early anti-Christian Rabbi Simeon ben Azzai is said to have found in Jerusalem, (after the 70 AD Roman siege, with the city in ruins) a Jewish anti-Christian document that charged that Jesus of Nazareth was "a bastard son of a married woman." The document was presented as "evidences" against the Christians everywhere. Azzai's pupils circulated this false charge. Dr. Charles F. Potter tells us this, about these rumors, and the gossip that must have spread around about the manner of Christ's conception: "The calumny that followed the establishment of the claim of the Virgin Birth was full proof of the wisdom of withholding it from the public as long as possible. At once the hasty marriage of Joseph and Mary—he an old man, Mary a girl—assumed suspicious overtones. It was simply in their human nature for the couple's neighbors and observers, especially the women, to invent a lover and a clandestine romance. Joseph was highly respected, but they must have added sagely: "There's no fool like an old fool." "Such rumors multiplied and spread until they reached the ears of the authorities, who—for polemical purposes and because of their hatred of Christians—found the alleged illegitimacy of Jesus a most effective weapon to use against the new religion and its adherents. In the early rabbinical literature, the Mishna, refers to Jesus as a mamzer ("bastard")." "Pseudepigraphic writers took up the theme. One, in his Gospel of Nicodemus, asserted that Jesus "was born of fornication" between his parents before their marriage. The Talmud identified Mary as Miriam, an adulterous hairdresser. One talmudic writer has Mary admit the illegitimacy of her son to the famous Rabbi Akiba." "One the other hand, the anonymous Gospel of James, believed to have been written in the second century A.D., defends to the last the divinity of Jesus Christ against all Jewish vilifiers and against those apologetic Christians who sought to excuse his lowly heritage.... The wordy battle continued into the Middle Ages, the crowning infamy being the Toledoth Jesu, in which the worst versions of the life of Jesus were gathered together in venomous company, to widen the breach between Jew and Christian. Of course, the Christian retaliated with defamation and persecution." Dr. Charles Francis Potter, *Did Jesus Write This Book? - 359- Pre-existence themes in being sent down from heaven, coming down, 'sent one,' or ones, coming down, being sent from God, descent from heaven into a body, they 'went down,' 'he went down.' In some cases this was even mocked by early anti-Christians, like Celsus, (late 2nd c.), who made fun of the early Christian concept that God came down from heaven, after making the universe, to then come down to work with wood, live in a body that needed food, walked about, & looked like any other man. Luther’s grace alone caused some of his followers to live without any moral restraints, called “Antinomianism.”

431- Minister in southwest Idaho (Nampa), Mark J. Cares, Speaking the Truth in Love to Mormons, (Milwaukee, Wisconsin: Northwestern Publishing House, 1993), preface p.6: “According to the Bible, Christians are persons who trust that they have eternal life, not because of anything they have done or have to do, but solely because of the merits of Jesus Christ.” He then goes on to cite the usual passages: Rom.4:5, Eph.2:8-9. Page 65, he cites Isa. 64:6, but to bring about a different point, than what I’ve heard other “born-again Christians,” use it for, which is to try to suggest that doing good works is pointless, because all our righteousness are like filthy rags, so what’s the point in being righteous, it doesn’t count towards being saved, they say. Cares uses it to suggest that all, including children, are sinners. KJV reads differently than what the version he cites does, the New International Version, NIV: “Surely I was sinful at birth, sinful from the time my mother conceived me (Psalm 51:5).” We can see how someone could be led to think that this might support his claim that “all people, regardless of age, are by nature thoroughly sinful.” However, the King James Version, KJV, reads: “Behold, I was shapen in iniquity; and in sin did my mother conceive me.” This version makes it sound like his mother was the sinner, not him, as an infant. The setting for this song & comment, is that this is after David had Uriah the Hittite killed in war, so that he could get that soldier’s woman, & wife, that David had seen bathing, Bath-sheba, whom David impregnated, after he slept with her. So David is pleading for forgiveness, he did this sin when he was an adult, not as an infant. 2 Sam.11:3-5, 14-17, 12:7-13. So the passage has been changed in the NIV & its historical setting ignored by Cares. The use of “filthy rags” as a type, also has an ancient ritualistic symbolism in ancient Israel & early Christianity, that of becoming clean & taking off of sins, & evil works, to be clothed in white garments, symbolic of becoming pure by doing good works. So it’s ironic that such passages are used by modern ‘born again Christians,’ who try to build their case for their anti-good-works dogmas. (Clothing, clean, filthy, washed or whitened, as types of good or bad works, Rev.3:1-5, 19:7-10, 13-14, Eph.4:22-24, 5:27, Rom.13:12, Matt.22:1-13, Psa.30:11, 132:9, Isa.11:5; 61:1-3, 10. 1 Pet.5:5. BYU Studies, Vol.22, Winter 1982, #1, p.31-45, Clothed Upon: A Unique Aspect of Christian Antiquity, by Blake Ostler). Are modern “born-again Christians” like Cares, ignorant or ignore perfection & deification in historic biblical Christianity? (Walter Hilton, The Ladder of Perfection, (U.S.A.: Penguin Classics, 1988). John Rupert Martin, The Illustration Of The Heavenly Ladder of John Climacus, (Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1954). Cares goes on to down play Jesus’ example of doing good as part of the perfecting process, as we strive to overcome our sinful acts. Eph.2:8-9 is cited over & over again by Cares, & this to suggest that a “true” Christian, doesn’t have to do anything, “Solely because of grace are we saved.” (Page 81). Those who use a more balanced approach of grace & works, are called un-Christian, because they don’t accept the anti-works, saved by grace alone dogma: “Instead of justification being God’s loving and legal verdict declaring people “not guilty” because of Jesus’ saving work, it becomes his strict confirmation of the merits or demerits of a person’s own actions.” (Page 89). This is to say that in being “saved by grace alone,” how one lives their life, good or bad, does not matter, they are “not guilty,” of anything, cause the merits of Jesus saved them. You can't get any more anti-good works than this! So it becomes a system of not how you live, good or bad, but how you simply believe! Cares makes it clear, that to do a "work-oriented religion," (page 90), causing all kinds of problems for those who try! But what kinds of problems are created in communities where no one is encouraged to even try, & are even looked down on for trying? But for those like Cares, those that are working towards improvements, developing charity, love, & following Christ's example, like Mormons try to do, this in their minds, is un-Christian! A person, if they want to a true "Christian," aren't "obsessed" with doing such things. Cares goes on complaining that Mormons, "have never experienced God's free and full forgiveness. They have never seen Jesus doing everything for them." Does this mean that Jesus lived our righteousness, so that we don't have live righteously? He then gets into the works, (missionary works, called "witnessing"), that Christians have to do, so that Mormons can be told about how they too can be saved by grace alone, & not by works. So there are some "Christian" works involved in getting the unsaved saved! Which I've heard preachers say has to be done, for if not, the Christians will be held accountable to God for not "witnessing" to others! So many of them, are as "busy as bees," doing those types of works! But then, Cares goes on to point out how much "work," of "Busy as a Bee," that Mormons are in not only doing morally good, but in business, in going to work, & doing physical labor. But don't preachers get paid going to work for their congregations? Condemning such works in Mormonism, Cares complains: "In more ways than one, their gospel centers on work." (Page 126). So is that a bad thing? How much wouldn't get done, production, the making of goods, growing food, etc., or even the making of bibles, if no one went to work? So the works that Christians do, or those who help in going to work to make the ink, paper, binding of books & drive the trucks to deliver the bibles, & then do missionary-work! All those types of workings for others' salvation, that are needed to get the unsaved, saved, wouldn't even get done, if people didn't do their jobs! But what about the works Mormons do? What if it were Mormons, that made the ink, paper, & printed & delivered the Bibles to Christians, as part of their jobs as truck drivers, etc.? Would those works not be of great worth? But, so anti-good-works is Cares, that it seems he's attempting to suggest that the works of others are bad, while the works of Christians, are good, especially if they get the unsaved saved! Meanwhile, if Mormons are working hard on good work ethics & traits of self-sufficient, & self-reliant qualities, growing gardens, homemaking, food storage, etc., all such works are bad, as if all these are causing Mormons to be over-worked? Making them unhealthy, overworked, stressed out, mentally strained, (Page 128). He continues to mock the "works" of Mormons, as if keeping a journal is bad, as if going on a mission is bad, & working on morality is bad? But because Mormons can be shown that they are sinners, & do make all kinds of mistakes, this shows that their image of being good people, as critics point out, is tainted by many of them being more often than others, as bad! So do the critics then want Mormons to keep the commandments a lot better then? How are the critics doing in this area, themselves? (Page 130). Cares admits that, for the most part, Mormons do live moral lives, do make good employees & good neighbors, how their welfare program contributes to their positive public image. But critics try to discredit all these efforts to be good too. But how are the critics doing in these areas that they find fault within Mormonism in themselves? How many families do they feed, how many plane loads of clothing, food, & emergency & medical supplies do the critics send off to disaster areas of the world? Can it compete with what Mormons do? Cares goes on to mock Mormons for trying to live worthy, which is a biblical concept, such as in garment types, how that some of the Saints at Sardis, had not defiled their garments, "and they shall walk with me in white; for they are worthy." (See: Rev. 3:4-5). He's mocks Mormons' blessings, & promises, the "if" aspects, that "if" the person lives worthy, or if they don't, that those "iffy" aspects can be one of the factors in how a blessing or promise can play out. Again, it's Cares continual attack on good works, & mocking of how people ought to live, (pages 148-49), that builds a case for his anti-good-works, don't have to do any works, dogma. So all the early Christians, that strived for perfection, would they be fanatical bad people & not Christians for doing so? So striving to become better in different areas of life, striving towards perfection is bad, so Cares seems to suggest, because it can cause "devastating" results in their lives, & "all they end up doing is destroying themselves and their families." (Pages 150-1). He even suggests that such things cause families to fall apart, causes too much stress, & he vilifies Mormons as being too much in a rush, too busy working on trying to be perfect in this life, when that is not what is expected. Mormons know that they aren't perfect, like the early Christians weren't, but both tried hard to improve their lives towards becoming better in different areas. There would be even greater stress, greater destruction of the family, & greater destroying of oneself, if Christians & Mormons didn't keep the commandments, ended up stealing, killing, & doing all kinds of other evil things, & then ended up in the court systems, & jailed. So what Cares, & these other preachers of his types, claim in their anti-good works, & saved by grace alone propaganda, is not only un-biblical, when we read the bible as a whole, & not just their cleverly selected passages. But their stressing such an anti-good works dogma, is in fact helping to do Satan's & his fallen angels' works, of getting people to not do good works & do evil works! They're helping to create the very problems in communities that they complain are being created by those who try to "be perfect," or that do try to do good works! For these born-again Christians, that are so anti-works, they are helping to create in their communities many lazy people, who have a lack of incentives to become productive contributors to their communities. Creating "Christians," who probably live off of the hard works & charity of others, (for money, food, etc., given them has to be worked for by others going to their jobs). They also are helping to cause more crimes to go up, more taxes to have to be spent in the name of solving those crimes, & attack the problems after they have arisen, rather than help solve them before they get started, by keeping the commandments themselves, & preaching others to do the same & to do good & not do evil. (Taxes for bigger & better police forces, etc. means that the citizens of communities have to have people going to work to get paid, to then turn in those taxes). However how one wants to look at the whole issue, there's no escaping the work that had to be done to bring us the gospel, the bible, & that continues to have to be done in all these different areas. For, even for the paid ministers that preach their anti-works rhetoric, for them in their individual cases, I'm sure that their congregations would not pay them, if they said that they should be paid by grace alone, & not by works! Tad R. Callister, The Inevitable Apostasy, and the Promised Restoration, (Salt Lake City, Utah: Deseret Book, 2006), 136-46, notes that David W. Bercot, Will the Real Heretics Please Stand Up, p. 56-60, etc., admits, after his studies in early Christian writings, how often they wrote of doing good works, of obeying God, & that salvation & eternal life was based on how repentant, willing the early Christians were in keeping the commandments, living a good life, & good works, & then the grace of God will cover for the rest. He then goes on to admit: "So, if our evangelical doctrine of salvation [the belief that we are saved by grace alone] is true, we are faced with the uncomfortable reality that this doctrine was taught by 'deceivers and antichrists' [2 John 1:7] before it was taught by the church." (Bercot, p. 67). Moreover, the false doctrine of "grace alone," was first invented by the Gnostics, then taken over by Reformers. Moreover, Satan & his devils also being anti-good works, pro-evil works, are thus so, because rather than having us become more like Christ, & God-like, they would rather that we would become more demon like, & demonified like them.

On p.8, is a list of 122 scriptures from just the New Testament alone, which shows the doctrine of works. This list is compared to 10 scripture references on "grace." It is clear from this, that many modern Christian either ignore the other scriptures on works, or they by pass them, or they attempt to argue against them, with the help of the scriptures on grace. The scriptures on works far out numbers the ones on grace. But even if the scriptures on grace were to out number the ones on works, there really should be no war between the two concepts. By reading the scriptures in full, we see that both concepts blend together & help each other. Matt. chap.25, see also The Ante-Nicene Fathers, Vol.5, p.151, Hippolytus. Bercot, Will the Real Heretics Please Stand Up, p. 56-57, admits to being upset about how much of early Christian writings declared his own modern Christian beliefs as heretical. That he thought they'd back up his beliefs in being saved by grace or faith alone, but they didn't. "The early Christians universally believed that works or obedience play an essential role in our salvation. This is probably quite a shocking revelation to most evangelicals. But... there's no room for doubt concerning this matter." (Bercot, p. 56-57). Bercot cites Clement of Rome, on the Lord rewarding everyone according to their works. Polycarp on how we should do God's will and walk in His commandments. Barnabas on he who keeps the commandments will be glorified in the Kingdom. Hermas on obeying God's commandments. Justin Martyr on showing that they are worthy by their works. Clement of Alexandria, on distinguishing themselves in good works, & the importance of good works. Origen, on how the soul will be rewarded according to what the soul deserves, & will obtain an inheritance of eternal life, if the soul's actions shall have procured this for it. Hippolytus on how faith in Christ prepares them for eternal life through good works & righteous deeds. Cyprian on obedience, of walking in the right & just way. Lactantius warning that they could lose the true and eternal life by our sins or win it by our virtue. (Bercot, 56-60). Others could be noted, Irenaeus, wrote of how if one believes in Christ, they should do His will. Clement of Alexandria: "For by grace we are saved": not, indeed, without good works." (ANF, 2:44). Tertullian, understood that there is no forgiveness without some works, (in this case, repentance): (ANF, 3:661). 433- Some "born again" Christians, are often seen working outside Temple Square, in Salt Lake City, during General Conferences of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, (Mormons, LDS). These "anti-Mormons," claiming to be "saved" Christians, will pass out flyers, & work real hard to try to get the Mormons to stop "working their way to heaven," & also be "saved by grace alone," by accepting "the right Jesus" as "their personal savior!" Many of them claim, that to be born again, the "Jesus of the Nicene Creed," needs to be confessed. This, they claim is the only true "biblical" Jesus! Even though the Nicene creed is not in the scriptures, not in the Bible! (Ed Decker's The Godmakers, plus based on numerous conversations I've had with born-again "Christians." See also: Gerald N. The Ethiopians or Coptic Christians' bible includes the Book of Enoch. The Book of Hermas, or the Shepherd of Hermas, is said to have been part of some of the earlier Christian Bibles. What were some of the reasons why this book was taken out of later canons? "Evidently at Naples, the Shepherd won, at least for a time, its struggle to be received among the canonical books of the New Testament." (Early Christian Art and Architecture, by Robert Milburn, 1988, Un. of Calif., Press, Berkeley and L.A., p.55; See also: The Ante-Nicene Fathers, Vol.2, Intro. note to Hermas, p.3-7. During the 3rd century a bishop of Alexandria named Dionysius the Great, set forth powerful arguments against The Gospel of John, & the Book of Revelation. Reader's Digest, After Jesus, The Triumph of Christianity, (Pleasantville, New York and Montreal, Canada: The Reader's Digest Associations, Inc., 1992), 86-7. Some of the Greek bishops of the churches of Asia, representing the Seven Churches, to which John's Apocalypse is addressed to, rejected John's Apocalypse because they felt that his predictions didn't come to pass. Thus, they met in council at Laodicea in A.D. 360, and discredited this gospel and voted it out of the canon. While the Latin, or Roman Church, however, continued to have the book in the canon, and didn't attempt to explain nor deny, the failure of the prophecy. (A.S. Internet Archives: Pre-existence: Studies in early Christianity, Pre-Birth Experiences & Near Death Experiences, (Collection of radio shows, commentaries, interviews), <https://archive.org/details/Pre-existenceStudiesInEarlyChristianityPre-birthExperiencesNear> - A Collection of radio shows & interviews about the Pre-existence, collection I. Topics: Evidences for the Pre-existence of souls in a life before life as spirits in a family in heaven. As found in Pre-birth experiences, near death experiences, ancient documents, early Christian writings, art works, early anti-Christian polemics, the Council of Constantinople 553 AD that rejected Origen's version of the pre-existence. Plus, references to art works that depicted it in early to later Christianity, earlier bible illustrations of it, and later legends, mystery plays, & even later movies that mention it. Guests: Sarah Hinz, author of "Life Before Life, A Collection of Mother's Experiences with their pre-born children," & Darell Thorpe, author of "The Pre-existence: Our Pre-earth Life as Spirits In A Family in Heaven," guests on KTKK 630 AM radio, K-Talk, South Jordan Utah, USA, 8-15-1993, host, Martin Tanner. Then on 8-4-2011, Sandy Utah area, at a book conference, Darell Thorpe interviewed Sarah Hinz. Then, on KTKK, Drive Time Live, The Mills Crenshaw show, hosted by Mill Crenshaw, produced by Darell Thorpe, 12-16-2011 SARAH HINZE as guest, talking about her book: WAITING IN THE WINGS. Then, 1-23-2013 on KTKK, Sarah Hinz, Susan Freeman, author of "Through the Window of Life," & Darell Thorpe, guests on with Mills. These different areas of study offer interesting, but also controversial, but also up-lifting evidences for the Pre-existence, or life before life. Live call in radio talk shows. Ed., by Darell Thorpe, Producer KTKK, up loaded 1-23-15, for educational purposes.

Angels appear to Adam and Eve to instruct them about returning to their bright natures they had before they were born. Satan tried to give them a counterfeit deification, the pre-existing Christ tells Adam & Eve will one day return to glory, and be deified, but not yet, only after Christ's descent. - 561- There are many passages of scriptures that testify that we are all children of Divine Parents from a family in heaven. Genesis tells of God making the first couple in our image & likeness, with a female & male being thus created, & of the generations in the heavens before man was on the earth, (Gen. 2:4-5, Genesis A & B). Earlier bibles also start with pre-existence themes. Christ called God the Father, as also our Father too, (John 20:17). Paul mentions the family in heaven, (Ephesians 3:9-15), that we are children of God, (Romans 8:15-17). Thus, with traditional families consisting of fathers, mothers, sons & daughters, there also must be a Divine Parents.

635- “Borrowing, theft, adulteration. We have dwelled on the confrontation of comparative chronology since it seems to have weighed heavily on the Christian’s evaluation of the features they shared with classical paganism. From the moment they thought that, by virtue of their connection to the Jewish people, they preceded Greek history, they were able to consider resemblances to their adversaries only as cases of plagiarism committed against them by the latter. The direction of influence seemed beyond all doubt; as Justin unambiguously puts it, “It is not we who think like the others, but all of them who imitate us in what they say” (First Apology 60.10). Tertullian would recall the determining role played by chronology: “That which first existed is necessarily the origin of what followed. And this is why you have things in common with us or things that resemble ours”; so it is, he continues, that our Wisdom (sophia) gave you philosophy, and our prophecy your poetic divination.” (Apologeticus 19.1.5*-6*). This slide from posteriority to dependence, in Judaism as well as in Christianity, has been studied by K. Thraede. (“Erfinder,” part 2, in Reallexikon für Antike und Christentum (1962), cols. 1242-61). Tertullian, Apologeticus 47.11-14. Ad Autolycum 1.14; 2:37, translated by Robert M. P./d.w. Early anti-Christian, 2nd cent., Celsus “...criticizes the books of the Bible. Using an elementary comparative method, he traces Biblical tales to pagan legends, to Platonic theses, or beliefs derived from the Oriental cults of Mithra & Osiris.” (Stan-Michel Pellistrandi, Early Christian Civilization, The Catacombs, The Dura-Europos Excavations, The Excavations At Saint Peter’s In Rome, French title: La Civilisation chrétienne primitive, (Geneva: Ferni Publishers, 1978; Editions Ferni), 179-199). Celsus says that the story of the flood was borrowed, and circumcision came from the Egyptians who practiced the rite with magical results. He claimed that the system & doctrines in early Christianity, were derived from Judaism, thus both are also barbaric in their origin. He also used the polemical writings of the early Jews against the early Christians, & points out that the Jews claimed that the Christians were apostates from the Jewish religions, borrowing from them in order to make this new religion. He used parallels & different methods in attempting to discredit Christ. He compared the miracles wrought by Jesus, with similar miracles & magical tricks done by sorcery & wicked men. Thus charging Christ with sorcery. Origen of course responded these charges & rejected his claims. Celsus is quoted by Origen as claiming that other things were borrowed to make up the Christian religion. For example He said that the different stories in the Scriptures were borrowed from pre-scripture myths, legends etc. Early Christian mysteries, or temple ordinances, Celsus likens to those who in the Bacchic mysteries introduce phantoms & objects of terror. Celsus also used parallels between the Christians & the Persian mysteries of the Mithras, & charges that the Christians had borrowed from them, & others. Other early anti-Christian writers must have noticed the parallels between the early Christians and the Mithra cult. In the Mithra cult, baptism, anointing, handclaps & other similar things are comparable to the early Christians are well known now. Even some of the early Christian Fathers noted the parallels & responded that satan had set up, in pre-& post Christian times, counterfeits, in order to attempt to discredit the divine pattern that had been revealed to the founders of early Christianity, & which had been passed on to the later Christians. Thus we have different ones like Clement, Hippolytus, Origen, the Apostle Paul, Tertullian, Justin Martyr, & later Eusebius, Cyril of Jerusalem, & others defending the Christian rites, symbols, doctrines & mysteries, as being divine. While the others were the counterfeits of satan, & that's why they were similar to the early Christians, in some ways. This is the basic response that the different early writers would give. They also charged that the pagan cults, & off-shoot branches of apostate early Christians had blended the occult with the divine to make some perverted counterfeits. The pagans charged the early Christians with having borrowed from them. Thus the early anti-Christians took advantage of the rival polemical writings, rumors, & charges to make their cases against the early Christians as a whole, as have later anti-Christain writers, like T. W. Doane. So the questions & challenges remain: How might Christians here answer their own types of charges, (made against the Book of Mormon), early anti-Christian types, seemingly inspired by Satan. But, now borrowed by modern anti-Mormon "Christians" from early anti-Christians & Atheists, who charge "borrowing" or "plagiarizing" of pre-Christain sources & myths to explain the origins for the Bible, Christ's teachings & biblical stories, etc? 670- The war in heaven, though started in the pre-existence, continues on in mortal life between the unseen, sometimes seen evil spirits joined up with demon-fallen angels & with mortals, or the spirits that have been clothed in physical bodies. During death, the soul is often attacked by demonic forces attempting to pull the soul down, according to art works & writings. During Christ's, prophets, angels, & saints descents into hell, hades, limbo, purgatory, the Anastasis. They are often depicted in art, mystery plays, ritual settings, liturgical & mass dramas as fighting with the devil & demons in order to free souls out of the lower after physical life realms. Numerous art works also show the Devil & fallen angels as black, or dark colored monstrous looking beings. See: Darell Thorpe, The Armor of Gods (Protective Skins or Garments in History & Color Symbolism), (Kindle Edition, 2012). The term "darken the hearts," (Rom. 1:16-21), also suggests that such persons were on the left hand path heading towards "demonification".- (Becoming like unto satan & the fallen angels who retrogressed into becoming the demonic beings that they are now.) Rather than being on the right hand path towards "deification".- (Where the person becomes like unto the holy glorified angelic beings of light & love, & like unto Christ & God, even becoming a god, (if they are a male) or a goddess, (if they are a female.) But in the case with the unrepentant sinners, the disobedient, they are in the process of having their minds darkened in the retrogressing process of their own apostasy from God, just as satan & the fallen angels had become "darkened" or demonified, in their apostasy against & away from God. 734- Pre-existence themes in being sent down from heaven, coming down, 'sent one,' or ones, coming down, being sent from God, descent from heaven into a body, they 'went down,' 'he went down.' In some cases this was even mocked by early anti-Christians, like Celsus, (late 2nd c.), who made fun of the early Christian concept that God came down from heaven, after making the universe, to then come down to work with wood, live in a body that needed food, walked about, & looked like any other man. Jahrhunderts* (Leipzig: Hinrich, 1908), 25–27; 521, 541. Homiliae in Librum Regum (Homilies on the Book of Kings), 2, in J. P. Migne, Patrologiae Cursus Completus; Series Latina, 221 vols; (Paris: 1844-1864), PL 12:1013–28. As time went by, in historic Christendom, different Fathers are seen hedging in their commitments to what they were taught, or what was passed down to them from earlier Christians. Some beliefs like the pre-existence, & Christ's descent into hell, seem to be some of the those beliefs that different ones were being talked out of, or that were being discontinued in other areas. Or that were blended & tainted with cultural contaminations of other versions that started to dominate the earlier versions. Case in point is how Greek philosophy began to over power the earliest Christian teachings about the pre-existence, Christ's descent & Christological views, during Clement of Alexandria's & Origen's days. "Origen is the first to conclude that no one who lived before Christ can possibly enjoy full salvation, a doctrine in which the persuasion of pagan philosophy is stronger than scripture," (Nibley, Mormonism and Early Christianity, p. 165, note 211). These mixtures & tainting of earlier beliefs, effected the survival of many beliefs taught earlier, such as the pre-existence, Christ's descent, & Christological issues about the nature of God, what was God, Christ & the those who are deified become like. This is what happens during times of apostasy, earlier doctrines get questioned, their later blends with other cultures are called into question, & because they get so distorted over time, they eventually get dropped or abandoned, or lost in many areas that Christianity spread to. Or they get legendized in the later mythologies of different areas of Christendom. Richard R. All links are subject to possible changes, can still work, but also may be moved, and deleted. <https://archive.org/details/agraphaaussercan00rescuoft> - Alfred Resch, Aggrapha: Aussercanonische Schriftfragmente, (Leipzig: Hinrichs, 1906). Clement of Alexandria (Protrept., § 44, p. 69, Stähelin, 76, Potter) has this passage: "Wherefore the Scripture with reason makes this promise to them that have believed: 'but the Saints of the Lord shall inherit the glory of God and His power.'" "Tell me what glory, O blessed one?" "That which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither hath it come up upon the heart of man: and they shall rejoice at the kingdom... of their Lord for ever. Amen." This is apparently the conclusion of a book: with it we should compare (as Resch does) a passage in the Apostolic Constitutions (vii. 32, p. 212), which is an amplification of the end of the Didache, and runs thus: "Then shall the wicked depart into everlasting punishment: but the righteous shall go into life eternal, inheriting those things which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have they come up upon the heart of man, which God hath prepared for them that love Him, and shall rejoice in the Kingdom of God in Christ Jesus." A female angel, in a glorious white robe, protects two children crossing over a partially broken & dangerous looking bridge. This also a theme in early Christian art, that of angelic protection to cross through dangerous areas, be they over water, rivers, bridges, etc. <https://s-media-cache-ak0.pinimg.com/564x/7e/c9/48/7ec9484b298310947bae6bce5da69863.jpg> - Google Image- Early Christian art - Guardian angels. <https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Angel> - <https://misfitsandheroes.files.wordpress.com/2015/01/angel-guardian-of-children.jpg> - <https://misfitsandheroes.wordpress.com/tag/guardian-angel/> - Malcolm Godwin, Angels, An Endangered Species, (New York, London, Toronto, Sydney, Tokyo, Singapore: Simon & Schuster, 1990). 778- The Nicene And Post Nicene Fathers, vol. 7, S. Cyril of Jerusalem, Intro. Catechetical Instruction, xi--xxxv; Select Writings And Letters, of Athanasius, Bishop of Alexandria, by Archibald Robertson, pp. 49-50, Incarnation of the Word, 25, the cross and how Christ's hands were spread out on the cross, this was a type of how Christ spread his hands out to draw in the ancient people and those from the Gentiles. See also: The Ante-Nicene Fathers, vol. 2, p. 215. Clement of Alexandria, A.D. 153—193—217, in his The Instructor, book I, chapter v, hints to the hand clasp when he wrote how that Christ “has stretched forth to us those hands of His that are conspicuously worthy of trust.” And how that on p.231, in Book I, chapter 9, in the ritualistic afterlife passing over into paradise, the dangers of passing, though real, are not done without the help of Christ who is there with his angels to offer protection against the fallen angels who seek to cause the soul to slip and fall. Hence, after being anointed, and clothed in the robe of immortality: “They shall call Me,” He says, “and I will say, Here am I.” [Isa. lviii.9]. Thou didst hear sooner than I expected, Master. “And if they pass over, they shall not slip.” [Isa. xliii.2], saith the Lord. For we who are passing over to immortality shall not fall into corruption, for He shall sustain us.” (The Ante-Nicene Fathers, 2, p. 231). In the art works, the way in which the faithful and righteous, who had endured to the end are supported and sustained, and drawn into heaven and paradise, is through different hand and wrist grasps. The art works also show the demons in the air attempting to get those who are “passing over” to fall. See for example: Caroline Walker Bynum, Jesus as Mother, Studies in the Spirituality of the High Middle Ages, (Berkeley; Los Angeles; London: University of California Press, 1982 & 1984), see art work before title page, and the credit to it on the next page after the title page.
